Prime Minister Suzuki said: Recently, the issue of our country's history textbooks has drawn your stern criticism. Japan has always adhered to the Sino-Japanese joint statement and devoted itself to the development of the relations of friendship and cooperation between the two countries. This is our consistent policy. It is very necessary to properly display the spirit and principles of the joint statement in all aspects of Sino-Japanese relations. I readily regard it as our bounded duty to make serious efforts to tackle the textbook issue.

I firmly believe that the settlement of the issue will surely firm and consolidate the foundation of the friendly relations between the two countries.

Discussing China's modernization program, Prime Minister Suzuki said: The program is a great cause uniting the strength of 1 billion people under a common goal and a great experiment never seen in the history of mankind. The difficulties you are facing are beyond imagination. However, during this visit I have seen the vigor and hard work with which the Chinese people are accomplishing their great cause of national construction. I have no doubt that this great cause will certainly succeed.

Prime Minister Suzuki pointed out: Since the normalization of diplomatic relations between China and Japan, sound progress has been made in the economic relations between the two countries. To my knowledge, two electrified railroads, 580 kilometers in total length, will be completed several years from now as a result of Sino-Japanese cooperation. One leads from Yanzhou to Shijiusuo and the other from Beijing to Qinhuangdao. In addition to the railroads, the harbor construction projects in Shijiusuo and Qinhuangdao will successively also be completed. The completion of those construction projects will improve and perfect basic industrial facilities and promote the development of China's national economy. At the same time, it will also help expand the economic relations between China and Japan. The "Sino-Japanese Friendship Hospital" is a specific example of our economic and technical cooperation. Yesterday I visited the construction site and saw Chinese and Japanese technicians cordially helping each other and working shoulder to shoulder. It was a scene of Sino-Japanese friendship and cooperation. The hospital will be a model hospital combining our modern Western medicine with your long standing traditional Chinese medicine. It will play an important role in improving public health of your country. At the same time, it will also help promote Japan's medical development.

He said: The Sino-Japanese cooperation, in keeping with China's modernization program, is yielding firm results. I guarantee that in the future Japan will continue to actively cooperate with China for the sake of China's modernization program. I am pleased to see the growing economic exchanges betwen Japan and China. I highly appreciate the policy of opening to the outside world adopted by your country. At the same time, I also expect that all policies and measures your country has adopted in foreign economic relations will ensure prolonged continuity and stability.

Prime Minister Suzuki affirmed the principles of "peace and friendship, equality and mutual benefit, and prolonged statbility" between the two countries put forward by Premier Zhao Ziyang during his visit to Japan.

He said: I greatly appreciate these principles, and at the same time I would like to have them applied in all fields of friendly exchanges between the two countries.

Prime Minister Suzuki mentioned the Japanese mountaineer who recently returned to Japan after being rescued by Sichuan peasants and was hospitalized.

He said: The profound sentiments and friendship displayed by thousands of Chinese friends saved Hiroya Matsuda's life. As a fellow countryman of Matsuda, I would like to take this opportunity to once again express my heartfelt thanks to all the Chinese friends who spared no effort to rescue the Japanese youth and provided medical care to him. I firmly believe that only these spontaneous friendly feelings can establish unshakable friendship between the Chinese and Japanese people. I wish to convey the Japanese people's heartfelt thanks to the Chinese foster parents who raised the Japanese children left behind in China after the miserable war. Disregarding difficulties, you raised them as your own children. Your kindness is true testimony to the friendly relations between the two countries.

He said: Friendly exchanges between the people of Japan and China are developing like river water that flows with irresistible force and they have broad prospects. However, they must stand the test of time in order to consolidate the foundation of the unshakable relationship of trust between the two countries. In the meantime, if we get intoxicated by the friendly atmosphere, shout only empty slogans and fail to make down-to-earth efforts, we probably will be unable to make the Sino-Japanese friendly relations, despite their broad prospects, yield the anticipated results. Even person-to-person relations of unshakable friendship and trust must undergo many trials. Much greater efforts must be made to develop such relations between countries. Only through the unremitting efforts of many generations and through rich and varied exchanges can unshakable friendly relations be established between Japan and China.

He said: Small streams form the fountainhead of the Huanghe River which rapidly flows into the sea through a vast area of fertile land. Sea water evaporates to form clouds which in turn create rains over the fountainhead of the river. This ceaseless cycle enables living things to grow on the vast north China plain. I am firmly convinced that the friendship between the peoples of the two countries will keep its unlimited vitality forever like a river and that the relations between the two countries will be unshakable.

In conclusion, Prime Minister Suzuki said: Both Japan and China are ancient countries and the desire of the peoples of the two countries to seek "rich and varied exchanges and unshakable friendship" will be everlasting. It is said that the king of Tang in ancient China engraved on a stone bathing tub the motto "if one day you can renovate yourself, do so from day to day. Let it be daily renovation." We should make unremitting efforts to make the friendly relations between the peoples of Japan and China become better and better each day, just as the motto says. To celebrate the 10th anniversary of the normalization of diplomatic relations between Japan and China today, let us make the determination to further strengthen the relationship between the two countries.

Present at the gathering to listen to Suzuki's speech were Hu Ziang, Yang Xiufeng, Zhou Peiyuan and Qian Changzhao, vice chairmen of the CPPCC national committee; Peng Youjin and Luo Hanxian, deputy secretary generals of the CPPCC national committee; Wu Xueqian, vice foreign minister; Song Zhiguang, Chinese ambassador to Japan; responsible persons of various government departments concerned, of the China-Japan Friendship Association, and of Beijing Municipality; and some 1,000 persons from various circles.

Also present were Mrs Suzuki; dietmen accompanying Prime Minister Suzuki on the visit, Eiji Monaka, Takeshi Hamano, Sunhei Tsukahara and Tomoo Ye; and Japanese Ambassador to China Yasue Katori and his wife.

SIHANOUK DEMANDS SRV WITHDRAWAL FROM KAMPUCHEA

[Text] United Nations, September 30 (XINHUA) -- Prince Norodom Sihanouk, president of Democratic Kampuchea, today demanded the complete withdrawal of Vietnamese occupation forces from his homeland.

Delivering his first statement to the U.N. General Assembly since the formation of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, President Sihanouk noted that Vietnam's announcement of "partial retreat" of its forces from Kampuchea was not in any way sufficient. He said that "as a matter of fact, many fresh troops have been recently sent from Vietnam into Kampuchea to reinforce the Vietnamese occupation forces."

The prince said that as long as Vietnam refuses to pull out its troops, his government "will oppose with all its forces the politics of fait accompli".

He pointed out that Vietnam had been frequently using chemical weapons, especially toxic gas, against the resistance fighters and the villagers who had escaped its control.

In his statement, Sihanouk rejected Vietnam's proposal for an "international conference to consider the security, the peace and neutrality in Southeast Asia", saying his government can't accept the arrangement of another conference by Vietnam "profiting from the support of the Soviet Union and the allies of this great power".

He pointed out that the "international conference" proposed by Vietnam would logically mean side-tracking and avoiding the central issue of Kampuchea, "because delegates to such a conference would find themselves, right from the start, required to recognize, de facto, the puppet regime of Heng Samrin functioning under the orders of Hanoi and Moscow."

He continued that no international conference was imaginable if the first item on the agenda did not deal with the situation in Kampuchea and did not seek to put an end to the Vietnamese occupation of his country. "If this problem is not dealt with and resolved, there is really nothing to discuss, there is but to bend the knee before the 'diktat' of Hanoi and Moscow," he stressed.

Declaring that to take up arms is the only option to protect Kampuchea's national sovereignty, Sihanouk said: "Weak or not we have the sacred duty to struggle with all our forces against the occupying power."

He went on to say: "We ask nothing from others. We ask but restoration of our national sovereignty, our territorial integrity, and once that is achieved, we solemnly commit ourselves to live in perfect, peaceful co-existence with all our neighbors -- and amongst the first with Vietnam -- as with all other countries who respect us, no matter what their political and social systems may be."

On the establishment of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, President Sihanouk said that "contrary to certain false allegations, our government is not a government in exile. All its members live and fight in the interior of our national territory, side by side with our heroic fighters."

He stated that despite the efforts of a powerful Vietnamese army in control of Kampuchean territory, "we have liberated and solidly held large zones not only near the Thai frontier, but also in several regions of the southwest and the northeast of our country."

The prince proclaimed before the assembly that "in conformity with the resolutions of the United Nations, that as soon as Vietnam has totally withdrawn its troops from Kampuchea, all will be possible in friendship between our two countries."

He announced that his government is ready to sign with Vietnam a treaty of peace and non-aggression implying the recognition and respect for territorial integrity of the two neighboring nations within their present frontiers.

Concluding, he said: "This is a just proposal I make today to the leaders and to the people of Vietnam in the name of our coalition government."

Khieu Samphan, vice-president in charge of foreign affairs, and Prime Minister Son Sann attended today's assembly. During Sihanouk's speech, about 600 Kampucheans demonstrated outside the U.N. headquarters in protest against the Vietnamese occupation of their country.

The Beijing Municipal CPC Committee held an 8-day enlarged meeting to organize members of the municipal party committee and principal responsible cadres of the municipal government's departments, commissions, offices and bureaus to study documents of the 12th party congress. At the meeting, Duan Junyi called on leading cadres at various levels to take the lead in studying the documents well, be sure to thoroughly understand the documents, carry out the goals set by the 12th party congress in the light of the situation in each department and unit and make contributions to creating a new situation in socialist modernization.

At a meeting of all party members who are also leading cadres in Tianjin held by the Tianjin Municipal CPC Committee, Chen Weida said that while it is necessary to give some guidance and compile and print some propaganda materials for the study of 12th party congress documents, the major efforts must be concentrated on intensive study of the original texts of the documents, and not on other materials without the documents themselves.

The Ningxia Hui Autonomous Regional CPC Committee has run a class to study the 12th party congress documents attended by secretaries and propaganda department directors of all municipal, prefectural and county party committees in the region and principal responsible persons of various departments of units directly under the regional party committee.

QIN JIWEI ON SOCIALIST SPIRITUAL CIVILIZATION

[Text] Beijing, 4 Oct (XINHUA) -- While studying the 12th national party congress' documents, Qin Jiwei, commander of the Beijing PLA units, said it is necessary to have a comprehensive understanding of the principles for building a socialist spiritual civilization. He urged leaders at all levels under his command to conscientiously promote both ideological education and cultural development, with communist ideology at their core, and spare no effort in training still more revolutionary soldiers, who are educated and observe discipline and who have ideals and morality.

Qin Jiwei attended a study class held recently by the leading organ of the Beijing PLA units for cadres at regimental level and above and joined the participants in studying and discussing the 12th national party congress' documents. He summed up the study class at its final session.

On building spiritual civilization, Qin Jiwei pointed out: The report to the latest national party congress clearly laid down that communist ideology is the core of socialist spiritual civilization. It points out the way to grasp this core and persistently use communist ideology to educate, transform and bring up people.

He said: To educate people in communist ideology, it is first necessary to attach importance to theoretical education and organize cadres and fighters to study Marxist and Leninist books, Chairman Mao's writings and the history of social development, so that they will have firm belief in communism from the law of necessity of development of human society. Meanwhile, we should educate cadres and fighters to firmly implement the party's line, principles and policies, foster the communist spirit step by step in the course of practice, serve the people heart and soul, contribute to the motherland by doing their job well and fulfill various tasks as a step towards achieving the great goal of communism.

Qin Jiwei stressed: Socialist spiritual civilization, as put forward in the report to the 12th national party congress, consists of two aspects, the cultural and the ideological, permeating and promoting each other. The quality of spiritual civilization is determined by ideological education, while the cultural aspect plays an important role in ideological cultivation and cultural development. The viewpoint that negates the tremendous significance and role of cultural development in building a socialist spiritual civilization is incorrect.

He said: Having lofty ideals, moral integrity, education and a sense of discipline is the all-round requirement for building a socialist spiritual civilization. None of our revolutionary ideals, moral code and discipline is unrelated to our society and our culture. Scientific and cultural knowledge is not only necessary for improving our army's techniques with which to master modern weapons and equipment and increasing our ability to direct modern warfare, but an important factor in heightening our awareness and moral levels. Culture is a key to the treasure of knowledge and an important condition in improving the military and political qualities of our army and its fighting strength. Chairman Mao once said: "An army without culture is a stupid army which cannot defeat its enemy."

Qin Jiwei continued: The cultural aspect, as pointed out at the 12th national party congress, refers to education, science, art and literature, public health, physical culture and other undertakings. Therefore, we cannot simply define cultural development in a small scope. To launch healthy, rich, mass cultural, recreational and sporting activities, for example, is an important task in promoting army building. It not only brings about dyna[illegible]c elements in military units' day-to-day life, but helps cadres and fighters resist bour[illegible] ideological corrosion, boost their revolutionary spirit, mold their temperaments, an[illegible] their state of mind. Therefore, an old saying in our military unit goes like [illegible]s: [illegible] good song or a good stage show is a political lesson.

Qin Jiwei urged party committees at all levels in the Beijing PLA units to strengthen their leadership over the endeavor to build a spiritual civilization, widely propagate the purpose and great significance of building a socialist spiritual civilization, enhance the understanding of cadres and fighters of this importance, and fully mobilize their enthusiasm and consciousness in this field of endeavor. Leading cadres at all levels should play an exemplary vanguard role and leading organs are required to set an example. Continuous efforts should be made to establish models, commend the advanced, further promote spiritual civilization in a deepgoing and sustained way among the military units, and score fresh achievements in creating a new situation in building a modern, regular, revolutionary and powerful army.

PLA POLITICAL DEPARTMENT HOLDS MEETING ON SPORTS

[Text] Jinan, 3 Oct (XINHUA) -- The PLA General Political Department recently called a meeting of all-army advanced units in mass sports to exchange experience and to sum up and discuss army sports work with the spirit of the 12th CPC National Congress as the guiding thought. The meeting suggested that army sports work should center around the goals of strengthening the physique of the commanders and fighters, of enhancing the building of socialist spiritual civilization, and of improving the fighting strength of the army units by laying stress on developing mass sports activities well in order to further broaden them and make them more effective.

This meeting was held from 20 to 28 September at a certain artillery regiment of the Jinan PLO units, an "advanced unit in mass sports." Representatives of 75 mass sports advanced units and cadres of cultural and sports departments of various major units throughout the army were present at the meeting. With the spirit of the 12th CPC National Congress as the guiding thought, the meeting broadly exchanged experience and seriously summed up and discussed army sports work. The representatives cited a host of facts to substantiate the fact that mass sports in the whole army have continued to make progress in recent years, thereby playing an important role in modernizing, regularizing and revolutionizing the army.

At the meeting, commendations and awards were presented by the General Political Department for the 75 mass sports advanced units. The experience of these advanced units has vividly shown that sports generate fighting strength. Developing sports activities actively and well will not only enrich the army's cultural life, improve the physique of the commanders and fighters and steel and cultivate a hard fighting style, but is also an important means to carry out communist ideological education among the army units and to change their mental outlook, as well as a component in developing socialist spiritual civilization.

The meeting called on all army units to conscientiously implement the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress and to closely coordinate mass sports activities with educational training in army units so as to develop them in a more extensive, penetrating and sustained manner and to make still greater contributions toward fulfilling the fighting tasks put forth by the 12th CPC National Congress and toward further modernizing, regularizing and revolutionizing the army.

Therefore, departments of foreign economic relations and trade should perform their domestic duties in a down-to-earth manner. She made these remarks at a recent meeting of the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade.

Chen Muhua said: Successful work in exports, the basis of foreign economic relations and trade, is the key to development in these areas. To expand exports, we should exploit our advantage, readjust the composition of commodities, improve their quality and provide more designs and variety to make export commodities readily marketable. It is necessary to cater to the needs of the international market, exploit China's advantage in natural resources and export natural resource products such as coal, petroleum, metals and nonferrous metals which are in great demand on the international market. We should exploit China's advantage in natural geography and traditional arts and crafts and export special native produce and industrial arts and crafts. We should exploit China's advantage of having a sufficient labor force and export textiles and light industrial products, as well as products made by processing materials provided by foreign businessmen. We should tap the potentialities of China's machine-building industry and export mechanical and electrical products of all kinds. We should not only expand the exports of traditional commodities, but also be ready to readjust the composition of commodities and develop new export commodities in accordance with changes in the international market. Particular efforts should be made to produce key brand-name commodities characteristic of China.

Chen Muhua said: It is necessary to analyze and study the international market. Not all commodities have declined in the global economic crisis over the past few years. For instance, among primary products, foodstuffs are increasing more rapidly than raw materials in terms of export volume. The exports of consumer goods such as food, clothing and appliances for use in the people's daily lives will never decline. She emphasized: The increase in export volume is not entirely dependent on export quantity. It is also determined by the quality, design, variety and grading of commodities. We shall achieve more economical and rational results by exporting more commodities of higher grade and better quality.

She said: To ensure a steady supply of goods to foreign countries, it is necessary to produce major, typically Chinese commodities which can be flexibly altered to meet new demands and which serve as a pillar for exports. It is necessary to establish production centers catering to export needs. Regarding goods for sale at home and abroad, Comrade Chen Yun put forward three principles in the 1950's, the basic guidelines of which are: important commodities related to national economy and the people's livelihood should be exported in limited quantities according to plan; we should first vigorously develop the production of commodities with limited resources but needed for both domestic sales and exports and then earmark a portion of these goods for export; we should give priority to exporting those commodities not badly needed for domestic consumption. Chen Muhua said: In the future, these principles will still be valid for handling commodities which create a fairly big conflict, because they are needed both for internal sale and for export.

In addition to readily marketable export commodities which are in steady supply, we should also have channels and means to swiftly introduce these goods into the international market. Chen Muhua maintained that it is necessary to strengthen investigation and study, establish and perfect the information network, expand the sales network and improve the means of transportation. Transportation is an important link in external trade. Without a modern means of transportation, it would be impossible to promptly introduce commodities into the international market. Letting an opportunity slip means losing a market, hence economic interests. Similarly, the four modernizations program will be affected if imported goods and materials are not shipped to China in due time. Therefore, we should clearly bear in mind that transportation should serve foreign economic relations and trade instead of hampering its development.

Touching on the question of strengthening the management of foreign economic relations and trade, Chen Muhua quoted a passage from Comrade Hu Yaobang's report to the 12th CPC National Congress: "In our economic relations with foreign countries, on the premise of unified planning and policy and coordinated action, we must stimulate the initiative of various localities, departments and enterprises in their foreign business dealings.

Chen Muhua said: Unified planning and policy means we must act according to the state's unified plan and implement its related principles and policies when we carry out economic activities with foreign countries. Coordinated action means, on the premise of unified planning and policy, stimulating the initiative of various localities, departments and enterprises, coordinating their efforts and organizing them to deal with foreign countries. To achieve this end, it is necessary to strengthen coordination and management of foreign economic relations and trade, resolutely implement the systems and measures which have proved effective in the past, consolidate the existing organs handling foreign economic relations and trade and introduce the system of licensed export for some important commodities.

PENG ZHEN 22 JUL SPEECH AT LAW SOCIETY MEETING

[Speech by Peng Zhen at the 22 July 1982 inaugural meeting of the China Society of the Science of Law: "Foster Socialist Democracy, Improve the Socialist Legal System"]

[Text] Beijing, 29 Sep (XINHUA) -- I came here to express my greetings on the inauguration of the China Society of the Science of Law. Our revered Comrade Yang (Comrade Yang Shoufeng) has asked me to make a speech; what shall I say?

1. I hope the society will do what our revered Comrade Yang has asked and uphold the four fundamental principles in order to contribute to the fostering of a socialist democracy and the improvement of the socialist legal system.

We have no problem saying "uphold the four fundamental principles," but, actually, our understandings of it are not entirely the same. Are the four fundamental principles merely the theory of one school of thought among a hundred which try to contend with each other? No. The four fundamental principles were put forward by the CPC Central Committee. They are not an idea that envolved from nothing, but the summation of China's historical experience in the 20th century, the principles derived from China's history and a truth verified in social practice.

Without going back too far, we can list at least four major earthshaking events in China since the beginning of the 20th century. The first is the 1911 revolution led by Dr Sun Yat-sen which overthrew the feudal imperial system and founded the Republic of China. However, the fruit of this revolution was seized by the reactionary forces.

The second is the overthrow of imperialism, feudalism and bureaucrat-capitalism, which weighed like mountains on the backs of the Chinese people, and the founding of the People's Republic of China. Under whose leadership was this task accomplished? The bourgeoisie? The enlightened gentry? Or some other "heroes"? No, none of them. The task was accomplished by the people of our country led by the working class under the leadership of the CPC headed by Comrade Mao Zedong.

The third is the abolition of the exploitation system. In the initial period of the PRC, capital owned by the bureaucrats was confiscated. Thus, 80 percent of the capitalism in China was resolved. The feudal exploitation system was eliminated through land reform. The centuries-old system of the expoitation of man by man was abolished later through the three great socialist transformations of the ownership of the means of production.

The fourth is the establishment of an independent, fairly comprehensive socialist industrial base and national economic system. Before liberation, China was an agricultural country that acted as a raw material supplier and commodity market for colonialist and imperialist countries. At that time, China could not even produce a single motor vehicle. Its petroleum output was only 200,000 dun and its coal output was not much more than 40 million dun. It could not produce large precision machine tools. That was the state of China's industrial base. Today, after more than 30 years and despite the number of twists and turns we have gone through, we are not only able to produce motor vehicles and aircraft, but also guided missiles and atomic bombs. We are capable of producing 100 million dun of petroleum and 600 million dun of coal a year. We have a fairly comprehensive assortment of some 2.8 million machine tools which is not small compared with other countries. What does this tell us? It tells us that after more than 30 years of hard work we now have a solid, self-sufficient industrial base.

The above-mentioned four events were not created by some school but are ironclad facts. Facts speak louder and more convincingly. Historical facts have shown that we must uphold the four fundamental principles. Where does China go if we do not uphold them? If we uphold these four fundamental principles, our road will become brighter, firmer and wider, and we will be able to conquer whatever difficulties are before us and accomplish the four socialist modernizations.

Our revered Comrade Yang said: It is necessary to help foster socialist democracy and improve the socialist legal system. What we need to foster is socialist democracy, certainly not capitalist democracy. What we need to improve is the socialist legal system, certainly not the capitalist legal system, much less the stuff advocated by the Legalists [a school of thought in China during 770-221 B.C.] The Legalists and Confucians were all feudalistic. What we want is a socialist Chinese legal system.

What does socialism represent? It represents the abolition of the exploitation system, the establishment of socialist public ownership, distribution according to work, the practice of a planned economy and the building of a socialist spiritual civilization. The abolition of the exploitation system is the basic indicator of socialism. Surely, there are still economic crimes in China such as smuggling, embezzlement and bribery. These as well as other kinds of economic crimes are essentially various forms of exploitation in disguise. However, exploitation as a system has been abolished in China. Smuggling, embezzlement and bribery are criminal activities in our country. They are not part of the economic system.

The primary task of the China Society of the Science of Law is to uphold the four fundamental principles and contribute to fostering socialist democracy and improving the socialist legal system.

2. Theory must be integrated with practice? What is the purpose of studying social science and the science of law if theory is not integrated with practice? A person can study anything according to his own interests as long as there is no harm done to the people. However, the China Society of the Science of Law must integrate its study with practice. What does this mean? It means proceeding from China's reality to summarize China's experiences and lessons in order to find the law of development for the Chinese society and apply it in practice.

Is our present study integrated with practice? Not necessarily. Some people are proceeding from the viewpoint of Greece or Rome, from the viewpoint of the European Renaissance and the Age of Enlightenment, from a book itself or from a concept. Every country has its particular government ideology and every individual has his particular thinking. However, there is only one objective reality: social practice is the sole criterion for verifying truth. It is easier to tell whether a person's thinking is correct if we proceed from reality and use practice to examine it. In this way, we can have an objective criterion. If every jurist proceeds from reality and uses social practice to examine things, the jurist circle will easily achieve consensus.

3. It is necessary to draw on beneficial experiences and lessons -- ancient or modern, Chinese or foreign. This is very important. China is a large country. While it is not right for the king of Yelang to become arrogant, neither is it right for China, a large country, to become conceited. In the initial period of the PRC, all imperialist countries imposed a blockade against China. What did we do? We closed our door and swept our house clean of the remnants of our three major enemies. But even in that period, we still studied the experiences of other countries. We studied the constitutions of various countries before we drew up our own in 1954. Things have changed. We now have diplomatic relations with more than 120 countries and areas, and mutual exchanges have been established. It is necessary to draw on beneficial experiences -- ancient or modern, Chinese or foreign -- in studying the science of law. We must not think that there is nothing for the science of law in China's centuries old feudal society. We have a rich legal legacy from China's ancient times. There are plenty of legal codes left to us from the Spring and Autumn and Warring States periods to the Ming and Qing Dynasties. They are feudal experiences and must therefore be sorted out in order to discard the dross and select the essence. Is it for the purpose of copying from them? No. We study them in order to make the past serve the present and foreign things serve China. We study them in order to make them serve the needs of China's socialist democracy and legal system.

We should absorb whatever is beneficial to China's socialism and discard and repudiate whatever is dross and poisonous. This is different from pragmatism, as we have the four fundamental principles and use the objective law of the development of history as our criterion. The society should study the laws of the ancient as well as modern times of foreign countries, as well as China. We shall study them regardless of whether they are advanced, middle-of-the-road, reactionary, the laws of slaveowners, feudal society or capitalists. We must study them all in order to select the essence and discard the dross and poison.

4. What is the science of law? It is a part of the superstructure. It is determined by the economic base and in turn serves the economic base. As society and the economic base develop, so does the law. When capitalist society becomes a socialist society, the law will also change and develop. However, the science of law also has its own independent system and its own logic. To make laws, we should proceed from reality. However, we must also have our own system of jurisprudence and we cannot be self-contradictory in any way. We cannot rashly make whatever law we want to make on the spur of the moment.

The two seem to be separate things. What happens if they are not in agreement? Perhaps, there is no complete agreement in the thinking of the law circles on this question. Is law subordinate to actual conditions or is it the opposite? Who is the mother and who is the child? Reality is the mother. Reality gives birth to laws. Laws and legal principles are the sons. Law has its own independent system and its own logic, but it must proceed from social reality and be tested by social practice. If a law is no longer suited to reality and the needs of socialist development, it is necessary to have it studied and revised. The draft revised constitution is based on reality. It summarizes the experience, both positive and negative, of our country over the past more than 30 years and also assimilates foreign experiences. Yet, it also has its own system and logic. The two cannot contradict each other. I ask you comrades to think on whether this is the way to understand the question.

Today, at the inauguration meeting of the China Society of the Science of Law, I have cast a brick in the hope that it will bring out your jade.

HOUSING CONSTRUCTION ON ARABLE LAND VIEWED

["'Resolutely Check the Malpractice of Arbitrarily Building Houses on Arable Land' by XINHUA Commentator" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, 27 Sep (XINHUA) -- With the rapid development of agricultural production and the notable increase in peasants' income since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, there has been an upsurge in building houses in the rural areas of our country. The total floor space of housing built in 1979 reached 300 million square meters, 500 million square meters in 1980 and 600 million square meters in 1981. It is estimated that a new upsurge in building houses will still emerge after the autumn harvest this year.

The popular practice of peasants building new houses indicates that the livelihood of peasants has been improved and this is good for the peasants. However, this has also caused a serious problem where arable land is occupied and fertile farmland is used arbitrarily. This is a problem that should not be regarded as unimportant. It is necessary for the broad masses of rural cadres and commune members to realize that agriculture is the basis of the national economy and that arable land is the basis for agricultural production. With the area of arable land decreasing day by day, agricultural development is out of the question. Ours is a country with a large population but a small area of arable land. While the area of arable land is not sufficient, the population continues to increase, and this contradiction has become very conspicuous. It is our country's basic policy that every inch of land should be cherished and conserved, and the land problem has a bearing on the fundamental interests of the coming generations. We must take every possible measure to protect arable land. Towns and villages must have housing construction plans, and arable land must be occupied as little as possible. In those localities where the problem of occupying arable land for housing construction has become serious, leaders of provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions concerned should personally take charge of organizing the forces of various circles to conscientiously and resolutely investigate the problem of arbitrarily occupying arable land for housing construction and promptly check this malpractice. All activities of building houses on arable land that violate the relevant rules and regulations of the state should be checked and handled in time so as to show that orders must be carried out and that regulations are made for a purpose. Every serious violation, by a unit or cadre in particular, should be dealt with strictly and should never be tolerated. All localities must also publicize the rules and regulations of the state on housing construction on arable land in an extensive and deeper way so that these rules and regulations will be made known to every household.

We expect another bumper harvest in agriculture this year, and after the autumn harvest, new housing will be constructed in the rural areas. The departments concerned in the various localities should deal with this problem in view of their own local conditions, conduct conscientious study, take effective measures, positively do a good job in mapping out plans for housing construction in towns and villages, work out measures governing land for housing for both individuals and units and lead the work in housing construction in both cities and towns onto the right track of building houses in a planned, orderly and gradual way.

BETTER PURCHASING MEASURES IN COUNTRYSIDE URGED

[Excerpts] Changsha, 30 Sep (XINHUA) -- Editor's note: As a result of still better implementation of the party's rural economic policies after the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, a gratifying situation of increased production and income is prevailing in China's vast countryside, such as the good situation in Yueyang Prefecture, Hunan Province. There are but a very few exceptions.

Facing this situation, we should be better prepared mentally and should have a full appraisal of the situation while proper arrangements should be made for purchasing agricultural and sideline products and shipping industrial products to the countryside. The problem of broadening the circulation channels noted in this report is an important matter and requires that all party organizations and commercial departments at all levels make great efforts to solve it. [end editors note]

A rarely seen situation of prosperity prevails in Hunan's Yueyang Prefecture this year.

The prefecture's spring grain output this year is 44 percent, or 26.07 million jin, over that of last year, while its early rice output topped that of last year by 7 percent, or 150 million jin. For the first time, its total output has broken the 2-billion jin mark.

The responsible person of this prefecture points out that while the situation is getting ever better, some new problems in the countryside need immediate tackling. One of these problems, for instance, is that the circulation channel is not flowing freely. Now, some 21,000 dan of ramie, 35,000 dan of jute, 18,000 dan of tea, 4,300 dan of cocoons and 9,643 dan of cotton velvet are still stored in his prefecture. In some places, state purchasing has been discontinued or limited. In addition, cadres' ways of thinking and work style should be improved and political and ideological work among the masses should also be strengthened.

GUANGMING RIBAO ON PROBLEM OF POOR HOUSEHOLDS

[Article by He Rongfei [0149 2837 7378]: "Agricultural Production Responsibility System and the Problems of Impoverished Households"]

[Text] Since the implementation of the agricultural production responsibility system, there has been a notable increase in the standard of living of the majority of peasants. Some peasants have become rich first. But there are still a few peasants who are quite poor. They have difficulties in their production and lives for various reasons. Faced with this situation, some people think that the responsibility system has enlarged the gap between the wealthy and the poor. They even confuse this situation with "polarization." I think such views are incorrect.

It is true that after the implementation of the agricultural production responsibility system, there are still some impoverished households. But, is the existence of these impoverished households the product of the responsibility system?

Recently, we have investigated the impoverished households of Laian County in Anhui Province. Judging from these households, the peasants' poverty can be attributed to the following factors: first, there are too many people in a household but not enough labor force; second, the foundation to start with is poor and both capital and means of production are lacking; third, their poverty was caused by natural and manmade calamities. In addition, there are some who know nothing about the techniques of agricultural production and some who are gluttonous and lazy. Generally speaking, these peasant households were well-known for their poverty before the responsibility system was put into practice. According to the statistics for 69 impoverished households of the Xinhe, Shuangtang, Zhangshan, Shunshan, Xiwu and Fuxing Communes of Leian County, 49.2 percent of the impoverished households are poor for lack of capital and means of production, 32 percent are poor due to lack of labor force, 17.3 percent are poor as the result of natural and manmade calamities, while gluttony and laziness account for the poverty of 1.5 percent of the impoverished households. The above factors objectively existed before the responsibility system was put into practice. Therefore, the practice of the responsibility system has nothing to do with the existence of impoverished households.

The few impoverished households that exist at the present moment are poor compared with the peasant households which have become well-to-do since the responsibility system was put into practice. Compared with the situation before the implementation of the responsibility system, generally speaking, they are better off (of course, there are individual households whose living conditions are worse than those before the responsibility system was put into practice). According to our investigation, before the implementation of the responsibility system, the average annual per capita grain ration of the impoverished households in Laian County was only about 300 jin and most of them were in debt. Now, although the average annual per capita grain ration is below 600 jin and the average annual personal income is below 60 yuan, the living standard of most of the households is better than before the responsibility system was put into practice.

It should be pointed out that, in a socialist historical period when the principle of distribution according to work is practiced, there will inevitably be differences in the degree of prosperity. Particularly at a time when the level of our agricultural productive force is still quite low, the responsibility system cannot eliminate the gap between the poor and the wealthy. When conditions are not yet ripe, any artificial attempt to eliminate the gap between the poor and the wealthy can only result in egalitarianism and bring about the destruction of the productive force of society. But, the aim of socialist production is to enable the laborers to live wealthy lives. To eliminate poverty is an essential demand of the socialist system. Therefore, we should prevent the gap between the wealthy and the poor from becoming too great. Practice has proven that the responsibility system helps narrow the gap between the wealthy and the poor. This is revealed in the following two aspects:

First, the practice of the responsibility system has greatly liberated the productive forces. On the basis of developments in production, it is beginning to make most peasants wealthy. As a result, the proportionate relations between the wealthy and the poor have been changed. When the responsibility system was put into practice in Chuxian Prefecture in Anhui Province, the average personal income increased from 82 yuan in 1979 to 207 yuan in 1981; the proportion of the number of production brigades with an average personal income of over 200 yuan to the total number of brigades increased from 0.9 percent to 43.1 percent. In the prefecture, there were outstanding households which produced "10,000 jin of grain" and had an "average personal income of over 1,000 yuan." In addition, the proportion of indebted households to the total number of peasant households decreased from 34.1 percent in 1979 to 2.4 percent in 1981. At present, the proportion of impoverished households to the total number of peasant households is only 5 percent. In Laian County, where the problem is more prominent, the proportion is only 6 percent. That means, 95 percent of the peasant households in the whole of Chuxian Prefecture and 94 percent of the peasant households in Laian County have a living standard which is much better than before the responsibility system was put into practice. In this way, the proportionate relation between the poor and the well-to-do peasants has changed from the poor peasants being the overwhelming majority before the responsibility system was put into practice to the well-to-do peasants being the overwhelming majority. This clearly indicates that the gap between the poor and the wealthy is being narrowed.

Second, judging from the difference between the peasant households which have the highest and lowest incomes, we can see that there is a tendency for the difference to become smaller when the responsibility system is put into practice compared to before the system is put into practice. In Xiaogang production brigade of Fengyang County, in 1977, before the responsibility system was put into practice, the ratio of the net per capita income of the household which had the highest income to that of the household which had the lowest income was 82 yuan to 6.4 yuan, a difference of 1280 percent. After the responsibility system was put into practice in 1980, the ratio was 668 yuan to 168 yuan and the difference between the two was 300 percent. In 1977, before the responsibility system was put into practice, the ratio of the net per capita income of the entire brigade to that of the household with the lowest income was 35 yuan to 6.4 yuan, a difference of 450 percent.

In 1980, after the implementation of the responsibility system, the ratio between the two was 342 yuan to 168 yuan, a difference of 100 percent. Thus, we can see that the responsibility system has not enlarged the gap between the poor and the wealthy but has only narrowed it.

Why can the agricultural responsibility system help narrow the gap between the poor and the wealthy?

First, when the responsibility system is put into practice, the peasants can promote their strong points and avoid their shortcomings. In addition to growing crops, they can develop diversification in farming and engage in sideline production so as to increase their income or to make up for the losses caused by the low price of the crops and insufficient manpower. The autonomy in production provides opportunities for the auxiliary labor force such as the weak, the old, women and adolescents, to be engaged in production. In this way, the problem of not having enough strong hands is solved. These factors reduce the differences in the incomes of the peasant households caused by disproportionate labor force.

Second, when the responsibility system is put into practice, egalitarianism is eradicated, the policy of distribution according to work is implemented and the peasants' enthusiasm in production is generally promoted. In addition, when part of the peasants become wealthy first, the fact that they have become wealthy serves as a model for others. As a result, competition among the peasants is sparked off. Moreover, the impoverished households are encouraged to work with the ambition to make their family prosperous.

Third, the key to eliminating poverty is to reduce the difference between the poor and the wealthy. When the responsibility system is put into practice, the productive force of society greatly develops and material wealth increases. As a result, the state has the material conditions to provide relief for the poor households. When most of the peasants have become wealthy, they can have the material power to promote the spirit of mutual help and to help the impoverished households. When the number of impoverished households is greatly reduced, the number of people that need relief from society decreases too. In this way, we can concentrate the efforts of society on providing relief for the impoverished households.

RENMIN RIBAO ON TIES BETWEEN COMMUNISTS, MASSES

[Article by Li Huang, executive secretary of the Standing Committee of Liaoning Provincial CPC Committee: "Communist Party Members Must Maintain Close Ties With the Masses"]

[Text] The CPC is the vanguard of the working class. It faithfully represents the interests of the people of all nationalities throughout the country. The Communists are pioneers carrying out the communist movement to realize the noble ideal of communism. Maintaining close ties with the masses is a requirement for the Communists and a basic guarantee for winning victories in the communist cause. Comrade Mao Zedong likened the Communists to seeds and the people to soil. He said that when we Communists come to a place, we must integrate ourselves with the local masses and take root among them. This was a brilliant exposition of the close ties between the Communists and the masses. During the period of the revolutionary war, our party maintained flesh-and-blood ties with the masses, and the vast numbers of Communists fighting on all fronts shared weal and woe with the masses and unhesitatingly shed their blood and laid down their lives for the interests of the people. For this reason, the party won the deep trust and strong support of the masses and, subsequently, led them in winning great victories. Now, our party has become the ruling party, leading 1 billion Chinese people in carrying out socialist construction. History has assigned to our party the heavy responsibility of thoroughly eliminating China's backwardness and realizing the great socialist modernization. To attain this goal, our Communists must strive more persistently and unremittingly to maintain close ties with the masses.

We should also see that because our party has become the ruling party, some party members have forgotten our party's fine tradition of maintaining close ties with the masses and have even gone to the extent of using the power in their hands to encroach on the interests of the masses, thereby impairing the ties between the party and the masses and jeopardizing the party's cause. Therefore, during the new historical period, it is very important to strengthen the party's mass line and to demand that the Communists maintain close ties more consciously with the masses.

To maintain close ties with the masses, the Communists should, first, be humble to the masses and treat them as equals. This means that they must appear among the masses in the capacity of an ordinary person and must not set themselves above the masses. They must discuss problems with the masses and must not arbitrarily give orders to the masses. The idea that Communists are one grade above the masses and may disrespect the masses, arbitrarily give them orders and monopolize everything, and the deeds prompted by this idea are enormously harmful to the party.

To maintain close ties with the masses, the Communists must always pay attention to the opinions and demands of the masses and rely on the masses in doing everything. Comrade Mao Zedong said that the masses are the real heroes while we ourselves are often childish and ignorant. To be a teacher of the masses, a Communist must, first, be their pupil. Every Communist should know that the Communists account for a very small proportion of the masses. Outside the party, there is a great number of people of insight and socialists activists. If we do not correctly listen to the voices of the masses and if we do not humbly learn from the masses, we shall accomplish nothing. In the past few decades, our party has formulated the Marxist method of work of taking the ideas of the masses and pooling them and then going to the masses and carrying these ideas through. This method is a concentrated expression of our party's mass line. Our work will be carried out smoothly if this method is adopted; our work will suffer setbacks or regress if this method is violated. The idea that the party members are wiser than the masses and that the masses cannot do anything well is incompatible with reality and will invariably run into snags in practice. A Communist should pay attention to hearing the opinions and demands of the masses and, in particular, their dissenting opinions and objections. "Listen to both sides and you will be enlightened; heed only one side and you will be benighted." We must be good at hearing the different opinions of various quarters and select the correct ones among them. In this way, we shall make correct decisions and carry them out smoothly. Our party is now leading the great cause of socialist modernization, which involves unprecedentedly heavy tasks and complicated conditions. Each of our party members should all the more pay close attention to learning humbly from the masses in all fields of work and listen attentively to the opinions and demands of the masses. He must also be good at translating the party's policies into conscious actions on the part of the masses and uniting with the masses to carry out the party's tasks. Quoting the story of Antaeus in the Greek legend, Comrade Stalin likened the people to the earth and mother. This was a very appropriate metaphor and profound lesson. We Communists shall remain invincible as long as we never separate ourselves from the people but always stand together with the people.

To maintain close ties with the masses, the Communists must constantly bear in mind the interests of the masses. This is the most important requirement. Our party's sole purpose is to serve the people wholeheartedly. It is the basic distinction between our party and any other political party. Comrade Liu Shaoqi said that our party members should be the best in representing the interests of the entire nation. How should the Communists express their concern for the interests of the masses? They should do so in their activities by aptly integrating long-term interests with the immediate interests of the masses and subordinating the immediate interests to the long-term interests. In their work and daily lives, they should be the first to bear hardships and the last to enjoy comforts and should work selflessly for the public interest.

To protect the interests of the masses, they should give no thought to their own personal safety and show no hesitation in sacrificing their own interests and even their lives. They should take the affairs of state as their own duties. The dictum "be concerned about affairs of state before others, enjoy comfort after others" can be best expressed in our party members. They put the interests of the party and the people above everything else and have a firm belief in communism. They fight and give their lives for the interests of the people. This is a concentrated expression of the communist outlook on life.

To maintain close ties with the masses, the Communists must also play their role as a vanguard and model in all fields of work. Our party is the leader in socialist construction. Without the vast numbers of its members playing an exemplary role, it cannot lead the people in translating various tasks into solid actions and push its cause forward. How should the party members play their role as vanguards and models? They should be the first to do what they want the masses to do; they should be the first to refrain from doing what they do not want the masses to do. In other words, they should set high demands on themselves in work and low demands in daily life. Our party is always against the practice of picking easy jobs and shirking hard ones and thinking about personal fame, position and remuneration and also against a crude and careless style of work and a irresponsible attitude toward one's task. Those who seek personal interests at the expense of the party's interests are liable to punishment according to the party's regulations.

In short, our party members must be models in developing material civilization and also in developing socialist spiritual civilization so that the masses of people will rally around the party and march forward together with us.

To maintain close ties with the masses, the Communists must continuously carry out propaganda and education among the masses, educate them in the basics of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and communist ideas and constantly publicize the party's line, principles and policies among the masses so that the party's propositions may be turned into actions by the masses. At the same time, they should teach the masses to fight against the decadent capitalist and feudalist ideas. This is the duty of every party member. We should intensively develop the socialist spiritual civilization so that the people of all nationalities throughout the country will have lofty ideals and good morality, observe discipline and be well educated. We should also do painstaking ideological work among the masses so that they will enhance ideological and political consciousness with communism as its core. In this way, the unity of the party and the people will have a more solid base and the cause led by the party will be guaranteed. Only when ideological education has been carried out vigorously will it be possible to organize the masses very well to advance hand in hand together with the party members.

The 12th CPC National Congress has laid down the program and objective of struggle to be launched by our party for a period of time to come, thereby raising party building to a new level. Every Communist must firmly bear in mind the basic principle of maintaining close ties with the masses. Whatever his position, he must maintain flesh-and-blood ties with the masses around him, always be a member of the masses and a bosom friend of the masses and must never separate himself from the masses. He must always breathe the same air and share the same fate with the masses and strive to attain the great objective put forth by the 12th CPC Congress to all party members and the people of all nationalities throughout the country, and to build China as quickly as possible into a powerful socialist country with highly developed civilization and democracy!

CHINA DAILY REVIEWS GROWTH IN PRIVATE BUSINESS

[By Chen Guanfeng]

[Text] Private businesses are prospering again in China's urban and rural areas after ups and downs during the past 30 years.

By 1981, China had more than one million individuals engaged in such businesses, more than seven times the number of about 140,000 in 1978, according to an official of the General Bureau of Industrial and Commercial Administration.

This number, however, stands at only about 0.6 per cent of China's total urban residents. In comparison, individuals engaged in private business in 1964 made up 1.2 per cent of urban residents.

"The current proportion of individuals engaged in private businesses is too small to satisfy the demand of our enormous population and to fulfil its due contribution to the overall development of our economy" the official said.

Asked why such private businesses are allowed to develop when public ownership has been established in China, the official said it is because the history of the past three decades has shown that these businesses are indispensable if the country's economy is to develop in a balanced way.

"Without these businesses our economy would be like a tree without branches or leaves," the official said.

"Although we have both state-owned and collectively-owned enterprises, they are not enough to provide for the needs of our people, and not convenient in some cases," he said.

He said businesses like shoe-repairing, tailoring and catering can often be better run by individuals than by the state.

"Moreover," he said, "the development of such businesses will create more job opportunities for the unemployed."

China has about six million people in need of jobs each year, and the state can provide jobs for only about two-thirds of them.

The development of private business has helped to solve part of the unemployment problem. For example, 230,000 middle school graduates now engaged in these businesses would have been jobless otherwise.

But most individuals engaged in such businesses had been in trade before the "Cultural Revolution." Their businesses were closed down then as "hotbeds of capitalism" and they became jobless.

After the third plenary session of the party Central Committee of the 11th congress in 1978, which inaugurated policies to promote private businesses, these individuals returned to their old trade.

Retired workers are also encouraged to take up private businesses. This is because these retired workers can pass their skills and techniques to the younger generation by running businesses jointly with them.

Individuals may run their businesses either singly or together with their family members. They may also engage apprentices, or employ others to help in their work.

Help Is Provided

To ensure steady development of private businesses, the state has asked all departments concerned to help them by providing raw materials or even loans when necessary.

It also stipulates that individual businessmen have the same political and social privileges as are enjoyed by employees in state and collectively-owned enterprises.

Moreover, earnings from private business are protected by state laws from any intrusion, so long as the income is earned legally.

Private businesses have travelled along a tortuous road in the past three decades.

When the People's Republic was founded in 1949, more than seven million individuals were engaged in such businesses. By 1953, they ran to a record high of nearly 8.5 million.

After the socialist reformation of agriculture, arts and crafts, and capitalist industry and commerce in 1956, they shrank to 160,000.

Finding that the constraints imposed on these people hindered the country's economy and affected their lives the state issued decrees to encourage the development of private business. By 1957, they totalled more than one million.

Then the "Cultural Revolution" came in 1965. These businesses came under fierce attack and were forced to close one after another.

As a result of this purge, the individuals engaged in private businesses dropped to 180,000 in 1976. The third plenary session in 1978 restored their position and they prospered again as a result.

RECENT COVERAGE OF CLANDESTINE BA YI RADIO

PLA Welcomes Yu Qiuli

OW050510 (Clandestine) Ba Yi Radio in Mandarin to China 1330 GMT 4 Oct 82

[Text] Army leaders at various levels, and particularly political workers in the army, generally welcome Comrade Yu Qiuli as director of the General Political Department. This is because Comrade Yu Qiuli is well experienced in army political work -- he served successively as political commissar of a detachment of the 120th Division of the 8th Route Army, political commissar of the 358th Brigade, political commissar of the Southwest China Military and Political College, political commissar of the No 2 Higher Infantry School and political commissar of the Logistics Department. He left the army in 1958.

Comrade Yu Qiuli may lack a clear understanding of the situation in the army after leaving it for 24 years. However, this, when viewed from another angle, is also a good thing for a new appointee often considers longstanding problems in a new perspective, solves them with new methods, and resolutely handles frameups and false and wrong cases involving army cadres.

Political work is the lifeblood of all other work. Our army has made many mistakes in its past handling of army-civilian, army-government, party-army and officer-soldier relations and the relations among cadres and between the leadership of the Military Commission and army leaders, and many complicated problems have existed in this regard. This situation is directly related to the fact that army political work and the General Political Department have failed to play the role they should have.

The work of the General Political Department is of great importance. This is why Zhang Chunqiao, then a member of the Political Bureau and vice premier of the State Council, was appointed director of the General Political Department when the gang of four came to power. Since then, the General Political Department actually became the center of plotting to purge and persecute army cadres and the political college of designs to publicize the personality cult. Even after the downfall of the gang of four, the General Political Department and the security organs, the military tribunals and the military procuratorates under it did not put the stress of their work on redressing frameups and false and wrong cases involving a large number of army cadres. On the contrary, they further persecuted and dealt blows to a large number of commanders and fighters on the pretext of the case of the Lin Biao clique and of the participation of army units in carrying out the tasks of three supports and two militaries [support industry, support agriculture and support the broad masses of the left; military control and political and military training]. A new personality cult was advocated in the army. Instead of implementing the policy of letting a hundred flowers blossom, the General Political Department took the lead in hitting hard at writers and artists in the army. It imposed many restrictions on literary and art work in the army. It is the General Political Department that launched a campaign to falsely criticize Bai Hua and other writers in the army unit to which Bai Hua belonged.

We hope that Comrade Yu Qiuli, as director of the General Political Department, will proceed from the interests of the party, the state, the army and the people, solve outstanding problems in the shortest possible time and try to thoroughly redress frameups and false and wrong cases which have been fabricated for various reasons in the army.

Policy Toward Third World, U.S.

[Text] Not long ago the Chinese Government provided the Palestinian people with economic aid of U.S. $1 million and Chinese leaders also lambasted Israel for its aggression in Lebanon and for its troops' atrocities against the Palestinian refugees in that country.

These moves were taken with the aim of restoring China's prestige among the Third World's people and to win back their confidence in this country, which was lost after our leaders' policies went against the interests of the Third World countries. For instance, Chinese leaders supported the late Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat in concluding an agreement of national betrayal and surrender with Israel at Camp David, thus making China stand against all other Arab countries. It is now clear that China made a blunder by failing to support the the genuine revolutionary, patriotic movement for national liberation in Angola. Furthermore, China has persistently adopted an erroneous stand toward the conflicts in Ethiopia and Somalia. Cases of similar Chinese blunders in foreign affairs are numerous.

How can China restore its prestige among the Third World's people while it lambasts Israel's genocidal crimes in Lebanon on the one hand, and supports the Pol Pot bandit clique that committed genocidal crimes against the Kampuchean people on the other? It is obvious that a certain expression of its political attitude and the aid of U.S. $1 million will not enable China to restore its prestige among countries of the Third World. In a nutshell, China will not be able to do so until it brings about a fundamental change in its relations with U.S. imperialism and adopts a firm and principled stand toward this question. What is more, the United States is still flagrantly interfering in China's internal affairs and hindering the return of Taiwan to the embrace of the motherland. Even so, Chinese leaders are still supporting U.S. imperialist (?policies) on many international issues and central leading comrades have issued statements to the effect that China's strategic interests parallel those of the United States.

Chinese and U.S. leaders have exchanged views on the international situation and on issues of mutual concern, including relations with socialist countries, especially with the Soviet Union. None of these acts were wise moves.

U.S. Computer Sales Viewed

[Text] Before his departure for China, former U.S. Secretary of State Kissinger commented on President Reagan's approval for three U.S. firms to sell electonic computers, which can be used in the defense industry, to our country. He pointed out that there are three reasons why President Reagan suddenly approved the sale of such computers to China: 1) to ease the Chinese leaders' strong reactions over the United States' continued sales of weapons to Taiwan; 2) to create new obstacles to the improvement of the Sino-Soviet relations; and, 3) to subject China to greater dependence on the United States for military technology. As a matter of fact, the U.S. authorities have, with a few exceptions, forbidden U.S. firms from selling advanced technological equipment to our country for the past several years.

The intentions behind the sudden, generous approval of sales of electronic computers to our country are far more complex than those Kissinger has stated.

First, since Reagan has openly adhered to the two Chinas policy and stepped up its arming of Taiwan, certain leaders in the central authorities, particularly certain leaders in the armed forces, have stated that the liberation of Taiwan by force should not be abandoned while great efforts are being exerted to achieve a peaceful reunification. For this reason, the U.S. authorities have tried to ease the strong feelings of certain comrades of our party and armed forces and the broad masses of people by approving the sale of electronic computers to our country. They think this will buy time for Taiwan to produce enough military hardware for its own defense within 3 to 5 yeras. Moreover, everybody knows that the United States has been taking advantage of the Sino-Soviet contradictions, hoping that it can reap profits from a large-scale armed conflict between China and the USSR, if such a conflict were to occur. Therefore, the approval of sales of electronic computers to China is intended to both bribe and blackmail China simultaneously. This approval also hints that, if Sino-Soviet relations improve, the United States will stop selling such equipment to China. A more important facet is: Precisely because such electronic computers can be used for military purposes, they may serve to aggravate suspicions between China and the USSR.

Lastly, U.S. experts will be indispensable in the use and maintenance of such complex equipment. If these computers are used for military purposes, U.S. military experts have to be consulted. Furthermore, China must depend on the U.S. firms concerned for supplies of spare parts and accessories. Thus, imperceptibly we will become dependent on the United States both militarily and technologically. Although our country and our armed forces are badly in need of the most advanced equipment, we cannot bargain with principles, much less permit other people to lead us by the nose.

HEILONGJIANG TRIES CULTURAL REVOLUTION CRIMINALS

[Report: "The Harbin Municipal Intermediate People's Court Conducts Open Trials on Some Major Cases Committed During the Cultural Revolution"; the item below should be substituted for a similar report from Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service, published on page S 1 of the 21 September DAILY REPORT; because of poor reception the Harbin radio account contained some misheard words and incorrect names.]

[Text] In late April the Harbin Municipal Intermediate People's Court conducted open trials of some major cases committed during the Cultural Revolution -- the case of Niu Chengshan [3662 2052 1472] and Nie Shirong [5119 1102 2837], who conspired to subvert the government; the case of Han Chao [7281 3390], who engaged in beating, smashing and looting; and the case of Shao Yangcheng [6730 1484 1004], who engaged in retaliation and persecution. Niu Chengshan was sentenced to 5 years' imprisonment with political rights deprived for 3 years; Han Chao 6 years' imprisonment with political rights deprived for 2 years; and Shao Yangcheng 7 years' imprisonment with political rights deprived for 2 years.

The court designated lawyers to defend the accused during the open trials, granting the accused full right to defend themselves and to make their final statements. It strictly distinguished criminal activities from noncriminal, investigating the accused and affixing their responsibilities only for their crimes, not their mistakes.

About 2,000 people attended the trials. They held that the trials indicated a victory of the line set forth at the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and a victory of the socialist legal system. They expressed their resolute support for the stern judgments.

After the above-mentioned criminals were investigated and interrogated by the Harbin Municipal Security Bureau, they were referred to the Harbin Municipal People's Procuratorate for examination and questioning. Then the procuratorate, having made certain of their crimes, filed their cases with the Harbin Municipal Intermediate People's Court.

In the process of hearing, investigation and debate in court, abundant evidence clearly proved the crimes committed by Niu Chengshan, Nie Shirong, Han Chao and Shao Yancheng. Niu Chengshan and Nie Shirong colluded with each other during the Cultural Revolution. They vigorously joined and followed the Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary clique to directly scheme and participate in the emergency activities to organize backbone forces of their faction. They created public opinion to conduct counterrevolutionary propaganda and instigation. They attacked the provincial CPC committee, took away its documents and paraded provincial and Harbin municipal leading cadres for public criticism, slanders and persecution. They sabotaged the work of party and government organs in a plot to seize our province's party and government leadership and overthrow the dictatorship of the proletariat.

During the Cultural Revolution Han Chao organized and directed armed struggles, instigated the masses to seize guns and ammunition and slandered and persecuted the cadres and people, thus undermining public order, infringing upon the citizens' personal rights and seriously damaging the state property.

During the Cultural Revolution Shao Yancheng abused his position and power to retaliate against, persecute and beat people. The consequences were grave. He also participated in the plot to organize forces to attack the eighth session of the provincial revolutionary committee, sabotage the byelection for the deputies to the Fourth National People's Congress, attacked leading persons of the provincial CPC committee, attacked the organs of the provincial CPC committee and created disorder in our work.

His crimes afflicted and gravely endangered the whole province and aroused great indignation among the masses.

The accused were sentenced according to law on the basis of their criminal facts, the nature and offenses of their crimes, the danger they had caused to the society and their attitude in confessing their crimes. Full consideration was given to the specific historical conditions during the period they committed crimes when the sentence was pronounced.

After the sentence was pronounced, Nie Shirong and Shao Yancheng filed an appeal contesting the sentence, saying that the punishment was too stern. The Heilongjiang Provincial Higher People's Court formed a collegiate court to handle the case and held that the punishment meted out was proper. The appeal was rejected and the original judgment sustained.

Zhang Yongchang [1728 3057 2490] and Liu Xuefeng [0491 7185 1496], the accused, actively participated in the criminal conspiracy of Niu Chengshan and Nie Shirong to subvert the government. This constituted a crime. However, since Zhang Yongchang confessed all his crimes frankly and exposed other criminals and in view of the position in which Liu Xuefeng was situated when he committed the crime, the Harbin Municipal People's Procuratorate decided, in accordance with the specific historical conditions during the period they committed the crime and with relevant policies and laws, to withdraw the indictment.

HEILONGJIANG GOVERNOR ON BOOSTING OUTPUT VALUE

SK020809 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 1 Oct 82

["Radio and television talk" by Chen Lei, secretary of the Heilongjiang Provincial CPC Committee and provincial governor: "Strive To Quadruple Our Province's Annual Industrial and Agricultural Output Value by the End of This Century" -- recorded, date not given]

[Excerpts] Comrades, the political report made at the 12th CPC Congress by Comrade Hu Yaobang on behalf of the CPC Central Committee said that the general objective of China's economic construction for the two decades between 1981 and the end of this century is, while steadily working for more and better economic results, to quadruple the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production. This grand objective conforms to the will of the party and the people. It will surely become a powerful motive force to spur the millions upon millions of people to bring about a comprehensive upsurge of the socialist economy and create a brand new situation for socialist modernization. We wholeheartedly support this strategic objective set forth at the 12th CPC Congress and will unswervingly make more contributions to the successful accomplishment of the objective.

While studying and implementing the guidelines of the 12th CPC Congress, the provincial CPC Committee and government held discussions and formulated initial plans for our province to quadruple its annual industrial and agricultural output value. Viewed from the actual situation of Heilongjiang, it is totally possible that the province will quadruple its annual industrial and agricultural output value by the end of this century. In order to accomplish this objective, our annual increase should be 7.2 percent in the coming 20 years. Such a speed is not high compared with our previous records. In the 32 years from 1950 to 1981, our annual increase in industrial and agricultural output value was 8.6 percent, much higher than the quota we set for the next 20 years.

Regarding resources and economic conditions, we have the following favorable conditions:

1. We have great superiority in resources. We have a vast and fertile land, large areas of forests and rich mineral reserves. These are exceptional advantages we enjoy.

2. We have a solid foundation for industrial and agricultural production and a great potential for economic development.

3. Through the efforts in readjustment in the past 3 years and more, our economic structure has been greatly changed and the proportion between the major branches of the economy has been more balanced.

4. We have summed up both positive and negative experiences of the past 30 years and more and have found a new way for our economic development.

5. [Words indistinct] to accelerate our economic development.

6. The state's policy of enlivening the domestic economy and opening to the outside world will promote local economy.

7. We have achieved marked results in combining enterprise consolidation with the consolidation of the party and have made greater efforts to improve economic results.

8. With the whole party concentrating its efforts on improving economic results, economic problems are being solved continuously and economic experiences gained. Party work style, social conduct and public security have remarkably improved.

All these fully show that we are [words indistinct] and sure to accomplish the strategic objective of quadrupling our annual industrial and agricultural output value.

While striving to quadruple the annual industrial and agricultural output value, we should solve the problems concerning circulation and consumption and give full play to the role of circulation in promoting production and that of production in promoting circulation. We should continue implementing the line, principles and policies laid down at the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, maintain the stability and continuation of policies and further enliven the economy. We should bring every positive factor into full play to conduct ideological education, formulate specific policies, implement managerial systems and work out measures and methods. In the meantime, we should take the whole situation into consideration by coordinating all the activities of the nation as in a chess game, take the initiative in safeguarding the state's interests, strive to overcome departmentalist and decentralist tendencies and bring about a new upsurge in the socialist construction. Party committees at all levels should conscientiously strengthen leadership and conduct thorough and painstaking political and ideological work. Governments at all levels and their executive departments should fully play their role in quadrupling the annual industrial and agricultural output value. [sentence indistinct] We should start now in order to achieve the objective. We should do a good job in mapping out plans for next year and see to it that the plans for the sixth 5-year period which we are implementing are fulfilled or overfulfilled. We should combine the formulation of the plans for quadrupling the annual industrial and agricultural output value with current production, turn the plans into a motive force to promote current production and other work and fulfill the plans step by step.

Under the guidance of the guidelines of the 12th CPC Congress, let us be united and work diligently with one heart and one mind and make contributions to creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

CHENG MING: PRC LEADERS SPEAK ON HONG KONG

HK040759 Hong Kong CHENG MING in Chinese No 60, 1 Oct 82 pp 12-13

[Report: "CPC Internal Material on the Future of Hong Kong -- Speeches by Hu Yaobang, Zhao Ziyang and Hu Qiaomu at February Cadre Conference"]

[Text] Mr Editor:

I read Mr Lo Bing's article "CPC Decision and Policy on Hong Kong's Future" in the July issue of CHENG MING. Because I had deep confidence in the column "Free Talks After Traveling North," I believed in the authenticity of Mr Lo's report. At the same time, I also believed that it was possible for the CPC to carry out its decision and policy concerning the "two systems coexisting in one country," but I still wanted to read the relevant material about the CPC decision and policy on this matter.

From late July to the end of August, I toured the southwest, northwest and northern regions of China. I realized my desire after arriving in Beijing. One of my former schoolmasters, who returned to China and has been working there for many years, let me read some internal CPC documents which were designed for ordinary cadres. I found that the basic contents of these documents were very close to the report by Mr Lo Bing. I thought that the friends in Hong Kong could make better mental preparations for Hong Kong's future changes if they could read this material and they might relax and not worry when doing business. I copied down the important parts of this material, especially those concerning the Hong Kong problem. Because these documents had been widely circulated and no secrets there needed to be kept, my old schoolmaster allowed me to copy them. At the same time, he also believed that China's principle of "recovering sovereignty over Hong Kong and at the same time maintaining the capitalist system in Hong Kong" would be publicized in Hong Kong and Macao in a partially open way.

After returning to Hong Kong, I read the August and September issues of CHENG MING and found that the reports by Mr Lo Bing about a speech by Hu Yaobang on Hong Kong's future coincided closely with the material I had copied (the differences are only several insignificant characters). But what had been reported by Mr Lo was not as complete as the documents. In order to make it possible for readers in Hong Kong and abroad to get a complete picture of the problem, I attach the copied material herewith and hope that CHENG MING can publish it completely. Since I have kept copies of the material, there is no need to return it to me if you do not use it.

Sincerely yours,

Chan Yat-ling, 9 September

(Editor's note: Here, we sincerely thank Mr Chan for his concern for this magazine and its readers. We present the full text of the material he sent to us as follows:)

Hu Yaobang's speech:

Our socialist modernization construction is now situated at an extremely important juncture.

We should profoundly understand the strategic significance of the economic policy of opening up to the outside world and dare to open up 3 new prospects in a broader sphere. At the same time, we should also pay close attention to the complications we are confronted with under the conditions of practicing the open-door policy, be good at learning new skills and promptly discover and surmount various negative phenomena, especially those within the party and among party cadres that are seriously endangering our cause.

1. We must be staunch, sober and competent Marxists.

Under peaceful circumstances, dangers still exist.... The danger that our party might wane and become degenerate has not yet been removed. Isn't it a fact that a considerable number of party members, cadres and even some organizations in your two provinces and other localities and departments have been corrupted by bourgeois ideology?

The danger does not come from other areas but the corruption and degeneration of weak-willed members within our party.

Where is the key to the party...? The key lies in the high- and middle-ranking cadres.

How well do we do our work? In several decades, say 20 years time, our descendants will make appraisals of us. As I see it, there are only three possibilities: able persons, mediocrities and the fatuous.

2. We must seriously and unremittingly struggle against corruptive phenomena within our party and particularly among some party members and responsible cadres.

In addition to adopting the economic policy of opening up to the outside world at the present stage, we will use a special method, that is, allowing two social systems to coexist in one country. This will be done in order to solve the problems of reunification with Taiwan and recovering sovereignty over Hong Kong and Macao in the near future. This is a correct principle that we should adopt under the new historical conditions. At the same time, however, it should be seen that, when this principle is put into practice, the struggle will inevitably become very acute and extremely complicated.

When the Soviet regime adopted concessions after the October Revolution, Lenin penetratingly noted this point. On one hand, he affirmed the necessity of adopting concessions. On the other, he stressed that concessions did not mean peace but war -- the continuation of war in the economic field and in a manner which was more advantageous to the Soviet. According to Lenin, it was entirely necessary to come into contact with international capitalists. But this contact, at the same time, also implied serious struggle. The purpose of making this contact was to promote socialist construction in the Soviet.

Trotsky, however, took a completely opposite position. In his opinion, contacting international capitalists would inevitably mean falling under the control of the economy in the capitalist world and becoming its appendage. Thus the plan to build socialism in one country would be frustrated. According to Trotsky, making contact with international capitalists was equal to abandoning the revolution and socialism.

History has proved that Lenin was completely correct and Trotsky absolutely wrong. Today, we still need to follow the Leninist viewpoint. It is incorrect to struggle in an isolated way and refuse to make contact with international capitalists. However, views and deeds that neglect and abandon the necessary struggle when we are in contact with international capitalists are also incorrect. In short, contact and struggle are both necessary. The problem is whether we, members and cadres of the Communist Party, and, primarily, those leading cadres, will become corrupted in this struggle and fall captive to the bourgeoisie.

Comrades from Fujian Province have said: A corrupted party branch secretary who had been a party member for more than 30 years went so far as to say: "After following the Communist Party for several decades, I found only today that I was fooled." You see, it is obvious that he was fooled by capitalism. But he turned things upside down and said that he was fooled by the Communist Party. (laughter)

(Hu Qiaomu interposed: Foreign concessions in old China were not defined clearly in the treaties and China was unconsciously duped by foreigners. Bit by bit, the concessions ultimately became "countries inside a country.")

As I see it, it is indeed necessary for Guangdong Province to further review its experience in handling foreign economic work. There may be some major shortcomings in Guangdong's foreign economic work. For example, agricultural and sideline products were excessively purchased for export purposes at high prices in a spontaneous way and this led to shortages in the people's daily necessities. However, great quantities of daily consumer goods which were not needed by the local markets were then imported.

Some comrades may say that shortcomings are unavoidable. But I agree with only half of this opinion.... It is better that the central authorities say these words for you, but you...should not say them first.... Could it be possible that some of our comrades have erroneous ideas?

The advertisements broadcast by our central television station also talk about foreign watches which are "better than others" and "of world renown." This is nothing but publicity for the "superiority" of the capitalist system.

We should be determined to reduce the export of goods which are in short supply at home and imperatively needed for domestic consumption and which have been causing financial losses.

Your Guangdong Province retained nearly $1.1 billion of foreign exchange in 1981. This is not a small figure.

Zhao Ziyang's speech:

We should be bold in making use of the current favorable international conditions and upholding the policy of opening to the outside world and enlivening the economy at home so as to speed up the development of our economy. At the same time, we should also realize that, under the new historical conditions, it is unavoidable that we face a struggle against the inroads of bourgeois ideology and the tendency of bourgeois liberalization.

Hu Qiaomu's speech:

The lowest crime rate in the whole country was the figure for 1956 -- .026 percent. In 1961, the figure was .069 percent; in 1978, .057 percent; in 1979, .066 percent; in 1980, .079 percent; in 1981, .091 percent.

As I see it, this problem is an important phenomenon reflecting the class struggle under the socialist system. The central authorities have pointed out -- and first of all, Comrade Xiaoping pointed out at the theoretical conference -- that class struggle still exists despite the fact that the exploiting class has been eliminated as a class. Quite a few people suspected and opposed this formulation. They asked how class struggle could still exist since the exploiting class had been eliminated. Some comrades in theoretical circles and even some friendly foreign personages have also raised this question. Some people have said that this question could be likened to the fact that bricks would remain after the wall was demolished.... It is certain that class struggle cannot be abolished at the current stage of socialism. A fairly long period of time is required to abolish class struggle and it is difficult to anticipate how long it will last.

Now we are facing the bourgeoisie from Hong Kong, Macao and Taiwan as well as from abroad. They want to erode and corrupt our ranks. They even want to change Guangdong into a place like Hong Kong. We must struggle against them as well. Apart from a small number of people who are running joint ventures with us, they are not under the control of the sovereignty of the PRC so we cannot use the method we used to deal with the national capitalists in 1952. Therefore, this struggle will take a long time.

I agree with the opinion just expressed by Comrade Zhongyi, but I want to make a revision of what he said about the climax of smuggling having abated. At present, that may be so (it has not even been at a low ebb). But I do not think it is so on a long-term basis, because there will be another greater climax in the future. If we recover Hong Kong and Macao, a large number of capitalists will become citizens of the PRC. Hong Kong and Macao are PRC territories, but the current system will be maintained and Hong Kong will remain a free harbor.

When two systems coexist in a country, this will inevitably give rise to a new situation which is extremely complicated. We must make sufficient preparations. Even if the Taiwan problem is to be settled only after a longer time, we should also make preparations. The reality of contact between Taiwan and the mainland is now gradually increasing. Guangdong is confronted with the Hong Kong and Macao problem and Fujian is confronted with the Taiwan problem. Therefore, we should not think that the climax can easily abate. During what is a fairly long historical period, this struggle will not shrink to a very small sphere.

When the Soviet Union adopted the "new economic policy," a social stratum was thus formed.... Then Stalin took a sudden turn and finished the "new economic policy." Now, the problems we are confronted with are different from those in the Soviet Union in those days and we cannot use the methods Stalin used.... Our policy of opening up to the outside world will continue for a long time.

MING PAO: CPC TO EXPEL 2 MILLION MEMBERS

[Text] The CPC is a party in power with 39 million members. However, after the turmoil of the "Cultural Revolution," it became terribly impure in idelogy, work style and organization. Over the past few years, many opportunists and degenerate elements who decked themselves out as party members have made a lot of trouble and "undermined the foundation of socialism." They have brought shame on the Communist Party and created a bad impression among the people. For this reason, Hu Yaobang suggested in his report at the 12th CPC National Congress that, beginning from the second half of next year, the party take 3 years to rectify the party's work style and organization by stages and in groups.

Chen Yun, Huang Kecheng and Deng Yingchao of the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection have earnestly advocated rectifying the party. They have discovered that in both the central and local authorities many party members and cadres have seriously violated laws and discipline. But since they have been protected by some cadres at higher levels, local prosecutorial organs can hardly do anything against them. Problems were usually solved only when the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection took up the matter. It is said that Huang Kecheng once revealed in his remarks that, during the coming party rectification, not only will the "five kinds of people" -- in addition to the "three kinds of people" who made their fortunes through rebellion; who engaged in beating, smashing and looting during the Cultural Revolution; and who were seriously influenced by factionalism there are also people who have opposed the four basic principles politically, ideologically and organizationally and resisted the present line, policies and principles; and people who have grovelled at the feet of capitalism, are keen on practicing capitalism and have been pursuing the bourgeois way of life -- be rejected from the leading bodies, but will also be expelled from the party if their cases are serious. He estimated that at least 2 million members will be cleared from the party.

Since the conclusion of the 12th CPC National Congress, while studying the Congress documents, penetrating discussions on party rectification have also been carried out in the central and local party, government and army organs. Reliable sources revealed that during the rectification common people will be urged to inform against erring party members, especially cadres. In order to dispel misgivings among the masses that they may suffer, retaliated, they will be allowed to drop their accusation letter, without signature, in special letter boxes to inform against party members who have committed offences or violated laws. Other sources said that if the property of the leaders is not consistent with their income, they will be investigated during the rectification.

Impure Elements in Beijing's Party Organizations Who Joined the Party during the Cultural Revolution Must Be Resolutely Cleared Out

Beijing has the largest number of party members in mainland China. Not counting those in various central party, government and army organs, there are 650,000 party members in this city.

Duan Junyi, first secretary of the Beijing Municipal CPC Committee, has said: "Of the 650,000 party members in Beijing, 340,000 -- that is, more than half of them -- joined the party after the Cultural Revolution began. Due to the sabotage carried out during the 10 years of turmoil and the influence of bourgeois ideology, there really exists within the party an impurity of the party's ideology, work style and organization.

"1. There are 'three kinds of people' among the party members.

"2. Some party members have engaged in graft, embezzlement, profiteering and speculation.

"3. Some party members are influenced by the bourgeois ideology of ultraliberalism.

"4. Some party members are fond of practicing factionalism, 'entering by the back door' and disrupting unity.

All this has created a very bad impression among the people. For this reason, it is necessary to rectify the party."

AFP: USSR-PRC TALKS SHROUDED IN SECRECY

BK051142 Hong Kong AFP in English 1101 GMT 5 Oct 82

[By Charles-Antoine de Nerciat]

[Text] Beijing, Oct. 5 (AFP) -- Chinese and Soviet officials here were tightlipped on talks that were believed to have opened today between senior diplomats of the two Communist giants who have been feuding for two decades.

While the talks were shrouded in complete secrecy, Western diplomats believed that Deputy Foreign Ministers Leonid Ilichev and Qian Qichen met today to renew the Sino-Soviet dialogue broken off nearly three years ago.

The only word so far on the negotiations has been a brief official Chinese statement issued yesterday announcing that Mr. Ilichev was in Beijing for "consultations" with Mr. Qian on bilateral relations.

Since then, officials on both sides hae refused to divulge any other details. The Chinese media have not mentioned the talks and have not even reported the Soviet diplomat's presence here.

Western diplomats said that there was no agenda for the talks between Mr. Ilichev, an expert on Sino-Soviet affairs, and Mr. Qian, who was attached to the Chinese Embassy in Moscow in the early 1960's.

The use by the Chinese of the word "consultations" confirmed reports circulating here for weeks that the talks would be merely exploratory, the diplomats said.

Before Mr. Ilichev's arrival here, (?it was) made clear that any improvement in relations with Moscow, as urged on two separate occasions this year by Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev, could come only after long and hard negotiations.

China also signaled that such a breakthrough could come only after Moscow took concrete steps to remove the threat that Beijing says the Soviet Union posed to its security.

The Chinese said that the threat came from three developments: The deployment of a massive Soviet force on their common borders, Moscow's intervention in Afghanistan and its support for the Vietnamese presence in Cambodia.

The arrival of Mr. Ilichev in a special plane Sunday has, however, marked a resumption of the dialogue broken off by China in January 1980 after the Soviet Union sent its tanks and men into Afghanistan.

The talks suspended by China at the time were aimed at normalizing relations between the two countries. Held in Moscow in late 1979, the negotiations were halted without any progress.

Negotiations on the two countries' long-standing border dispute were broken off in June 1978.

Even while both sides were preparing for a resumption of contacts, two top Chinese leaders were making clear the limits they saw on any Sino-Soviet detente.

Premier Zhao Ziyang told his Japanese counterpart Zenko Suzuki, who made a state visit here last month, that China still saw Soviet "hegemonism" as the main threat to world peace.

Deng Xiaoping, the man who has dominated post-Mao China, also told Mr. Suzuki that any "drastic change" in Beijing's attitude towards Moscow was not in the cards.

USSR'S GROMYKO REJECTS INVITATION TO VISIT JAPAN

[Text] Tokyo, October 5 (XINHUA) -- Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko has rejected Japan's invitation to visit Japan to resume talks on the proposed Soviet-Japan peace treaty, reported NIHON KEIZAI SHIMBUN this evening.

Gromyko held talks with Japanese Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi in New York yesterday.

During the talks, Sakurauchi told Gromyko that Japan hoped to maintain good and lasting relations with the Soviet Union. But, he said, what was displeasing was that the territorial problem had not been resolved and that a peace treaty had not been concluded.

Sakurauchi conveyed Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki's wish to resume talks on the peace treaty. The Japanese foreign minister also invited Gromyko to visit Japan to restart the talks.

Gromyko only agreed to continue the Japan-Soviet talks at working level in Tokyo next spring.

He alleged that the Soviet Union had always cherished the hope to develop the relations between the two countries, but had not found the Japanese side had the similar desire to improve the political relations between the two countries. He charged Japan with "quibbling over the territorial problem and obstructing the development of relations."

He asserted: "The Soviet Union has not illegally occupied Japan's northern territories. Our territory is ours."

AFP: UK-PRC TALKS ON HONG KONG IN PROGRESS

OW060930 Hong Kong AFP in English 0918 GMT 6 Oct 82

[Text] Hong Kong, Oct 6 (AFP) -- Meetings on the future of Hong Kong have already started in Beijing, following up British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's visit there last month, Sir Edward Youde, governor of the British colony, said here today.

In his opening address to the Legislative Council, Sir Edward said: "Meetings in Beijing to follow up Mrs Thatcher's visit have already begun."

He said the aim was to complete the talks as soon as possible but he would give no details of the discussions saying "the content of the talks must necessarily remain confidential".

"There were complex issues to be discussed and there are differences between the two sides which must be reconciled, and he acknowledged "steady nerves will be needed in the months ahead".

The prospect of secret Sino-British talks through diplomatic channels on the future of the British colony was announced in a joint statement in Beijing after British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher met Chinese strongman Deng Xiaoping on September 24.

The joint statement emphasised Britain and China's "common aim" in preserving the prosperity and stability of Hong Kong, which was made over to Britain by imperial China by a series of treaties in the 19th century.

Sir Edward stressed Mrs Thatcher's belief that "given the common objective, the differences can be reconciled and an agreement can be reached which will be acceptable to China and Britain and which will be welcomed by the people of Hong Kong".

He said: "In the search for a solution her majesty's government will take the views and wishes of the people of Hong Kong fully into account" and he added that the process of consultations would be "a continuous one and careful consideration will now be given to how this consultative process can best be pursued".

Mrs Thatcher's visit to Beijing revealed major differences in the Chinese and British approach to sovereignty over the colony.

Britain regards the treaties as valid in international law, Mrs Thatcher said, while China has expressly stated that it regards them as unequal and therefore "null and void."

Since Mrs Thatcher's return to Britain China has reiterated its intention of reasserting its sovereignty over the whole of Hong Kong.

Under three 19th century agreements, Hong Kong Island and the Kowloon Peninsula are Britain's in perpetuity. But the new territories -- nine-tenths of the colony's land mass -- are only on a 99-year lease, which is due to expire in 1997.

Although Mrs Thatcher's visit saw dialogue on the future of the colony initiated, diametrically opposed positions on the question of sovereignty were taken up and in Hong Kong's financial institutions confidence took a heavy knock.

In the week following Mrs Thatcher's visit the stock market plunged 280 points to a 2-year low and the local dollar fell to its worst position against the U.S. unit since the devaluation of the pound sterling in 1967.

The situation was not helped by a mid-week declaration by Financial Secretary John Bremridge that the colony's economic performance was not as good as forecast.

Against this background, Sir Edward's speech emphasised confidence in the future. "It is the policy and firm intention of this government to invest vigorously in the future of Hong Kong and its people", he said.

Sir Edward stressed that trade links with China were growing and he said the People's Republic had moved ahead of Japan as the largest source of Hong Kong's imports.

China gets about 40 percent of its overseas income through the colony.

Sir Edward added that China had also become the largest market for Hong Kong, re-exports having "always been the largest source of re-exports."

During his address to Hong Kong's appointed Legislative Council, Sir Edward, who has been governor for 5 months, welcomed the rising level of investment by Chinese companies in Hong Kong. He said the proposed construction by China of a nuclear power station in the southern Chinese province of Guangdong -- some 35 miles (50 kms) from Hong Kong -- would be kept under "close and careful review."

"Should the Chinese authorities decide to build the plant near Hong Kong we should have an interest in it not only as a source of power but in its safety," he said.

On the home front he said inflation had come down this year to 11 percent from the 15 percent level of the last 2 years but that gross domestic product growth would only be four percent in 1982.

He confirmed Mr Bremridge's gloomy prognostications on the economy, saying "it now seems unlikely that this year the budgetted surplus of 2,300 million dollars (353 million U.S. dollars) will be achieved, and present indications are that this year's account will only break even."

He said 2.2 million people, or 42 percent of this over-populated territory, were living in public housing subsidised by the government. But he added that there were still over 500,000 squatters subsisting in scattered and inadequate shanty towns.

SRV PLAN ON KAMPUCHEA UN SEAT CALLED 'INSULT'

HK041444 Beijing BEIJING REVIEW in English No 39, 27 Sep 82 pp 11-12

[Article by Li Yongming: "Kampuchean Question: Foil Vietnam's Scheme At UN General Assembly"]

[Text] Hanoi's plan to unseat Democratic Kampuchea at the upcoming 37th United Nations General Assembly is but the latest of its schemes to legitimize its own Phnom Penh regime in the eyes of the world. Vietnam is working overtime to win support from other countries for its unjustifiable and illegal scheme, first to have Kampuchea vacate its UN seat and then to replace the legitimate government with the puppet authorities. This constitutes an insult to the spirit of the UN Charter.

Democratic Kampuchea Is Legal Representative

The Government of Democratic Kampuchea has in the past three years persevered in the struggle against aggression at home and effectively exercised its right to defend national independence. Its struggle could not have endured such a long time if it had lost the people's support, and if it was not the representative of the Kampuchean people. All justice-upholding countries should support this legitimate government and sole legal representative of its people.

It can be recalled that during World War II, governments in exile of some European countries under the occupation of the fascists were recognized as legal governments, and some of them even became founding members of the United Nations. So there can be no reason for divesting Democratic Kampuchea of its UN seat.

Some take a seemingly impartial attitude on this issue. They support neither the Government of Democratic Kampuchea, nor the Phnom Penh regime. Actually, this is not impartial; for a puppet regime installed by foreign aggressors can hardly be considered on par with a legal government steadfastly resisting foreign aggression. To treat them equally is objectively favouring the aggressors.

Defend UN Charter

Allowing Vietnam to succeed in its scheme for Kampuchea's UN seat would be tantamount to entitling one country to abolish the legitimacy of the government of another independent country within the international organization by means of force. This runs counter to the principles of opposing aggression defined in the UN Charter and to the norms of international relations. At present, there is an uneasiness about the United Nations' failure to effectively defend peace as is clearly mandated in its charter. Only if a firm attitude is taken towards Vietnam's aggressive acts in Kampuchea, can the United Nations be seen as playing this role. Any tolerance and clemency shown to Hanoi can only further reduce the UN's credibility and make it increasingly less able to handle similar problems in the future.

Democratic Kampuchean Coalition Government Is Representative

The recently formed Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, which includes the three Kampuchean groups that are resisting Vietnamese aggression, is widely representative of the Kampuchean people. Some of the countries that in the past abstained from voting or opposed Democratic Kampuchea's seat in the United Nations may now change their votes in favour of Democratic Kampuchea. Vietnam could find its attempt to have the seat vacated becoming increasingly unpopular.

The moves of Vietnam and its supporter, the Soviet Union, to thrust the Heng Samrin regime into the UN in place of Democratic Kampuchea have been defeated at several UN General Assembly sessions. The scheme to make Kampuchea vacate its UN seat at the 37th UN General Assembly will no doubt also be defeated.

ZHAO ZIYANG, INDIAN NEWSMAN VIEW BORDER QUESTION

[Text] Beijing, October 2 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang said today that the Chinese Government will make positive efforts to settle the Sino-Indian border question.

Meanwhile, he added, the two countries should further develop their friendly relations and cooperation in economic, technological, cultural and other fields," he said.

Premier Zhao was speaking during a meeting with G.K. Reddy, chief reporter in New Delhi for the Indian newspaper HINDU and his wife, Kanta Reddy.

The Chinese premier said China and India had many points in common. "The two countries are both developing countries with huge populations. Their peoples had similar experiences in the past and now are confronted with common tasks of developing their national economies and raising their living standards.

"Both China and India are countries with influence in the world. The two countries should be friendly to each other and improve their relations," he said.

Premier Zhao said there exists age-old friendship between the two peoples and the two nations had very good relations in the 1950's.

"The development of Sino-Indian friendship is the trend of the times. This not only conforms to the fundamental interests of the peoples, but also will have an important impact on the peace and stability in Asia and the rest of the world," he said.

In answering Reddy's questions, Premier Zhao mentioned China's lessons drawn from its setbacks as well as successes since the founding of the People's Republic. He said China's development in the past 33 years was both smooth and rough.

"In the political field, we failed to shift, in good time, the focus of our work to the socialist economic construction after the socialist transformation of the ownership was completed in the main. We overemphasized class struggle, which led to frequent political movements," he said.

Zhao said China will concentrate its attention on economic construction. "However, this does not mean class struggle has now become extinct," he said. "What it means is that class struggle does not occupy a dominant place now. Some problems will be solved by building up the spiritual civilization and improving our legal system so that there will be permanent good order in our country."

Referring to the economic field, he said: "We once committed the error of being over-anxious for quick results. We often called for what was beyond our actual capacities. This led to economic imbalance and poor results. As a result, the people benefited very little from their work. We will continue to follow the policies of developing our national economy in a steady, practical and sure way.

"While maintaining the socialist ownership and ensuring the leading role of planned economy, we will pay attention to the development of multiple economic sectors and encourage different ways of business operations in order to enliven our economy. Meanwhile, we will continue to follow the policy of expanding foreign economic relations," Zhao said.

G.K. Reddy and Mrs. Reddy arrived here September 27 at the invitation of the Association for International Understanding of China.

FRG PRESIDENT HOPES FOR STRENGTHENED PRC TIES

[Text] Bonn, October 4 (XINHUA) -- President Karl Carstens told XINHUA in his office today that his forthcoming visit to China will have a great significance in strengthening the relations between the two countries.

Carstens' official visit to China will take place from October 11 to 17.

He said the visit will show that Germany and China have long and traditional ties. The two countries have many points in common under the current situation, especially in safeguarding world peace, he added.

His visit will also reflect that West Germany is very interested in exchanging views with China in the fields of politics, economy, culture and science, Carstens said.

Recalling the rapid development of relations between the two countries since the establishment of their diplomatic relations in 1972, the president pointed out that contacts between the two countries in politics, economy and culture have increased daily.

Carstens said that China has the largest population in the world and has become more and more important in international politics. In dealing with important issues, China cannot be ignored, he noted.

It is very important for West Germany to have a chance to get to know China's viewpoints through direct dialogue, the president said.

On international issues, President Carstens said that West Germany pursues a two-fold policy in face of the East-West tension. On the one hand, he explained, West Germany favours dialogues and negotiations as a means to ease the existing tension, reduce armament and seek solutions to controversial issues. On the other hand, he said, the West German position remains one of continuing its defense efforts in the framework of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The division of the German nation, President Carstens went on to say, is a result of tensions between the East and West. "We intend to restore the unification of Germany through self-determination in a peaceful Europe," he said.

On North-South relations, President Carstens said West Germany attaches importance to the role played by China. While China regards itself as a developing country and gives considerable aid to other developing nations, President Carstens said: "I think an active exchange of views in talks with China will be of great significance to the maintenance of world peace."

FRG'S KOHL DISCUSSES DOMESTIC, FOREIGN POLICY

[Text] Beijing, October 4 (XINHUA) -- West Germany's new Chancellor Helmut Kohl said on Sunday that the principal tasks of his government were to "strengthen the Western alliance and improve relations with the United States," according to a report from Bonn.

In a television interview in Bonn, the new chancellor said he will strive for "a new plan towards European unity" and "the reestablishment of friendly and cooperative relations with the United States."

On the construction of a Soviet natural gas pipeline from Siberia to Western Europe, Kohl said that his government will respect the contracts already signed. But, he added, close consultations were needed to avert similar disputes to recur in relations with the United States on this issue. The West German Government will allow no such dispute to crop up with the United States in future, he added.

Kohl made it clear that he supported the NATO plan to deploy new-type missiles in West Germany in late 1983 and will work for the stabilization of NATO.

On West Germany's relations with the Soviet Union and Eastern European nations, Kohl said that he was in agreement with former Chancellor Schmidt on most issues in this respect. He indicated his willingness to have talks with leader of German Democratic Republic Erich Honecker.

Turning to domestic issues, the new chancellor admitted that his country is in the grip of the worst ever economic recession. He said the task ahead is to pull the country back on the road to economic recovery. He called on the West German people to show willingness to make sacrifices.

CHEMICAL INDUSTRY REPORTS GREATER PROFITS

[Text] According to the Ministry of Chemical Industry, the nation's chemical industry achieved more significant results in increasing revenues than in increasing output during the first 9 months of this year. Statistics show that the quotas for 18 major chemical products produced under the state plan were all exceeded, that 42 awards -- 7 gold and 35 silver -- were given to the chemical industrial enterprises by the State Quality Control Commission for their fine products, and that four engineering projects were cited by the state for their fine quality. Statistics also show that 150 types of products produced by 294 enterprises were appraised by the ministry as fine products.

Compared with the same period last year, the chemical industry's profits tax increased 11 percent, the amount of profits turned over to the state increased 17.4 percent, and labor productivity increased 5.8 percent. As consumption of raw materials and fuel dropped, 1.3 million dun of standard coal was conserved. The production cost for the traditional products of the major chemical enterprises also dropped and the nonprofitable enterprises' losses dropped by more than 50 percent. A new situation also appeared in the small scale nitrogen fertilizer enterprises, which had been losing money for years, as they netted a profit of 48 million yuan during the first 9 months of this year.

CHINA DAILY ARTICLE ON FERTILIZER INDUSTRY

[Article by Xue Hua: "Fertilizer Industry Is Expanding Fast"]

[Text] Since 1949, the output of China's chemical fertilizer industry has grown at average annual rate of 28 per cent, reflecting the special stress the government has laid on it as a crucial adjunct to the agricultural basis of the economy.

More than half the total government investment in the chemical industry over the past 33 years has been for fertilizer production.

The Chinese chemical fertilizer industry has now grown into an industrial system that is fairly wide in scope, and has been rationally integrated with large, medium and small plants.

China produced 12.4 million tons of chemical fertilizers in 1981, including 9.86 million tons of nitrogenous, 2.5 million tons of phosphate and 25,000 tons of potash fertilizers.

In the first half of 1982, the country produced 6.48 million tons of chemical fertilizers, 5.5 per cent higher than during the same period last year.

As the amount of chemical fertilizers available has increased, the amount applied per hectare has also grown, from 0.057 kilogrammes immediately after liberation to 123 kilogrammes at present.

At the establishment of the People's Republic, the nation's industry included only two nitrogenous fertilizer plants, which in all of 1949 produced only 5,700 tons -- less than the nation's present daily output.

Today, China has more than 2,200 fertilizer plants across the country. More than 10 varieties of fertilizer are produced: urea, ammonium nitrate, ammonium bicarbonate, ammonium chloride, aqueous ammonia, ammonium sulfate, single superphosphate, calcium magnesium phosphate, ammonium phosphates, potassium chloride, potassium sulfate, trace-element fertilizer, humate fertilizer, and others. The raw materials used in production are all supplied domestically.

Small Operations

About 1,300 of the 1,400 nitrogenous fertilizer plants in China are small operations, each producing from 5,000 to 20,000 tons of ammonia annually.

Most rely on anthracite as a base, although a few use natural gas or heavy oil.

As the exploitation of petroleum and natural gas has grown over the past decade in China, ammonia produced from those sources has increased as well from 10 per cent in 1970 to 35 per cent of the present total.

The small nitrogenous plants have the advantages of a relatively short technological process, low investment, speedy erection and the efficient use of scattered local coal resources. They produced about 7.8 million tons of ammonia in 1981, or about 53 per cent of the country's total.

However, the small size of these plants also breeds inefficient use of fuel. For that reason, in 1981, China closed down some 250 of the most inefficient and least profitable sites. As a result, in production of ammonia per ton, coal consumption was reduced by five per cent and electricity consumption by 2.7 per cent, compared to 1980.

Meanwhile, since the early 1970's, China has imported 13 ammonia plants, each with a daily output of 1,000 tons. They had produced 22.83 million tons of urea by last June.

Phosphate fertilizer production was begun in China in 1955, with an annual output of merely 1,400 tons. Today, more than one-third of the 2,200 counties in China have small phosphate fertilizer plants, producing more than 90 per cent of the country's total.

The most common products are single superphosphate and calcium magnesium phosphate.

The output of potash fertilizer of China, however, remains low, with an annual output of from 20,000 to 30,000 tons.

The development of trace-element fertilizer is a recent development.

The principal products are boron, zinc, manganese, copper, and molybdenum fertilizers, among others.

Field tests on cotton, rape and other crops and fruit trees, have shown that such fertilizers have positive effect on output.

China has also paid attention to the expansion of organic chemical fertilizers. Products put into trial-production in recent years include both humate and nitro-humate fertilizers.

China is self-sufficient in the catalysts used in the production of chemical fertilizers, and exports some of its reserves to other countries. China now produces 15 types of catalysts, with over 40 modifications and an annual output of about 20,000 tons.

In addition, China is now able to design, manufacture and install units for synthetic ammonia that have an annual capacity of between 10,000 and 150,000 tons.

Greater Needs

Although China has made great progress in its chemical fertilizer industry, it cannot meet the needs of the country's variety and quality. It still has to import around four million tons each year.

China is implementing a policy of "readjustment, restructure, consolidation and improvement "in the industry, entailing, in part, major efforts to increase production of phosphate, potash, high-analysis complex and mixed fertilizers in coming years.

At present, Chinese chemical fertilizers are mainly nitrogenous; the output of phosphate fertilizer is only 20 per cent of that of the nitrogenous variety.

Meanwhile, two-thirds of China's 100 million hectares of cropland are deficient in phosphorus. The Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Fishery hopes to increase the comparative percentage of phosphatic fertilizers to 50 per cent by 1985.

An abundant 10,380 million tons of phosphorus reserves have so far been found throughout China's provinces.

ZHONGGUO CAIMAO BAO STRESSES MEETING BUDGET

[Text] The 5 October ZHONGGUO CAIMAO BAO [CHINA FINANCE AND TRADE NEWS] published an editorial, entitled: "Ensure the Successful Implementation of This Year's State Budget."

The editorial says: Since the beginning of this year, the financial situation of our country has been fairly good. There were certain increases in both revenues and expenditures in the first 7 months of this year as compared with the same period last year; and the revenues were larger than the expenditures. However, great efforts must be made in order to achieve a basic balance of annual revenues and expenditures.

The editorial says: Ensuring revenues is not the responsibility of the financial department alone. The responsibility should be shared by all economic departments and enterprises. They should fulfill their task of turning over revenues and profits to the state in full amount and within the prescribed time according to regulations. The financial and tax departments should further mobilize the cadres to improve tax collection and management and profit transfer, check every possible form of tax evasion and collect all the revenues which should be collected.

The editorial points out: While paying attention to revenue collection, we must exercise strict control of expenditures. All localities, departments and units must appropriate funds strictly according to the budget. Capital construction investment must be kept within the state plan and must not be increased without authorization. All institutions should adhere to the plan and regulations on spending, practice economy, and exercise strict control of nonproductive spending. In the next several months we should stop buying commodities which are under state control in order to restrict institutional purchase. At the same time, no additional expenditures should be authorized except those that are absolutely necessary as approved by the State Council. In each locality or department, a responsible comrade should be put in charge of spending control and all spending requests must be examined and approved by him.

FANG YI OUTLINES FUTURE ROLE OF SMALLER CITIES

[Text] Wuhan, October 5 (XINHUA) -- State Councillor Fang Yi today predicted a special role in the country's socialist modernization program for China's 200 medium-sized and small cities. He was speaking at Xiangfan, a rising industrial city in Hubei Province which has an urban population of 240,000.

Addressing the opening session today of the national conference on scientific and technical work in medium-sized and small cities, Fang Yi said that the scientific and technical development of the smaller cities should be stepped up in order to give them each a special role with emphasis on certain branches of the economy.

Fang Yi said that some of the new small and medium-sized cities have assumed an important economic position in the last few years. In 1980, 12 out of the 13 Chinese cities which had a per capita annual output value of 6,000 yuan and above were in this category, the only exception being Shanghai, China's biggest industrial city. Of the 40 cities showing a 12 percent or greater industrial growth rate in the 1979-1980 period, 39 were smaller cities, including Xiangfan, Shashi and Yichang in Hubei Province; Changzhou, Jiangsu Province; Siping, Jilin Province; Yantai, Shandong Province and Dandong, Liaoning Province.

Fang Yi, also a member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party and minister in charge of the State Scientific and Technological Commission, noted that science and technology was a significant factor in the rapid development of these cities. Output value directly attributable to science and technology amounted to about 30 percent of the total.

At the end of 1980, China had 223 cities, 15 of which have an urban population of over one million and are classified as big cities, and 208 of which have an urban population between 100,000 and one million and are classified as medium-sized and small. In 1980, total outout value of 205 of the small and medium-sized cities reached 181,110 million yuan, or 36.3 percent of the national total while that of the 15 big cities was 174,980 million yuan, accounting for 35 percent of the total.

While the big cities and giant enterprises continue to be the focus of attention as far as science and technology is concerned, Fang Yi said, the smaller cities will play an increasingly important role in the future. Such cities have great potential and most of them are in the early stages of development. They will be of special significance in promoting the exchange between town and countryside and the worker-peasant alliance.

Such cities, said Fang Yi, should follow the general policy of making science and technology serve economic and social development, paying particular attention to local conditions. Some of the cities are centers of processing industries, some are mining bases and some commercial, cultural and tourist centers. Scientific and technical workers should help city planners recognize their resources and put them to advantageous use.

In medium-sized and small cities science and technology should be directed toward the factories and mining enterprises to help with their technical transformation. The enterprises should also be encouraged to adopt new techniques and develop new products.

Scientific and technical workers should be trained in these smaller cities and technicians from the big cities should be encouraged to transfer to the smaller ones, State Councillor Fang said. He advised scientists in smaller cities tokeep abreast of the scientific breakthroughs in big cities, giant enterprises and universities.

The national conference on scientific and technical work in medium-sized and small cities was organized by the State Scientific and Technological Commission. Attending the conference are 200 leaders in charge of scientific and technical work in 29 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions and in 81 cities. The conference is aimed at summing up scientific and technical work in medium-sized and small cities and defining principles and developing goals for the work.

The seven-day conference will conclude on October 11.

SONG RENQIONG SPEAKS AT TEA FOR VOLLEYBALL TEAM

[Excerpts] Beijing, 5 Oct (XINHUA) -- At a tea party given by the State Physical Culture and Sports Commission and the All-China Sports Federation this evening to honor the Chinese women's volleyball team for winning the ninth world women's volleyball championships title, Song Renqiong said: Two of the Chinese women's volleyball team's experiences in winning the title are most important: one is that the members of the team have set high standards and strict demands on themselves and have undergone hard training in basic skills, and the other is that the team has kept discovering talented people, training top players and using new players and has dared to replace old players with new ones.

The tea party was held at the Great Hall of the People. Song Renqiong, on behalf of the party Central Committee and the State Council, extended warm congratulations to the members of the women's volleyball team. He said: After winning the World Cup tournament title last year, the women's team became "the target of all other teams." During this year's competition, the women's team lost the first game and was in a difficult situation. However, the members of the team were not discouraged by failure and were good at summing up their experiences. Strengthening their spirit, they fought hard, point by point and game by game, and finally scaled the heights in world volleyball once again.

Song Renqiong said: The women's team has scaled the heights in world volleyball twice. This has greatly inspired and impelled the people throughout the country in undertaking the four modernizations. People on all fronts are thinking deeply: Since the women's volleyball team has been able to scale world heights, why can we not push our work forward? Since the women's volleyball team has been able to win victory after surmounting difficulties, why can we not put all our energies into our work and bring about a new situation in socialist modernization? While celebrating the victory of the women's volleyball team, people throughout the country are earnestly learning from its patriotic and revolutionary heroic spirit of dashing ahead regardless of safety and bravely fighting for the honor of the motherland; they are learning the team members' spirit of self-reliance and hard struggle and of working hard, conscientiously and in a down-to-earth manner to surmount difficulties; and they are learning from the team members' collectivist spirit and fine style of fighting in unity to overcome a dangerous situation. The spirit of the women's volleyball team is bound to blossom and bear fruit in our country's four modernizations and in people's minds.

Song Renqiong said: In implementing the guidelines laid down by the 12th party congress to bring about a new situation, we should learn from the two important experiences of the women's volleyball team. People in all trades and professions have their own basic skills. Revolutionary statesmen, theorists, strategists, writers and artists are all trained on the basis of upholding revolutionary faith. If we all make it a practice to study diligently, train hard and set high standards and strict demands for ourselves, all our undertakings will certainly flourish more and more.

He said: As in the Chang Jiang, the waves behind drive on those before, so new outstanding people in the world succeed veterans. Our veterans on all fronts should regard discovering and training new hands, and particularly supporting them, as their glorious, historic responsibility. If we all do so, our cause will certainly thrive forever, and not decline. Brilliant disciples are trained by strict teachers, and there are no weak soldiers under a strong general. Our leaders at all levels should be strict teachers and strong generals and not engage in empty talk. Only thus can they lead the masses in scaling the heights. Only thus can our country develop vigorously and rapidly and stand on its own feet in the ranks of world nations.

In conclusion, Song Renqiong encouraged the comrades of the women's volleyball team to guard against arrogance and rashness, to keep sober-minded, to seriously discover their own shortcomings, to modestly learn from the good points of other strong teams in the world, to firmly follow their own road, to keep blazing new trails, to continue their hard training and to exert themselves to win new victories.

Xu Yinsheng, vice chairman of the State Physical Culture and Sports Commission, also spoke at the tea party.

Attending the tea party, together with more than 1,500 representatives of various circles in the capital, were Wan Li, Yang Shangkun, Yu Qiuli, Hao Jianxiu, Peng Chong, Ngapoi Ngawang-Jigme, Hu Juewen, Zhu Xuefan, Liu Lantao, Hu Ziang, Rong Yiren, Zhou Peiyuan, Qian Changzhao and Dong Qiwu.

SONG RENQIONG ON NEED TO REFORM CADRE RANKS

HK050229 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 5 Oct 82 p 4

["Opinion" column by Song Renqiong, director of the Organization Department of the CPC Central Committee, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee: "Cadre Training: An Urgent Task" -- "Excerpts from HONGQI"]

[Text] The major goal of party organizational departments is to make the ranks of cadres more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent.

During an inspection trip to Shandong, Shanghai and Tianjin, Deng Xiaoping emphasized the need to select younger and more competent cadres as successors to the correct party line. Ye Jianying, Hu Yaobang and Chen Yun, and the party Central Committee also emphasized the importance of this.

The greatest difficulty faced on China's socialist modernization programme is the fact that members of leading organizations are 15 to 20 years older on average than before the "Cultural Revolution," and that a considerable number of cadres lack knowledge of culture, science and technology, and have not received formal professional training. Those acquainted with advanced techniques and managerial science are even fewer.

The party's political line can hardly be carried forward without the timely resolution of this problem. This is by no means an alarmist warning.

Crimes

Improving the ranks of cadres should begin with improvement of leading organizations. In the five years until the next party congress, we will strengthen leading organizations at all levels and lower their average age by five years. Among members of these leading organizations, middle-aged and young cadres will make up 70 percent of the total. Cadres with vocational school education and college education will be between 60 and 70 per cent. Astute, able, and popular people will act as the main executives.

The party Central Committee requires that cadres who are promoted be virtuous, talented, competent, courageous and in the prime of life. At the same time, it will never use those who took an active part in the counter-revolutionary activities of the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing cliques in the "Cultural Revolution," who were seriously politically deviated from party policy since the 3d plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee or who were involved in economic crimes.

Our human resources for improving the ranks of cadres are indicated by the following breakdown according to age, experience, and educational level: 11 million cadres 36 to 55 years old; 12 million who joined the revolution during the anti-Japanese war (1937-1945) or after, but before the "Cultural Revolution"; 11 million with a high school or higher education; 8.3 million professionals; 3.1 million college graduates and 38 million graduates of high schools and vocational schools since the founding of the People's Republic; 25 million intellectuals in state-run and collective-run enterprises.

Deng Xiaoping pointed out that the present organizational system and thinking of many cadres do not favour employing and promoting talented people. He called for party committees and organizational departments to correct their attitude, to improve the anachronistic personnel system and to go all out to discover, educate and promote talented people, and resolutely to struggle against the phenomenon of suppressing and persecuting them. The organizational department of the party Central Committee, despite its past work, has yet to further efforts in this respect.

In recent years, we have already set up 8,100 schools for party members and schools to train professional cadres with a total teaching staff of 100,000. A great number of cadre-training workshops have been sponsored by enterprises and other units. More than 200,000 cadres from positions higher than county leader received training between 1979 and 1981.

Although our cadre training has room to improve, we have made quite a good start. By the time the next national party congress convenes, the party will have made even greater progress in strengthening the ranks of cadres.

CHINA DAILY COMMENTS ON SOCIALIST MODERNIZATION

[By CHINA DAILY commentator: "The China-Type Socialism"]

[Text] The 33d birthday of the People's Republic of China finds her on the threshold of a brilliant career -- the career of a powerful, modernized socialist state.

After three decades of exploratory and experimental efforts to build a socialist country, after countless twists and turns, we Chinese Communists have finally found the right way to our goal -- a way that suits the special conditions of our country. The guide-lines for a new situation to be created in all fields of socialist modernization were laid down at the 12th national party congress held three weeks ago. Comrade Deng Xiaoping declared in his opening speech at the congress: "In our modernization programme, we must proceed from China's realities. To integrate the universal truth of Marxism with the concrete realities of China, blaze a path of our own and build socialism with Chinese characteristics -- this is the basic conclusion we have reached in summing up the long historical experience."

Comparison

In years before and, especially, after the "Cultural Revolution," many economists were prone to approach the question of "what road to follow" in building socialism in China by comparing the three existing types -- USSR, Yugoslav and Hungarian. Advocates of the USSR type were the least persuasive because of China's bitter experience in the 50s and its "leftist" aftermaths. To a certain extent and in some spheres of economic work, advocacy of the Yugoslav type has gained ground, and principles of "enterprise autonomy" as well as stress on the role of the market in regulating the national economy have been put into practice in the last few years. But an all-round copying of the Yugoslav type has always been guarded against both theoretically and in practice. A great deal of attention has lately been focused on the Hungarian type, which is considered as middle-of-the-road between the USSR and Yugoslav and hence adaptable to China.

All proponents of foreign prototypes for building socialism, however, share the same weakness of not proceeding from the realities of China herself.

The concrete realities of China are different from those in any of these countries; for that matter, she is different from any foreign country.

One point of departure is the unique contradiction between our huge population and insufficiency of arable land. All talk of enhancing productivity and raising the standard of living must necessarily give priority to agriculture. Facts have shown that a much fuller scope can be given to the public ownership of land by adopting a flexible, not rigid, policy; by encouraging varied, not unified, kinds of plantations and sideline trades, and by developing multiple forms of agricultural labour, in addition to popularizing scientific knowledge and advanced technique.

Economic Results

In industry, as well as agriculture, paramount importance must be given to steady and sustained increase of economic results. A serious lesson we have learned from the past is that what really matters are not mere figures but useful goods and services. A balanced economy, with a lower rate of accumulation and a higher rate of consumption, and proper proportions for various sectors of the national economy, as visualized in the 10-point programme announced by Premier Zhao Ziyang at the people's congress last December, was reaffirmed and incorporated into the political report passed by the 12th party congress.

China regards a high standard of culture and public virtue -- or in Chinese phraseology, spiritual civilization -- as a part of socialist modernization. While fully realizing the importance of a high level of material production as the basis of a socialist society, we maintain that a communist outlook, a selfless devotion to the ultimate goal of human endeavours and a code of comradely conduct to be observed in the relationship between men and men, between individuals and society are the inalienable characteristics of socialist (as opposed to capitalist) modernization. The importance attached to this aspect of China's modernization drive is noticeably demonstrated by the newly revised constitution of the Chinese Communist Party.

Self-Reliance

The third, but not the least, characteristic of China's socialist modernization is a spirit of independence and self-reliance. She counts primarily upon her own boundless natural resources and abundant labour power for building socialism. She seeks foreign funds and techniques under the principles of equality and mutual benefits, but she shuns the idea of grasping anything that belongs to another country. Now and for ever she declares that she will never become a hegemonist power. From this stems China's policy of peaceful co-existence with all countries and defence of international justice and world peace.

BEIJING RADIO ON BUILDING SOCIALIST DEMOCRACY

[Article by (Xu Bing) entitled: "Building a High Level of Socialist Democracy Is an Important Guarantee for Developing a Socialist Spiritual and Material Civilization"]

[Excerpts] Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out in his report at the 12th CPC National Congress that the steady development of socialist democracy provides the guarantee and support for the building of a socialist material and spiritual civilization. This sums up the experience of building a material and spiritual civilization since the founding of New China. If we deviate from socialist democracy, it would be impossible to smoothly build a material and spiritual civilization. This is due to the fact that:

1. The building of either a socialist material civilization or a socialist spiritual civilization requires a political situation characterized by stability and unity. To create a political situation of stability and unity, the democratic political system must be consolidated and the masses of the people must be in firm control of the destiny of the state.

2. The building of a material and spiritual civilization is an undertaking of the people in their millions. Only by putting socialist democracy into full play can we cultivate among the masses a sense of responsibility of being the masters of their own affairs in building a material and spiritual civilization.

3. We must rely on the ability and wisdom of the broad masses of the people. All correct principles, policies, measures and methods must be derived from the masses. In building a material and spiritual civilization, we will be invincible as long as we carry forward democracy and rely on the masses. Precisely, socialist democracy guarantees the people their right of being the masters of their own affairs in administering the state.

The draft revised constitution stipulates that the people have the right to administer the affairs of the country and its economic, cultural and social affairs, according to the provisions of the law and through various channels and in various forms. To build a high level of socialist democracy is precisely aimed at guaranteeing people's rights. Just as Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out in his report, socialist democracy should be extended to all spheres of life, political, economic, cultural and social. How can we acquire a better understanding of his words? We can discuss it in four issues:

1. Develop democracy in the political sphere of life. Political right is a most fundamental right of the people. What is being implemented in our country at present is a system of indirect democracy, namely, the people electing their own representatives to administer the affairs of the country. The people's political right finds expression, first of all, in democratic elections.

In our country, the people exercise their right of administering the affairs of the country through the people's congresses at all levels. A most important point in developing democracy in political life is to consolidate the system of the people's congresses. To safeguard the authority of the people's congresses, everyone must unconditionally obey and abide by the law, decrees and decisions formulated. The people's deputies on the other hand must maintain close contact with the voters, accept their supervision and reflect their aspirations. All state organs and party organizations must practice democratic centralism and must uphold the principle that the minority is subordinate to the majority.

It was pointed out in the report at the 12th CPC National Congress that whether there is normal political life in the party -- above all in the Central Committee and other leading bodies of the party at different levels -- is indeed a fundamental issue bearing on the destiny of the party and the state. Upholding democratic centralism is a fundamental way of normalizing democratic life in the party. We must therefore implement the principle of democratic centralism that the individual is subordinate to the organization, the minority is subordinate to the majority; the lower level is subordinate to the higher level and the entire membership is subordinate to the Central Committee.

Although what we now practice is basically a system of indirect all-important issues in the political life of the country. Not long ago, we distributed the draft of the revised constitution to the people throughout the country for discussion. This is a good way of developing direct socialist democracy. We must draw and encourage the masses of the people to participate in the political life of the country through various forms of activities and welcome suggestions and criticisms voiced by the citizens concerning state organs and their personnel.

2. Develop democracy in the economic sphere of life. Our factories, enterprises, rural people's communes, farms, forestry centers, fisheries, grazing lands and so forth are all forms of socialist economic organizations. The character of socialist economy determines the people's right to manage production, circulation, exchange, distribution and other economic activities.

The draft revised constitution stipulates: Workers and staff members of state enterprises through the congresses of workers and staff members and other channels, in accordance with provisions of the law. The draft revised constitution also stipulates: Units of the collective economy shall practice democratic management according to provisions of the law; their managerial personnel shall be elected and removed and decisions on major issues concerning enterprise management shall be taken by the entire body of their workers and staff members.

The people should directly manage the economic activities of their respective factories, enterprises, communes and production brigades and teams. The people should also participate in managing the economic activities of their respective counties and provinces and even the entire country.

3. Develop democracy in the cultural sphere of life. By cultural life we mean scientific research, cultural and art activities. Democracy is the prerequisite of scientific development. Science is the seeking of truth and it involves the participation of millions of people. We must promote scientific democracy and allow the existence of different schools of thought, allowing them to expound their respective academic views and to state their arguments and allowing them to contend, debate, criticize and learn from one another.

The existence of many schools and lively debates in the field of science is a sign of scientific prosperity. Marx said that truth is determined through debate. Science is averse most to the practice of what one person says goes and to the use of administrative power to suppress one school of thought while supporting another. Science requires a hundred schools of thought to contend and a democratic atmosphere.

Democracy should also be promoted in cultural and art activities. It is absolutely correct for our party to make "letting a hundred flowers blossom" be the fundamental principle for developing literature and art. In literary and art creations, we should encourage all forms and styles of literature and art to develop freely.

4. Develop democracy in the social sphere of life and encourage self-management of community affairs by the masses at the grassroots level. Community affairs among the masses at the grassroots level can be very concrete, complicated as well as trivial. They can only be properly managed by relying on the masses and through organs of self-management by the masses. Practice of many years has proved that the neighborhood committees in urban areas and village committees in rural areas are very good self-management organizations for the masses in handling community affairs at the grassroots level.

At present, the development of neighborhood committees and village committees is very uneven in our country, and in some places they have not yet been formed or are in a paralyzed state. Primary party organizations and organs of political power at the grassroots level in all localities should help the masses establish and improve neighborhood committees and village committees and bring into play their role in managing community affairs.

In short, a high level of socialist democracy means democracy that is perfect in form and rich in content. Under such a democratic system, the people have the right to manage the state, all types of enterprises, production organizations, economic undertakings, scientific and cultural institutions and all aspects of a material and spiritual civilization. While we strive to develop democracy, all our measures must help build a material and spiritual civilization, consolidate the socialist system and promote the smooth advance of the socialist cause. On no account will anyone be allowed to carry out activities that endanger or undermine socialism. Only by exercising their democratic rights in accordance with the law will the people be able to really promote the development of a socialist material and spiritual civilization.

BEIJING RADIO ARTICLE ON FOREIGN INFLUENCE

[Article by (Peng Xianghu): "Persist in Opening to the Outside and Opposing Corruption by Capitalist Ideas")

[Excerpts] Since the 3d plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee, our country has pursued a policy of opening to the outside world, putting an end to the past situation in which the country was closed to international intercourse. This has enhanced economic and technical exchanges between China and foreign countries, invigorated our economy and produced marked results. Practice has proved that this policy of the party Central Committee is absolutely correct.

In his report to the 12th party congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang further affirmed the policy's correctness, pointing out: It is our strategic principle to carry out the policy of opening to the outside world and expanding economic and technological exchanges with foreign countries in accordance with the principles of equality and mutual benefit. At the same time, in the light of the new situation that has emerged since the adoption of the policy of opening to the outside world, he stressed: While pursuing the policy of opening to the outside, we must guard against and firmly resist the corrosion of capitalist ideas, and we must guard against worshiping things foreign or fawning on foreigners.

In our socialist modernization drive, why must we persist in the policy of opening to the outside world? As we all know, the revolution and construction in our country are not isolated from the rest of the world. In our socialist modernization drive, the most fundamental thing is to rely on the hard work of all our people. At the same time, however, we also need international cooperation, which includes mutual assistance among countries as well as economic and technical exchanges. In today's world, no country or nation can isolate itself from the rest of the world. To survive and develop, all countries and nations must absorb advanced science and culture from other countries and nations and learn from their advanced experiences.

Some comrades feel that since ours is a socialist country, we should not have economic or technical dealings with the capitalist countries. This is wrong. Our country is still rather backward economically. Compared with advanced world levels, we are falling rather far behind economically and technically. If we want to achieve the four modernizations in the shortest possible period and catch up with and overtake the advanced countries, it is all the more important for us to expand economic and technical exchanges with foreign countries.

At present, our country has developed economic and trade relations with more than 170 countries and areas in the world. This is a favorable condition for our modernization.

Some comrades are worried that opening to the outside and expanding economic and technical exchanges with foreign countries will adversely affect our country's self-reliant capacity. Such worry is unwarranted. There is no contradiction between the policy of opening to the outside world and the principle of independence and self-reliance. The principle of independence and self-reliance has been, still is and will continue to be our basic stand. It is the fundamental principle we must always follow.

However, our opening to the outside world and expanding economic and technical exchanges with foreign countries today are based on the principle of equality and mutual benefit and the premise of causing no harm to the national economy. The purpose is to learn and adopt advanced science and technology from foreign countries and make the latest achievements of others our starting point, thus accelerating our own scientific and technological development, strengthening our equipment for modernization and enhancing our national economic construction. This is not contradictory to the principle of independence and self-reliance; it is necessary for increasing our national strength and capacity for independence and self-reliance.

Of course, we must not look at only the advantages in opening to the outside world and expanding economic and technical exchanges with foreign countries. We must also recognize that in the process, it is inevitable that many new situations and new problems will emerge, that there will be new struggles and that some negative things will unavoidably be brought to us.

In addition to international reactionary forces, which are carrying out all kinds of activities to undermine us, hostile elements opposed to the socialist system at home are also taking the opportunity to sabotage and make trouble. The corrosive effect of capitalist ideas on us is becoming more and more pronounced because of this new situation.

Numerous facts exposed in the intensifying struggle against serious crimes in the economic political and cultural spheres show the serious harm done by corrosive capitalist ideas to our party, country and people. We must fully understand this and must not lower our guard.

Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out in his opening speech at the 12th party congress: We will unswervingly follow a policy of opening to the outside world and will actively increase exchanges with foreign countries on the basis of equality and mutual benefit. At the same time, we will keep a clear head, firmly resist corrosion by decadent ideas from abroad and never permit the bourgeois way of life to spread in our country.

We must severely deal with the sabotage activities of hostile elements and forces at home and abroad. We must wage a resolute struggle against corrosion by capitalist ideas.

In the light of the new situation in the new historical period, the 12th party congress pointed out to the whole party: In the new period of the development of our socialist cause, we must attend to two aspects both in ideology and in action. On the one hand, we must persist in the policy of opening to the outside as well as in our policies of invigorating the economy domestically, and on the other, we must resolutely strike at the grave criminal activities in the economic, political and cultural spheres that endanger socialism. It would be wrong to attend only to the latter aspect and be skeptical about the former, and it would be dangerous to stress the former aspect while neglecting the latter.

We must deeply understand and firmly implement this principle of the party, seriously attend to both these two aspects and properly combine opening to the outside world with opposing corruption by capitalist ideas so that our socialist modernization will advance successfully along the correct path.

BA YI ON PLA ROLE IN DEFENDING NATIONAL INTEREST

[Text] Six years ago, on 6 October 1976, our army, in accordance with instructions from party and military leaders, arrested the gang of four and their running dogs in one stroke, and put an end to their menace to the whole party and the entire country.

Crushing the gang of four was undoubtedly one of our army's greatest contributions. This has once again demonstrated the PLA's traditional allegiance to the people's cause, its acceptance of the party's correct leadership and its most active part in the state's political affairs. From now on, the commanders and fighters of the whole army will, as always, carry forward this glorious PLA tradition.

Historical facts prove that, after suppressing a large number of party, government and military cadres, the gang of four immediately began their wild usurpation of the leadership in the party, government and military departments. In those days, the military and the military leaders alone became the only obstacle to the gang of four's usurpation of nationwide power. The actions taken by Marshal He Long, Marshal Ye Jianying, Huang Yongsheng of the Guangzhou PLA units, Xu Shiyou of the Nanjing PLA units, Song Renqiong of the Shenyang PLA units, Li Jingquan of the Chengdu PLA units, Chen Zaidao of the Wuhan PLA units, Wang Enmao of the Xinjiang Military Region, and Yang Chengwu, [words indistinct] and Yu Lijin of the Beijing PLA units, as well as other ranking officers of our army, are ironclad evidence. In those days, they occasionally requested Lin Biao's instructions, and at other times, they took decisive actions and ordered troops to deal relentless blows at the gang of four and their running dogs in various localities to stop the rebels' brutalities of beating, smashing, snatching, confiscating property, arresting and killing, thus protecting the interests of the state and the people.

After the gang of four established their (?feudal) fascist rule, they began to alter our country's established foreign policy and collude with the U.S. imperialists, first covertly and then overtly. Under such circumstances, [words indistinct] Lin Biao, Huang Yongsheng, Wu Faxian, Li Zuopeng, Qiu Huizuo and other leaders in our army bravely presented their different opinions at meetings of the Political Bureau and the Military Commission of the CPC Central Committee. Arguing strongly on just grounds, they explained that China must by no means neglect the danger of the U.S. imperialists' worldwide aggression, much less abandon our principle on the Taiwan issue and connive at the status of two Chinas. It is not hard to see that the military became the greatest obstacle in stopping the gang of four from enforcing their internal and external policies, which brought calamity to the country and the people.

After framing Lin Biao by fabricating false charges against him, and after throwing Huang Yongsheng and other leaders of our army in jail, the gang of four became more unbridled in carrying out their fascist dictatorship at home and in pushing their traitorous and capitulationist foreign policy. Fortunately, darkness, no matter how long it may last, must give way to dawn. On 6 October 1976, our army, in accordance with instructions from party and military leaders, arrested the gang of four in one stroke and crushed their feudal fascist rule. In this connection, Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out: History has proved that the party, the state and the people can trust our army. Our army should play an active role in our state's political life. This is a very correct assessment. Our army has always been an armed force dedicated to serving the people, and it has always accepted the party's correct leadership. If necessary, our army will, as what it did on 6 October 1976, decisively and firmly safeguard the cause of the partyand the people and defend the interests of the state and the people.

ANHUI'S ZHOU ZIJIAN INSPECTS FLOODED AREAS

[Excerpts] According to ANHUI RIBAO, Zhou Zijian, acting first secretary of the Anhui Provincial CPC Committee and governor of Anhui; (Wang Yuzhua), standing committee member of the provincial CPC committee; and other comrades went to flood-stricken areas in Fengtai County on 1 and 2 October to visit commune members and the masses who have suffered from flood and waterlogging. They hailed the commune members and masses for giving full play to the communist spirit of taking the overall situation into consideration in the antiflood struggle and encouraged them to strengthen their confidence, step up their efforts in production by following the guidelines laid down by the 12th CPC National Congress, overcome difficulties caused by flood and waterlogging and win good harvests next year.

In face of the problems in restoring production by the people's own efforts and other problems brought up by the masses for prompt solution, Comrade Zhou Zijian and Comrade (Wang Yuzhua) immediately contacted the leading comrades of the Huainan Municipal CPC Committee and the Fengtai County CPC Committee to earnestly study and tackle these problems. Comrade Zhou Zijian pointed out: Emphasis must be placed on restoring production by the people's own efforts. Currently, the most important task is to drain water and provide the commune members with ample seed. This is the key link in restoring production by the people's own efforts.

He also pointed out: In restoring production by the people's own efforts, it is necessary to implement the guidelines laid down by the 12th CPC National Congress and to inspire the masses to overcome difficulties. It is essential to instill communist ideas into the minds of the cadres and masses so that they do as good a job in relief work as they did in the antiflood struggle. The broad masses of party members and cadres must impose strict demands on themselves and play their exemplary role well in doing relief work. The production responsibility systems have already demonstrated their superiority in the antiflood struggle. They will also play their role well in helping the people restore production through their own efforts. So long as the party committees and people's governments at all levels carry out their work well and strengthen their leadership, they will definitely be able to help people restore production and resume their normal life in the flood-stricken areas.

MA XINGYUAN ON FUJIAN'S ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

OW041956 Fuzhou Fujian Provincial Service in Mandarin 1120 GMT 30 Sep 82

Then, he said: Our strategic emphasis and measures are: First, we should develop agriculture as our groundwork. The leadership at all levels should pay attention to grain production and permanently maintain the present area of grain crops. At the same time, we should make great efforts to develop a diversified economy and build eight major production bases. Second, we should develop mountain areas and marine resources. Third, we should actively develop the processing of food products because Fujian has abundant natural resources and plenty local and indigenous products. Fourth, we should develop machine-building and electronics industries. Fifth, we should create conditions for developing the petrochemical industry.

Comrade Ma Xingyuan said: The above-mentioned emphasis calls for us to give first consideration to energy, primarily electric power, and to give priority to the development of hydroelectric power. In transport, we should step up the transformation of the Yingtan-Xiamen railroad and build a railroad between Zhang Ping and Quanzhou. Our next step is to strive for the construction of railroads between Xiangtang and Longyan and between Ganzhou and Longyuan. Moreover, we should develop maritime transport. Scientific and technological education is also our strategic emphasis. We must have a number of energetic and specialized young and middle-aged persons working at the first line. We should attach particular importance to the development of the applied sciences.

Comrade Ma Xingyuan emphasized: At present, Fujian's population growth rate is 25 percent higher than the nation's average population growth rate. We must bring it under strict control. We must do a good job in family planning to lower the population growth rate.

JIANGXI DISCIPLINE OFFICIAL ON PARTY STYLE

OW041117 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 27 Sep 82

[Excerpts] In his report to the 12th party congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang said that the rectification of party style and the consolidation of party organizations is a task of primary importance to the party and that to achieve a fundamental turn for the better in the style of our party, the Central Committee has decided on an overall rectification of party style and consolidation of party organizations, which will proceed in stages and groups over a period of 3 years beginning from the latter half of 1983.

This is a serious task for the whole party.

It is true that impurities in ideology, style and organization still exist within the party. How can we achieve a fundamental turn for the better in the style of the party? In his report to the 12th party congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out that the key link in accomplishing this work is ideological education throughout the party. I think this ideological education should include the following:

First, it is necessary to carry out education in party spirit. In the final analysis, party spirit means serving the people wholeheartedly and dedicating our whole lives to the realization of communism. Party spirit determines party style. The style of a political party in power determines its very survival.

Second, party committees must pay attention to ideological education and earnestly work for it. The number one and number two men must personally take part in it, and the other members of the leading body must follow them so that the leadership at every level will take the lead in making unremitting efforts to rectify the style of the party.

Third, it is necessary to pay attention to both political and economic problems, adopting (?effective measures) to handle outstanding problems. The leadership should take the lead and all party members should act in concert in handling the big and serious cases.

It is necessary to grasp typical cases and to solve problems one by one. It is necessary to adopt comprehensive measures to effectively check unhealthy tendencies, persist in the struggle against corruption by capitalist ideas and deal resolute blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field. This is an important step in rectifying the party style.

Fourth, it is necessary to strictly enforce party discipline. When party members violate party discipline and state law, it is imperative to uphold the principle that everyone is equal before party discipline and state law. The higher one's position is, party discipline and state law must be enforced more strictly.

Fifth, it is necessary to resolutely remove the three types of people. [People who rose to prominence during the Cultural Revolution by following Lin Biao, Jiang Qing and their ilk in "rebellion"; people who are seriously factionalist in their ideas; and people who indulge in beating, smashing and looting]

IDEOLOGICAL EDUCATION URGED IN SHANDONG

SK051037 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 4 Oct 82

[Text] Under the unified leadership of the party committees at all levels in various localities, the people's armed forces departments at all levels throughout the province have actively conducted education on communist ideals, enabling the militiamen throughout the province to play an imortant part in building the two civilizations. In the past 3 years, all grassroots militia organizations in the province have universally established militia homes for youths and the system of giving one political class every day, enabling the political work of militia to become unprecedentedly lively. In conducting political education, all units have regarded the building of socialist spiritual civilization as important and, on the basis of fostering socialist ideals, organized the militia to study Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, the four basic principles of the party and the line, principles and policies defined since the third plenary session, enabling the broad masses of militiamen to enhance their political consciousness. A large number of advanced models have emerged, including those who are ready to take up the cudgel for a just cause and to sacrifice their lives, who do not pocket money they find and who find it a pleasure to help others. Among them are Comrade (Jin Zhongshan), a Lei Feng-type good militiaman who showed no fear in an hour of danger and died gloriously in maintaining social order; Comrade (Li Zhaohui), a platoon leader and a Lei Feng-type good militiaman who sacrificed his life gloriously in voluntarily rush-repairing a sluice gate; Comrade (Zhang Jisheng), a good militiaman who sacrificed himself in the prime of life in saving a drowning child; and several thousands of learn-from-Lei Feng groups that have worked actively in the urban and rural areas and have done numerous good deeds for the masses of people.

The broad masses of militiamen have applied their revolutionary zeal, which has been radiated in the course of building the spiritual civilization, to the struggle to build and safeguard the four modernizations and have fought in the van and served as vanguards, bringing into full play their role as a shock team.

This August, a tremendous flood peak occurred in the Huanghe River section in our province. Some 220,000 militiamen of various counties along the Huanghe River bank actively plunged into the struggle against floods and to deal with the emergency and made contributions to ensuring that the flood peak safely entered the sea.

ZHEJIANG'S TIE YING ON STUDYING CPC DOCUMENTS

OW041149 Hangzhou Zhejiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 30 Sep 82

[Excerpts] The enlarged Sixth Plenary Session of the Sixth Zhejiang Provincial CPC Committee was held in Hangzhou from 20-30 September. On the morning of 30 September, Comrade Xue Ju transmitted the guidelines of the 1st Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee. Comrade Tie Ying then gave a speech on further studying the documents of the 12th party congress and on present work arrangements.

Comrade Tie Ying said: Our recent study was not very long in duration but great in achievements. After reading the documents from beginning to end in our recent study, we focused our attention on several key points and carried out in-depth discussions to increase our understanding. The key points are: 1. A great historic change; 2. The strategic goal and guiding ideology of economic construction; 3. Socialist spiritual civilization with communist ideology at its core; 4. Strengthening socialist democracy and legal system; and 5. Party building. The recent study was only a preliminary one, but it has laid a good foundation for the whole province to further study and implement the guidelines of the 12th party congress.

On the current work, Comrade Tie Ying said: With the spirit of the 12th party congress, we should firmly grasp well current industrial and agricultural production and work in other fields.

1. We should pay attention to organizing cadres and the masses to study the documents of the 12th party congress as the primary task. Party committees at and above the country level should continue to study in depth in light of the actual situation. Every country should train cadres of communes, enterprises and institutions, and party and government organizations in stages and in groups. It is necessary to propagate in many ways the guidelines of the 12th party congress among the masses of workers, peasants and residents. All localities should further train party members on a rotational basis.

2. Economic construction is the focus of our work and must never be neglected. We must not only pay attention to present industrial and agricultural production and fulfill this year's economic plans, but we must also make preparations for next year's industrial and agricultural production.

3. It is necessary to intensify the struggle against criminal activities undermining socialism in the economic and other spheres. Leading comrades of prefectural, municipal and country party committees and provincial-level departments should personally attend to this struggle.

4. It is necessary to strengthen the leading bodies and properly solve the question of cooperation between old and new cadres and the succession of the new from the old.

Comrade Tie Ying said in conclusion: After returning to your posts, you should continue to organize well the propagation and study of the documents of the 12th party congress so that the guidelines of the 12th party congress will be known to every household, take root in the hearts of the people and become a powerful motive force propelling work in all fields forward; thus, new successes will be achieved in creating a new situation under the correct leadership of the party Central Committee.

FOREIGN MINISTER ON FOSTERING U.S. RELATIONS

OW060345 Taipei CNA in English 0329 GMT 6 Oct 82

[Text] Taipei, Oct. 6 (CNA) -- The Foreign Ministry will enhance contacts with the United States Government and their people including congressmen in order to further promote the substantive relations between the two countries, Foreign Minister Chu Fu-sung said Tuesday.

The government will also negotiate with the American authorities, hoping to reopen another six offices in the United States, Minister Chu said.

Answering an interpellation at the Legislative Yuan meeting in the morning, Minister Chu said during the past year, the Chinese Communists, using a large amount of money and manpower, launched a large-scale international peace tactic in the United States. Their aims are to stop the U.S. Government selling weaponry to the Republic of China, he added.

After the Washington-Peiping joint communique was issued last August, many American congressmen expressed strong support for this nation, he said, adding, strengthening contacts with the United States congressmen will be one of urgent taks of the Foreign Ministry in the days ahead.

The ministry will seek assistance from overseas Chinese, scholars and students abroad and foreign friends to help make the contact mission successful, he said.

Before the two nations suspended their diplomatic relations in 1979, there were 15 embassy and consulates in the United States. Now only nine offices have resumed operations. The ministry will actively negotiate with the U.S. Government to reopen the other six offices there.

BUSINESSMEN ARRESTED ON AID-TO-COMMUNISTS CHARGE

[Text] Taipei, Oct. 6 (CNA) -- Two Chinese businessmen here were arrested for conspiring to help the Chinese Communists develop their electronics industry with the Republic of China's machinery and technical know-how, the Taiwan Garrison Command announced Tuesday.

The two were identified as Tu Shao-hsi, a resident of Thailand, and Chang Jung-yi, 39, general manager of two electronics companies.

Tu was formerly a member of the Communist Youth Pioneers in his teenage years. He went to Thailand in 1971, and since then he has been selling telephone supplies to the mainland.

In the past two years, he has made eight trips to the mainland to offer help to develop Communist China's electronics industry. In December last year, Tu came to Taiwan and talked Chang into offering machinery and technical know-how to Communist China for the development of its electronics industry.

When Tu returned to Thailand, Chang gave him a sketch he had drawn for a projected electronics plant at Anyang, Honan. In March this year, Tu went to Shanghai to discuss details with the head of the Anyang plant. It was decided that four workmen would be recruited in Hong Kong to be sent to Chang's company to receive technical training before being sent to Anyang.

Chang also promised to visit Anyang personally to help set up the electronics factory.

The Taiwan Garrison Command made the arrests after receiving a tip-off on the conspiracy. The two are still under investigation, the command said.

AFP CITES 'MILITARY SOURCE' ON PRC ROCKET TEST

[Text] Taipei, Oct. 5 (AFP) -- China's announcement that it would test-fire a carrier rocket during October 7-26 was aimed at Taiwan, the United States and the Soviet Union, in a bid to kill three birds with one political stone, a Nationalist Chinese analyst observed today.

A military source told AFP that Beijing had originally planned to launch the missile in late September after the end of the 12th National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party, which was supposed to strengthen China's current leadership [word indistinct] ended in disputes among the delegates.

The launching was subsequently rescheduled for October as if to coincide and "steal the spotlight" from two important celebrations in Taiwan, its National Day (Double Tenth) on October 10 and the October 25 Restoration (from Japan to China) Day.

It was also aimed at demonstrating Beijing's displeasure over the August 17 joint communique with the United States in which Washington and Beijing each its own position on U.S. arms sales to Taiwan without showing a common accord, the source, who did not want to be identified, said. [sentence as received]

The source further observed that the Chinese Communists also wanted to use the missile launching as a show of strength during their current talks with the Soviets in Beijing on state, though not party, relations.

The source said he was puzzled by the announcement of a 20-day period for the launching, which might spark complaints from international shipping companies and airlines who normally crossed the target zone.

China announced on October 1 that it would test-fire the missile in an area some 100 kilometers (60 miles) east of Zhejiang Province and 300 kms (190 m) north of Taiwan, which, the nationalists say is a shipping route.

The source said that the Beijing regime deliberately had designated the area as its launching site, "in an obvious attempt to threaten our national bastion (Taiwan)."

The same source disagreed with Western analysts who held that the missile could be fired from Lop Nor in Xinjiang Province to travel some 3,000 kms (2,160 m) on an intermediate range ballistic missile (IRBM) course.

Instead, he said, it would most likely be fired from a submarine to avoid failures in its imperfect guiding system as shown in previous cases.

PAI HSING VIEWS UK-PRC TALKS ON HONG KONG

HK051024 Hong Kong PAI HSING in Chinese No 33 1 Oct 82 p 5

[Article by Chen Chisun [7115 2765 5549]: "After Mrs Thatcher's Visit to China"]

[Text] A Sign of Frustrations

At noon on 24 September 1982, after talking with CPC strongman Deng Xiaoping, British Prime Minister Thatcher fell after losing her footing as she walked down the stone steps in front of the Great Hall of the People in Beijing. She propped herself up on both hands and members of her party hastened to help her up. Fortunately, she did not sustain an injury.

However, this is an omen which indicates that the road leading to Beijing is not an easy one. The year 1997 is a sign of frustrations. Even the Iron Lady could not but meet with a small frustration. The communists may criticize this opinion as an absurd idealist inference. But in keeping with natural law, mental imbalance can lead to physical imbalance. Why can't we say that Mrs Thatcher was distracted due to her anxious state of mind caused by the talks?

The Factor That Did Not Bring Stability

The joint Sino-British statement obviously shows the differences between the sides. In this statement, as Hong Kong people say, each side said its own words. The CPC particularly noted: "The Chinese Government's position on the recovery of the sovereignty over the whole region of Hong Kong is unequivocal and known to all." But Mrs Thatcher, while speaking of the sovereignty problem, stressed the treaties. This showed that the Iron Lady did not agree with the Chinese position concerning sovereignty over the whole region of Hong Hong. For the British, it is certain that sovereignty over the land under the treaty on the New Territories signed in 1898 will eventually belong to China. But Hong Kong Island and South Kowloon were ceded to Britain by the Chinese Government in those days and this is a historical fact, even though the treaties were unequal.

On the other hand, based on her current situation, Mrs Thatcher could by no means hastily accept this point. If she agreed with the Chinese claim to sovereignty over Hong Kong, the British authorities in Hong Kong would have to pack up and quit the next day. In fact, the British would not have any mental preparation. Therefore, both sides could merely find a common point -- "maintaining the prosperity and stability of Hong Kong" -- and agreed to start talks through diplomatic channels following the visit.

Although the joint statement includes words such as "both sides held far-reaching and friendly talks on the future of Hong Kong," it can be seen from the simple contents and meticulous wording of the statement that the atmosphere of the talks was not as good as expected.

What people originally expected was merely a notice to reassure the public. But now it is evident that even such a limited document could not be attained. As a matter of fact, nothing could help relax the anxiety in Hong Kong and keep things stable.

Sir Edward, the present Hong Kong governor, did make a scientific interpretation. Before he took part in the talks, he repeatedly reminded Hong Kong residents that they should not expect too much of Mrs Thatcher's visit to Beijing. The solutions that would be consistent with the desires of all parties could not be found within a short time and patience is necessary.

Just as people could not expect Deng Xiaoping to make known his decision on the future of Hong Kong -- "recovering the sovereignty and maintaining the prosperity" -- as early as last summer, so they could not expect Mrs Thatcher's visit to Beijing to produce a joint statement that could, more or less, comfort the 5 million people in Hong Kong.

Set Up a Model for Taiwan

The main reason for this is that the Chinese authorities are excessively emotional in dealing with this problem. When receiving 12 leftist personages from Hong Kong on 15 July 1982 in the Great Hall of the People in Beijing, Deng Xiaoping said: If we accept the status quo under the unequal treaties and fail to recover sovereignty over Hong Kong, we will not be able to justify ourselves before our ancestry as well as future generations.

Besides the cardinal principle of the nation, Beijing obviously has another idea. That is, it hopes to set up a model for solving the Taiwan problem. When putting forth the three major tasks which must be accomplished in the 1980's, Deng Xiaoping put reunification in an important position. For this reason, Mrs Thatcher should at least be informed of the Chinese principle concerning the sovereignty of Hong Kong, even if she could not immediately agree to the Chinese position.

However, for the British, everything must be handled according to law. They see the treaties as the legal bases of their position. Only through negotiations can these treaties be abrogated. No hasty actions can be taken in solving this problem.

As a result, both sides could only issue a joint statement which could not have been more simple.

That is how dialectics in things plays jokes on people. Who would have thought that the simplest words would be used to account for the most complicated problem.

Unable To Explain the Matter to Hong Kong People

Anyhow, it is obviously impossible to explain the matter in these simple words to the 5 million people in Hong Kong. It can be expected that the confidence of investors will become increasingly difficult to maintain. Economic depression will become increasingly serious while red and pink capitalists will more and more frequently spread information in an attempt to boost the people's confidence in Hong Kong. But, at the same time, they will speed up the transfer of their assets to the United States, Canada and other countries.

Rich people are eager to make preparations for emigration. Some mass media have also started to open new markets in other countries. Students in universities will be more and more interested in Chinese affairs. Scholars who know something about the proletarian dictatorship will consider their way out. People who are patriotic hope to create a new world and wonder if they can't try to attain a set of regulations for local autonomy. In their opinion, some miracles may be created if Hong Kong is administered by Hong Kong people.

People who take a pro-Taiwan position and hate communists will plan to buy residential property in Yangmingshan, together with a cemetery plot, because this is a custom in Taiwan. There are also some people who find they will be in their seventies or even eighties when the day comes and they probably will have gone to see God. So what does it matter what flag will be hoisted in Hong Kong in those days?

Perhaps some people will criticize these pessimistic arguments as totally groundless. If only the future could prove that Hong Kong under the five-star red flag would still be full of vitality!

BANK OF CHINA RUMOR SENDS MARKET SOARING

HK060205 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 6 Oct 82 p 1

["Bank of China Rumour Aids Rebound -- Market Shakes Off 1997 Blues"]

[Text] A widespread rumour that the Bank of China was to offer 20-year mortgages -- so underpinning Hong Kong's future -- may have been nothing more than a straw in the wind.

But it proved a timely tonic for the stock market yesterday.

The Hang Seng Index leapt 65.73 points to 881.96 as buyers flooded back into the market for the first time in six days.

Responding to the Hong Kong dollar's strengthening in the foreign exchange market, leading stocks rebounded from lower levels by mid-morning. By the mid-day close the index had rallied 22.02 points and went on to gain more ground.

Few brokers were yesterday prepared to take a view on whether the remarkable turnaround was any more than a false dawn. With confidence still fragile in the wake of last week's huge sell-off, the market could break either way, they said.

Gaining most were the blue chips which had borne the brunt of selling over the past few days. Since last week the index has plunged more than 280 points to a two-year low of 816.23 on the loss of confidence over talks on Hong Kong's future.

As one broker put it: "A few well-chosen words from Beijing could turn this market on a dime."

The rumour also boosted the Hong Kong dollar after it hit a new low of 6.72 against the greenback yesterday.

Another rumour had it that the Bank of China had sold a large quantity of U.S. dollars to prop up the local unit.

The rumours took effect in both the Forex and stock markets late in the afternoon, despite denials by all the parties concerned, and for a change, the effect was positive.

Against the strong greenback, the Hong Kong dollar recovered from its all-time low reached in the morning (6.72) to trade at 6.61-63 by 3 pm, then firmed to 6.55 an hour later, before reaching its day's high of 6.48. It retreated slightly to 6.49 at 6 pm.

But its effective index had little to gain from the rumours' psychological boost. It plunged to 83.1 at the close from the previous finish at 84.6.

Perhaps a more substantial form of support was the government's sale of tens of millions of U.S. dollars in favour of the local unit, one dealer noted.

WEN WEI PO INTERVIEWS PRC SPECIAL ZONE OFFICIAL

[Interview report by Guang Yu [1684 1342]: "The Office for Special Zones Under the Charge of Gu Mu"]

[Text] Three staff members of the Office in Charge of Special Zone Affairs, which is subordinate to the State Council, recently paid a visit to several places in Guangdong to carry out an investigation. This reporter was lucky enough to conduct an interview with one of them before they left Guangzhou for Beijing. During the interview, we touched on such issues as the nature, structure and plans of the office and the work division of the four special economic zones in China. The following are the contents of the interview:

Reporter: Is the Office in Charge of Special Zone Affairs, which is subordinate to the State Council, a newly established organ?

Answer: This office was formerly a subordinate unit of the Administrative Commission on Import and Export Affairs, under the Ministry of Economic Relations with Foreign Countries and the Ministry of Foreign Trade. At the beginning of this year, it was officially put under the State Council and became a unit directly under the charge of State Councillor Gu Mu. The office now consists of eight staff members.

Functions of the Office

Reporter: What are the main functions of the office?

Answer: 1) investigating and studying the policies being carried out in the special zone; 2) relaying the practical situation in the zones to the higher levels and communicating between the higher and lower levels; and 3) helping the local authorities of the zones in solving some pending problems.

Reporter: Some people hold that the new special zone office is an overlapping organization. Is this so?

Answer: It is undeniable that there are overlapping organizations in some places in our country. Building the special economic zones is a new matter for China. But facts show they are playing a greater part in economic construction. In order to promote mutual exchanges of experience between the four special economic zones in China, it is necessary to set up a special unit under the direct guidance of higher levels to take the whole situation into account and plan accordingly.

Reporter: It is said that the scope of the Shenzhen Special Zone has been expanded. Is that true?

Answer: Compared with the others, the Shenzhen Special Zone, which now covers 327.5 square miles, is the biggest.

Work Division Between the Four Special Zones

Reporter: Would you mind explaining the work division between the special zones?

Answer: The special zones in Shenzhen and Zhuhai will both be developed into comprehensive areas of industry, tourism, agriculture and animal breeding. But industry will be the main body.

Meanwhile, the Huli Special Zone in Xiamen and the Longhu Special Zone in Shantou will be mainly developed for processing work. As the two places have only been industralised to a certain extent, it is also necessary to usher in some foreign funds to transform the old enterprises. Most of their products will be exported.

Reporter: Among the special zones in Shenzhen, Zhuhai, Shantou and Xiamen, is it true that Xiamen and Shantou offer better preferential treatment to foreign businessmen?

Answer: Shenzhen and Zhuhai are geographically favorable because of their proximity to Hong Kong and Macao, while Xiamen and Shantou are a bit far. Owing to different circumstances in each of the special zones, Xiamen and Shantou must strive to create a better and sound investment climate for attracting foreign businessmen to invest in factories.

Special Zones Have Achieved Initial Results

Reporter: It has been 2 years and more since the initiation of the plan for building special zones in China. What's your view of the zones?

Answer: Although the special zones still have many shortcomings, achievements have still been made there. Now, at least we know how to build a special economic zone in a "Chinese style." The policy of opening up to the outside world was begun in China not long ago. The special economic zone is a newly emerged thing for us. More efforts are now needed to explore the issue, sum up experiences and make improvements.

In the Huli Special Zone in Xiamen, basic projects of capital construction are still underway but the building of the new Dongdu harbor and a medium-sized international airport is progressing very fast. The airport is expected to be open to air traffic at the beginning of 1983. Rapid progress has also been made in the Zhuhai Special Zone. Both zones are being built mainly by self-reliance in addition to some loans from the state. In the past, no big projects could be carried out without state investments. From this point of view, we can say we have achieved amazing results.

Reporter: In the past 2 years or so, has any experience been gained in building the special zones?

Answer: Due to a lack of experience, we first had to take examples from special zones in foreign countries. We took some steps similar to those in foreign countries and some steps were adopted according to special circumstances in China. Through practices over a period of time, it has been proved that it is right to levy a 15 percent income tax.

Reporter: What has been done in the special zones during the past 2 years and more?

Answer: We stress the creations of a sound investment climate. This also includes the work of establishing laws and regulations and making them more concrete in the special zones so that foreign investors can do everything accordingly.

Reporter: What work plans has your office drawn up for this year and the coming year?

Answer: At present, we are concentrating our efforts on investigation in the hope of doing our job on a solid basis. Our office is not specialized in legislative work. But I can tell you that a court of arbitration will soon be set up in the special zones so that foreign investors will feel at ease about their investments.

CHENG MING ON PRC DETENTION OF HONG KONG EDITOR

[Article by Lo Ping [5012 1627]: "Lo Fu in Beijing"]

[Text] Every day in Beijing, under a black roof and within the white walls of a housing quadrangle which surrounds a courtyard, a short, white-haired man with the air of a scholar stays in his room all day long. He does not even step outside. In fact, he cannot go out even if he wishes to. He spends most of the time reading books and newspapers, or doing some writing. What does he write?

Who is he?

Beijing's ordinary citizens do not know him. But many figures in the cultural circles of Beijing and Hong Kong would recognize him at a glance, provided that they were given the chance to enter the quadrangle with its slightly chilly atmosphere. He is Lo Fu (Lo Chengxun). He attended the Fourth National Congress of Writers and Artists and appeared at several CPPCC's. In 1940, he was a trainee at TA KUNG PAO in Guilin. Later, he rose swiftly until he had simultaneously become the chief editor and deputy chief editor of TA KUNG PAO and HSIN WAN PAO in Hong Kong.

Of course, ordinary people are not even allowed to have a look at him. The quadrangle with the small courtyard is no different from other Beijing quadrangles with small courtyards. But the place is a forbidden area. Lo Fu has lost some freedom, including the freedom to meet his friends.

Of course, the "housing conditions" here are not as good as in his apartment, which has an area of 1,000 square feet, in Kong Kong's New Eastern Terrace, but the food is quite good. Three meals are provided every day. Milk is provided in the morning. There is soup and one course, or soup and two courses for lunch and supper.

In some Hong Kong newspapers and periodicals, there are rumors concerning the disappearance of Lo Fu from Hong Kong's leftist cultural circle, together with his "Jottings of Island Life" written for HSIN WAN PAO under the pseudonym of "Siwei" and his "New Sayings" written with his unique lively style. (The "New Sayings" still appears, but the style of writing is different.) The rumors are partly true. But there are also doubts. These doubts were raised in a letter I wrote from Hong Kong:

How is Lo Fu since he lost his freedom?

What offense has he committed?

Has he been sentenced?

Has he been expelled from the party?

Has he sold the drawings of Huang Binhong? How much has he sold the drawings for?

How many of his children are studying in the United Kingdom? How can he pay the expensive school fees?

Is it true that he has a luxurious villa in Hong Kong? If he is not the owner of the villa, who is the owner?

Is it true that he has bought a house in England?

Important figures from leftist newspapers have relayed statements concerning Lo Fu's case -- whose words have they relayed?

Has Mrs Lo Fu (Wu Xiusheng) been to Beijing to see her husband? What were the results of this trip?

Does the Lo Fu case have anything to do with the internal contradictions among communists in Hong Kong?

It seems that these questions cannot be clarified in Hong Kong but is it possible to clarify them in Beijing? Of course, for me, they are hard nuts to crack. It seems that it is even more difficult to gather news of this case than to gather news of the case in which the Ugandan military delegation was hijacked in its private airplane in August. Every cadre has learned of the incident. Those who knew that in September an officer of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs told a REUTER reporter that no private military airplane had been hijacked ("nothing of the sort has happened") certainly could not help laughing. Although it is difficult to understand "the Lo Fu case" in Beijing, nevertheless, if there are clues, it is possible to know the real situation more clearly than in Hong Kong. This reporter's concern for the fate of Lo Fu far exceeds that for the abortive hijacking in the air above Wuxi. Therefore, I cheerfully bear the pressure of accepting the challenge.

I ran about making inquires among the overseas Chinese and within government, political and news circles. I "saw" some material from the mouths of my friends. Thus, I have succeeded in clarifying the real situation:

Lo Fu is undergoing an isolated trial. The quadrangle in which he lives now is not a prison but he is, in fact, under house arrest.

He is suspected of selling information to the Americans. This judgment is made on the basis of the facts revealed. Lo Fu has confessed that he has made some errors. But until the middle of September, when this reporter started to write this article, no verdict had been made.

Since a verdict has not been made, the problem of the sentence does not exist.

Since he is still being tried, the problem of explusion from the party does not at present exist.

It is true that Lo Fu has sold Huang Binhong's drawings for a total sum of HK$120,000 (the one sold recently was sold for HK$60,000). He did not bargain directly with the dealers or the collectors but through the organization run by the PRC in Hong Kong which sells drawing and scripts. The person in charge of this organization is an old friend of his. It is possible to check their accounts.

Lo Fu has four sons and one daughter. The eldest son works for the JING JI DAO BAO [ECONOMIC REPORTER] in Hong Kong. His daughter and one of his sons are studying in the United Kingdom. The other sons are working in the same country.

Lo Fu does not have a villa of his own in Hong Kong. The villa in which we held receptions for his friends belongs to one of his relatives. One of Lo Fu's daughters-in-law (his eldest son's wife) is the daughter of Zhou Gangming, an elder in the literary circles. This lady has an aunt who is rather rich. In fact, the villa Lo Fu "owns," as told in some of the rumors, belongs to this aunt.

In order to solve his sons' housing problem in the United Kingdom, Lo Fu remitted HK$60,000 to his sons there to pay the first installment on a house. His sons are still paying off the rest.

What was relayed by the heads of the leftist newspapers concerning the case of Lo Fu is simple in content. What Fei Yimin has relayed in his newspaper [TA KUNG PAO] is the spirit of the words said by Liao Chengzhi. He did not say that Lo Fu had provided information for the Americans. But the people in the newspapers keep on drawing inferences from one or two sentences uttered by Fei Yimin. In particular, they have doubts as to how Lo Fu can have enough money to cover the expense of his children's study abroad. Therefore, some people stealthily whispered to the outside the news that Lo Fu had betrayed confidential matters to the Americans.

What Fei Yimin said at his newspaper's conference is quite objective. But some of the internal communications in the leftist newspapers are not so objective. They can easily arouse people's suspicion that Lo Fu has become an American secret agent.

Wu Xiusheng, Lo Fu's wife, has been doing editorial work for the WEN WEI PO in Hong Kong for 30 years. With the assistance of the XINHUA NEWS AGENCY, she arrived in Beijing on 16 August. She stayed in the Huaqiao mansion for 9 days and managed to see her husband several times. At their first meeting, they were allowed only to see each other but they were permitted to talk for a while at the second. When Mrs Lo learned that her husband was being tried, that no verdict had been issued and that her husband was not yet expelled from the party, she was not as anxious as she had been when she arrived in Beijing. On 25 August, she left Beijing for Hong Kong in a more stable and more cheerful mood. Wu Xiusheng revealed that she would return to Beijing to see Lo Fu again but added that her eldest son would go first. Lo Fu wanted some novels.

Are there contradictions among the communists in Hong Kong? Few people in Beijing encounter this question and even fewer can answer it. In fact, contradictions exist everywhere. Wherever there are people, wherever there are parties, there are contradictions. The department which deals with Chinese affairs in Hong Kong has paid attention to the fact that the leftist newspapers were not the first to spread and discuss Lo Fu's case but rather the non-leftist newspapers were the first to reveal and discuss it. What dirty work is going on here? Furthermore, why is it that when Lo Fu's case has not yet been settled the leftist newspapers in Hong Kong are already spreading the rumor that Lo Fu has become an American secret agent? What dirty work is going on here? If we say that no one in leftist circles in Hong Kong attacks Lo Fu, I think it is hard to believe.

The above materials have been basically verified. They are very different from what has been reported in the Hong Kong newspapers and periodicals. The most important fact is: At present, Lo Fu's case is being investigated. There has been no verdict but it is certain that Lo Fu has made some minor errors.

This reporter interviewed several people in literary circles who know Lo Fu. Their responses were:

"I do not believe that he would betray confidential matters."

"Betraying confidential matters? We should first find out what is meant by betraying confidential matters, right?"

"I hope the case is handled in accordance with the law. If he is guilty, sentence him. If not, release him."

FUJIAN COMMODITIES EXPORT FAIR CLOSES 3 OCT

HK050919 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 4 Oct 82 p 5

[Report: "Export Fair of Fujian Commodities Closes; Total Deal Amounts to HK$330 Million"]

[Text] Fujian Province's export commodities fair closed on 3 October. The secretary of the fair, Huang Zhanglin, revealed that the fair's achievements exceeded expectations. By yesterday, the total transaction value amounted to some HK$330 million. During the fair, clients held lively business talks. Some foreign clients will continue their business negotiations after the fair.

This fair was the first exhibition to be held at the Hong Kong exhibition center following its completion. It attracted many visitors. Yesterday was the last day of the fair and it still attracted more than 4,000 people. During the 16 days from 18 September to yesterday, admissions to the fair totaled more than 40,000. Visitors were very interested in the commodities in the small shops attached to the fair and many bought some special products of Fujian after their visit. The small shops frequently had to increase the supply of goods to meet the demand.

More than 2,000 firms participated in business talks during the fair. Most of them were Fujianese merchants from Hong Kong and Macao. In addition there were some from Southeast Asia, Japan, Western Europe, the United States, the Middle East and Africa. Business talks were lively and deals were concluded quickly. Among commodities which sold well were canned food, slippers, tea, paper tinsel, mosquito coils, porcelain and bamboo (or straw) products. Almost all of the 2,000 exhibits on display in the fair were sold out. Mechanical products and handicrafts were particularly popular. Some clients even placed orders after inspecting the samples.

Huang Zhanglin expressed his satisfaction over the fair, saying it not only strengthened mutual understanding among clients but also promoted the development of business. Many clients attended the fair several times and not only entered into transactions but also put forward many suggestions for improvements.

Huang Zhanglin also revealed that in order to meet the requirements the of the clients such fairs might be held again in Hong Kong in the future. He disclosed that as the fair was organized in only 2 months, it was impossible to select ample commodities and some products did not adequately reflect the uniqueness and high standard of Fujian Province, procelain being an example. Meanwhile, much improvement has to be made after the fair in such fields as quality and the variety of commodities.

The fair was jointly held by Fujian Province's General Company of Foreign Trade and Hong Kong's Hua Min Co. Ltd.

U.S., USSR RESUME STRATEGIC ARMS TALKS IN GENEVA

[Text] Geneva, October 5 (XINHUA) -- The United States and the Soviet Union resumed here today their Strategic Arms Reduction Talks (START) after a ten-week recess. Observers here predicted that any progress in the talks would be very difficult.

The first meeting between the U.S. chief negotiator Edward Rowny and his Soviet counterpart Viktor Karpov took place at the U.S. Mission's disarmament office. No statement was made by either side before or after today's meeting.

Judging from statements made by Rowny and Karpov upon their arrival Monday, observers here have the impression that the two sides are still at odds on basic issues. In his statement, Rowny reaffirmed the U.S. proposal on the reduction of what he called "the most destabilizing offensive strategic systems" -- the intercontinental ballistic missiles (ICBMs), the land-based ICBMs in particular.

On his arrival, Karpov said he rejected the American proposal and termed it "one-sided". He urged the U.S. side to "make necessary adjustments in its position". Karpov reaffirmed the Soviet proposal on the freezing of strategic nuclear weapons. The U.S. says the Soviet proposal is aimed at keeping its existing quantitative superiority and is therefore, unacceptable.

RENMIN RIBAO DISCUSSES U.S., USSR 'NUCLEOMANIA'

[International Jottings by Shi Fang [1102 5364]: "Nucleomania"]

[Text] Two months after the adjournment of a U.S.-Soviet meeting on reducing strategic weapons, both sides have agreed to resume talks in Geneva on 6 October. Moscow announced that it would "abandon the arms race policy and refrain from aggavating tension." Washington also issued a statement, saying that it would "carry out the talks truly and wholeheartedly." After hearing the above-quoted assertions declared by both sides, some people might think that a "breakthough" might be effected in the long-drawn-out nuclear talks between the United States and the Soviet Union.

However, people of the whole world hear another prelude. On 23 September, the United States carried out three underground nuclear tests in Nevada. AP said: "These are the greatest number of explosions carried out within a day." Three days later, Moscow also carried out an underground nuclear test in Siberia. After another 3 days, the United States again conducted an underground nuclear test in Nevada. Within 1 week, the United States and the Soviet Union conducted five nuclear tests at a stretch, just like competing in a relay race.

Washington said that its purpose in doing so was to "restore its nuclear superiority which has been lost," whereas Moscow refused to "admit any country's right for achieving military superiority." These two countries compete with each other and neither is willing to give ground. Have they any "sincerity" in nuclear disarmament?

The two biggest nuclear hegemonists, which have the largest number of nuclear weapons, ought to take the lead in reducing their nuclear weapons. However, the higher the moral tune they affect concerning "nuclear disarmament," the bigger the steps they take toward "nuclear arms expansion." Small wonder that people in many countries are carrying out their powerful activities to protest against the reoccurrence of nucleomania.

QIAN XINZHONG ADDRESSES POPULATION MEETING

OW292044 Beijing XINHUA in English 1656 GMT 29 Sep 82

[Text] Colombo, September 29 (XINHUA) -- The third Asian and Pacific population conference ended here today with a call for strengthened efforts in family planning among countries in this region. The meeting, opened on Sept. 20, was sponsored by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP), an organization concerned with 56 percent of the world's population.

Participating in the conference were representatives from 34 member states and regions of the ESCAP region, as well as representatives from U.N. population agencies and international organizations.

The theme of the conference was the search for an overall plan to check the region's population growth and pave the way for its economic development. From the last conference in 1972 until 1980, 500 million people -- more than the population of Africa -- were born in the region. In addition, 60 percent of the Asian population is below 25 years old and the number of persons aged 15 to 24 is expected to double by the year 2000, according to conference estimates.

In briefing the delegates on China's population situation and outlook, Qian Xinzhong, head of that country's delegation, said that the Chinese Government has taken family planning as "an established basic policy" of the country.

"To limit the size of population, to improve its quality and make population growth commensurate with socio-economic development -- all this constitutes the general policy of our population development strategy," Qian, minister in charge of China's State Family Planning Commission, added.

An overall conference report stated "efforts should be made to increase the awareness of the need to formulate appropriate policies in sectors relating to education, employment, housing, nutrition and welfare servides and to take into account the increasing numbers and changes in age composition."

The report also said: "The developing countries and territories of the ESCAP region can be classified in three groups. The first have had rapid fertility decline associated with economic development.

"The second category are areas where emphasis on social development aspects have had an impact on population growth. The remaining countries forming the third category do not seem to have shown sufficient impact of development on population growth."

The conference is held every 10 years to coincide with decennial population and related censuses.

DELEGATION ATTENDS PARIS ASTRONAUTICS MEETING

[Text] Paris, October 2 (XINHUA) -- The prospects of orbiting spaceports at altitudes several hundred to 10,000 kilometers from the earth by the year 2000 were seen by specialists attending an international astronautics congress which closed here today.

Scientists attending the 33rd congress of the International Astronautics Federation called for greater international cooperation in the peaceful utilization of space. Opposition to the spread of arms races to space was also voiced at the six-day meeting.

More than 400 papers on various applied satellites, rocket technology, launching devices and others were read at the congress.

A Chinese astronautics delegation led by vice director of the China Astronautics Society Liang Shoupan attended the congress. The delegation screened a videotape, "China's Space Activities", arousing a great interest among those attending the congress.

China so far has successfully launched 12 man-made satellites, all on its own.

The International Astronautics Federation, a non-governmental organization, held its first congress in 1950. The 34th congress is scheduled to be held in Budapest in 1983.

JI PENGFEI MEETS WASHINGTON GOVERNOR SPELLMAN

[Text] Beijing, October 6 (XINHUA) -- State Councillor Ji Pengfei said today that it is the hope of the people and Government of China that Sino-U.S. relations will grow steadily on the existing basis.

He made the statement at a meeting with John Spellman, governor of Washington State, the U.S., and the friendship delegation he is leading, in the Great Hall of the People here in the Chinese capital.

The delegation, which arrived here last night, has come at the invitation of the people's government of Sichuan Province, southwest China, to attend a ceremony for concluding official relations of friendship between Sichuan and Washington State and to pay a goodwill visit.

Ji Pengfei, who is former foreign minister and vice premier, described the conclusion of official ties of friendship between Sichuan and Washington State as "an excellent thing."

He said that friendly ties between the two peoples should be expanded and so should relations between the national and local governments of the two countries. "Friendship can grow only when we have more contacts and greater understanding of each other," Ji Pengfei said.

Governor Spellman said that Washington State has always had strong ties with China. "Such ties will become stronger every day with the conclusion of the formal relationship of friendship with Sichuan," he said. He expressed the belief that this event will generate tremendous enthusiasm among the people of Washington State for exchange with the Chinese people in culture, education, trade, science and technology.

The ten-member official delegation from Washington State includes a senator and a representative of the state and officials from the economic, commercial and agricultural departments. Among the 22 other visitors accompanying Governor Spellman on his China tour are university presidents, a trade union leader, businessmen, lawyers and journalists.

Apart from holding discussions on trade and technical exchange with officials from China's foreign trade and agriculture ministries in Beijing, the delegation will tour Chengdu and Chongqing in Sichuan, and Shanghai on the east coast, China's largest city, before leaving for home on October 18.

KYODO: Negotiations Continue

OW061249 Tokyo KYODO in English 1233 GMT 6 Oct 82

China's Foreign Ministry declined comment on the meeting which opened the previous day.

Western diplomatic sources said the two countries would discuss the Kampuchea question during the ongoing talks, the first high-level contacts since Beijing suspended negotiations with Moscow following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan in December 1979.

Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev and Vietnamese State Council Chairman Truong Chinh agreed in Moscow Tuesday that improved ties with China were in the interest of all three countries, the Western sources noted.

China supports the coalition of three Kampuchean resistance forces headed by Prince Norodom Sihanouk, while the Soviet Union backs Vietnam, which maintains an estimated 180,000 troops in Kampuchea to support the Heng Samrin government in Phnom Penh.

The Eastern sources said the Soviet Union aims chiefly to get the Chinese to open formal negotiations to break a 20-year split between the two Communist giants.

Ilichev will appeal to the Chinese to resume talks on normalization of their ties during the latest round of discussions, the sources said.

China and the Soviet Union started vice minister-level talks in Moscow on October 17, 1979, and six rounds of talks had been held until November 30 the same year. But the talks were suspended after the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan.

Despite a series of Soviet overtures for an end to hostility, China has said that the Soviet Union should show its sincerity through its deeds rather than words.

Chinese Communist Party chief Hu Yaobang told a party convention last month that it would be possible for Sino-Soviet relations to move toward normalization if the Soviets really have a sincere desire to improve relations with China and take practical steps to lift their threat to China.

BREZHNEV VIEWS PRC TIES AT TRUONG CHINH BANQUET

[Text] Moscow, October 5 (XINHUA) -- Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev held talks today in the Kremlin with Truong Chinh, chairman of the State Council of Vietnam.

According to TASS, the two leaders "exchanged information" about the USSR's and Vietnam's relations with China. "They held that giving more normal character to the relations" is "not to the detriment of third countries, naturally."

At a dinner today given in honour of Truong Chinh, Brezhnev said that his country would continue to side with Vietnam, support Vietnam's dialogue with the ASEAN countries and its proposal for an international conference on Southeast Asia.

In his reply, Truong Chinh continued to vilify China as "expansionist" and "hegemonist", while at the same time, he claimed that Vietnam "advocates the restoration of normal relations" with China.

During his talks with Brezhnev, Truong Chinh stressed that "cohesion and cooperation with the Soviet Union are regarded by Vietnam as the cornerstone of the country's foreign policy", and he thanked the Soviet Union for "the wide and valuable assistance" being rendered to Vietnam.

The Vietnamese party and state delegation headed by Truong Chinh arrived here yesterday. It was reported that he and Soviet leaders also discussed their bilateral relations and the situation in Southeast Asia.

U.S. ASKS JAPAN TO INCREASE DEFENSE SPENDING

[Text] Tokyo, October 6 (XINHUA) -- The United States has asked Japan to spend much more on defense even when Japan is facing financial difficulties, said the Japanese YOMIURI SHIMBUN newspaper today.

The paper said Japanese Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi talked with U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz Tuesday afternoon in New York on the international situation, economic sanctions against the Soviet Union and the issue of Japan-U.S. defense.

Sakurauchi told Shultz that despite the country's difficult financial situation, Japan's defense budget for the current fiscal year has risen 7.346 per cent over the previous year. He said he hoped the United States would "fully understand the efforts made by Japan" in this field.

Shultz said in return he understands Japan's financial situation and added that the United States also increased defense spendings under a difficult financial situation. He said he hoped Japan would "greatly increase" its defense spendings. He stressed the importance of full mutual exchanges on military techniques.

Sakurauchi said in the talks a number of people in China are worrying about a possible revival of Japanese militarism. This should be considered in connection with Japan's defense, he said.

Shultz said no country should become a militarist one. However, since the threat from the Soviet Union is very grave, both Japan and the United States should develop their defense capabilities which are necessary.

On economic sanctions against the Soviet Union, Sakurauchi said measures, which the Western countries can stick to for long, should be sought out.

Shultz agreed to the Japanese foreign minister's view that the Western countries should achieve an identical view in this regard to erase their inharmony.

KYODO: JAPAN, PRC DELEGATES MEET IN TOKYO

OW070513 Tokyo KYODO in English 0300 GMT 7 Oct 82

[Text] Tokyo Oct 7 KYODO -- Japanese and Chinese "private" delegates opened their first three-day conference here Thursday to promote mutual understanding and friendship marking the 10th anniversary of the restoration of diplomatic ties between the two countries.

Former Chinese Vice Premier Wang Zhen, head of the Chinese delegation to the conference, said at the opening session that Japanese aggression against China lasting 50 years in the 2,000 years of their past relations left a deep wound in the heart of the Chinese people.

He added, however, that this must teach a lesson so that the same sort of thing will never occur in the future.

Wang said that free exchange of views between private representatives of the two countries will have a major significance in this respect and suggested that the next round of the conference be held in Beijing next year.

Former Japanese Foreign Minister Masayoshi Ito, leader of the Japanese delegation, called for the continuation of the private-level conference in the future no matter how difficult the bilateral relations become on the governmental level.

The conference is scheduled to be closed Saturday after discussing in two groups "Asian security and Japan-China relations" and "present and future of Japan-China economic relations."

The Chinese delegates are expected to make a courtesy call on Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki during the conference.

JAPAN FOREIGN MINISTER DISCUSSES ECONOMIC TIES

[Text] Tokyo, September 24 (XINHUA) -- Japanese Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi has made it clear that Japan wants to further its economic cooperation with China.

In an interview with XINHUA here, Sakurauchi recalled that Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang, during his visit to Japan earlier this year, put forward three principles governing the Japan-China relations -- peace and friendship, equality and mutual benefit, and long-lasting stability. As long as the authorities of both Japan and China act in line with these principles, Sakurauchi continued, further development of economic cooperation between them will be ensured.

He added that Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki during his forthcoming visit will, toget Chinese leaders, lay down the general principles regarding further economic cooper between the two countries. XINHUA INTERVIEWS DEMOCRATIC KAMPUCHEAN GENERAL

[Text] Phnom Dang Raek, October 6 (XINHUA) -- The Democratic Kampuchean National Army in the northern theater of operation has wiped out over 40 Vietnamese strongholds during the rainy season this year from May to October.

This was revealed by Chhit Choeun, vice-chairman of the Supreme Commission and chief of the General Staff of the National Army of Democratic Kampuchea, in an interview with XINHUA and the PEOPLE'S DAILY here.

Chhit Choeun summarized the National Army's military successes in the rainy season this year as follows:

1) The National Army has mounted more and more attacks against the Vietnamese troops. It has made constant efforts to encircle, raid or pull out enemy strongholds, and liberated a number of villages. The enemy has thus been put in a passive position.

2) The weakness of the Vietnamese occupation troops has become more obvious -- shortage of manpower and low morale. They lack the strength to seize back the strongholds wiped out by the National Army while the latter has been growing in strength in battle.

3) More and more people in the northern theater of operation have offered food and other kinds of support to the National Army as a result of the latter's active political work and propaganda. In some places the villagers organized guerrillas as reserves for the National Army. A number of defectors of the puppet troops have also joined the National Army.

The fighting between the Vietnamese troops and the Democratic Kampuchean National Army has lasted for four dry seasons and four rainy seasons. In the coming dry season, the Vietnamese troops might launch an offensive in an area here or there, even using toxic chemicals, but they will not make any achievements except suffering still bigger defeats.

UN DRAFT RESOLUTION URGES KAMPUCHEA WITHDRAWAL

[Text] United Nations, September 30 (XINHUA) -- A draft resolution on the situation in Kampuchea circulated here today emphasizes that the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea is the principal component of any just and lasting resolution of the Kampuchean problem.

Other components for a just and lasting resolution of the Kampuchean problem suggested in the draft are "the restoration and preservation of its independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, the right of the Kampuchean people to determine their own destiny and the commitment by all states to non-interference and non-intervention in the internal affairs of Kampuchea".

The draft is initiated by the five ASEAN nations -- Indonesia, Malaysia, Philippines, Singapore and Thailand.

It says: "To bring about durable peace in Southeast Asia, there is an urgent need for a comprehensive political solution to the Kampuchean problem which will provide for the withdrawal of all foreign forces and ensure respect for the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and neutral and non-aligned status of Kampuchea, as well as the right of the Kampuchean people to self-determination free from outside interference."

It says that "after the comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean question through peaceful means, the countries of the Southeast Asian region can pursue efforts to establish a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in Southeast Asia so as to lessen international tensions and to achieve lasting peace in the region."

It reaffirms "the need for all states to adhere strictly to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, which call for respect for the national independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of all states, non-intervention and non-interference in the internal affairs of states, non-recourse to the threat or use of force, and peaceful settlement of disputes."

The draft proposes that the ad hoc committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea should convene, when necessary, and carry out the tasks entrusted to it in its mandate.

ASEAN URGES IMMEDIATE SRV KAMPUCHEA WITHDRAWAL

[Text] United Nations, October 5 (XINHUA) -- Members of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) and many other countries have urged Vietnam to withdraw its troops from Kampuchea immediately and allow the Kampuchean people to work out their own destiny without foreign intervention during the general debate in the past few days at the current session of the U.N. General Assembly.

Thai Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila said that to restore peace to Kampuchea and to reduce regional tension, it was necessary that the 200,000 Vietnamese troops be completely withdrawn from Kampuchea.

Malaysian Prime Minister Mahathir bin Mohamed said that the foreign military invasion and continued occupation of Kampuchea was a crime against the Kampuchean people and a threat to regional peace and security. Other ASEAN members also termed the Kampuchean problem "an insurmountable obstacle to their cherished dream of a conflict-free neutral area."

Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen called for a political solution that would enable the Kampuchean people to choose their government without coercion or outside intervention. He hoped that the formation of a Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea would contribute to such an evolution.

Austrian Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr said that the international conference on Kampuchea had created the framework for a comprehensive political settlement. The resolutions of the conference should be viewed as a package incorporating two key elements: The complete withdrawal of foreign troops from Kampuchea and a guarantee of the Kampuchean people's right to self-determination, he noted.

Many nations also called on the international community to take urgent measures to ensure the complete withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea and to restore peace and security to Southeast Asia.

NEWSPAPER CARRIES MARCOS' VIEW ON SRV THREAT

OW010028 Beijing XINHUA in English 1514 GMT 30 Sep 82

[Text] Manila, September 30 (XINHUA) -- A Philippine newspaper today reiterated President Marcos' view that "Soviet-backed Vietnam is the most serious threat to Asian security today" which "should not be taken lightly."

President Marcos expressed this view last Sunday at Los Angeles during his visit to the United States.

An editorial entitled "The Vietnamese Threat Is Real" of the TIMES JOURNAL said, Vietnam has the largest standing army in this side of the world and Vietnamese troops now make good use of millions of dollars worth of military hardware left by American troops in the early 1970's.

Added to this has been the steady influx of Soviet arms and experts to that country, the paper said.

It also pointed out that the Vietnamese bases Cam Ranh and Da Nang "are being utilized by the Vietnamese and their Soviet allies. These two bases present an outright threat to shipping in the South China Sea, especially shipping en route to Japan."

"The threat to the Philippines is direct," it said. "Vietnam lies immediately to the west of this country and only the South China Sea separates the two countries.

"At least twice this year, the Philippine Government protested reported intrusions by Soviet planes into Philippine airspace. Where the jet patrols came from may never be known but it is certain their landing point would be somewhere in Vietnam."

"Soviet-backed Vietnam is the sword-wielding arm that can inflict a mortal wound on Southeast Asia," it concluded.

RENMIN RIBAO EXAMINES FRG'S POLITICAL SITUATION

[News Analysis by Jiang Jianguo [3068 1696 0948]: "A Major Change in West Germany's Political Situation"]

[Text] On 1 October the West German Bundestag voted on a "constructive no confidence motion" jointly put forward by the Christian Democrats [CDU], the Christian Social Union [CSU] (the CDU and the CSU are called the unions for short) and the Free Democratic Party [FDP]. As a result, this motion was carried by an absolute majority. The CDU leader Helmut Kohl was elected the new West Germany chancellor. However, this is an interim government. A general election will be held on 6 March next year, before the due time. Then the party which wins the vote will form a new Cabinet.

On 17 September, the FDP withdrew its Cabinet members from the coalition government, consisting mainly of Social Democrats [SPD]. Soon afterwards, various parties in West Germany waged an unprecedentedly sharp struggle on the question of whether the general election should be advanced. Former Chancellor Helmut Schmidt refused to hand in his resignation and tried to put forward a "confidence motion" to the Bundestag. However, considering that the SPD did not form a majority in the Bundestag and the motion could not possibly be passed, Schmidt asked the president to dismiss the Bundestag and advance the time for the general election to November. The SPD purpose was quite clear. While the SPD was still in power, the opposition parties were still unprepared and when differences appeared in the FDP after it withdrew from the coalition government, the SPD was able to make use of its advantage and the personal prestige of Helmut Schmidt to maintain and win more votes, or at least, not lose too many votes.

However, according to German "fundamental law," if, under such circumstances, the opposition parties in the Bundestag can pass a no confidence motion against the government by majority vote and simultaneously elect a new chancellor -- in other words, if they win the so-called "constructive vote of no confidence -- the original chancellor must be dismissed from office. The CDU and CSU, which were then opposed, used this provision to restrain the SPD government. They strongly opposed Schmidt's proposal on a confidence vote and advancing the date of the general election. On 20 September, after discussions with the FDP, they jointly proposed a "constructive vote of no confidence" and elected the CDU leader Helmut Kohl candidate for chancellor. On 28 September, a no confidence motion was formally raised by the unions and the FDP in the Bundestag to express no confidence in Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and elect Helmut Kohl as his successor. In the vote taken on 1 October, with the support of the FDP, this motion won more than 249 votes, the absolute majority needed for its adoption. (There are 496 seats in the Bundestag.) Then, a government could be organized by the CDU, the CSU and the FDP. They also decided to postpone the general election to 6 March next year. Thus being the parties in office, they have taken over the advantage from the SPD in this respect and will take care of the general election. At the same time, they have won several months of time to prepare for the election.

In Bonn's political storm, the FDP was the party most seriously shaken. Over the past few years, the two sides, the SDP and the unions, were generally matched in strength. Neither of them was able to independently win the majority vote. Under such circumstances, the FDP, although not a powerful party, became the focus of contention between the two sides. It thus played a decisive role in the organization of government. However, the FDP leaders changed their policy this time from allying with the SPD to allying with the unions. As a result, a split was created within the party. The leftwingers strongly opposed the party chairman Hans-Dietrich Genscher. In the National Executive Committee, Genscher was supported only by a slender majority of 18 to 15. Gunter Verheugen, secretary general of the FDP, handed in his resignation. Moreover, four FDP local branches have demanded an emergency congress to discuss the practice of the party leaders. All this has resulted in the lessening of the party's national prestige and the deepening of its internal split.

The recent Hesse election was the first after the fall of the coalition government, in which the FDP announced its alliance with the CDU. Therefore, the media called it a test of popular will and a preview of the general election. The FDP met with an unprecedented defeat. The rate of votes it got in the election dropped from 6.6 percent in 1978 to 3.1 percent and it failed to enter the state parliament. Neither could the CDU get over 50 percent of the votes, as was expected. As usual, the SPD won 42.8 percent of votes. To replace the FDP, the Green Party, which won 8 percent of the votes, became the third biggest party. This will complicate the political situation in West Germany, for, along with the development of this situation, the FDP will possibly collapse after this setback and lose its present position. On the other hand, the Green Party refuses to ally itself with any other political party. Thus, in next year's general election, if the unions and the SPD still cannot win the majority of votes, how to make a breakthrough in this situation will become a major problem.

It was under passive circumstances that the unions took over government affairs. At present, the economic crisis in West Germany is deepening. There are no signs of recovery in the foreseeable future, and the unions are still unable to work out an effective plan. Having assumed power in haste, the difficult economic situation may become a big burden for them. In order to make the situation a little more favorable, they have decided to postpone the general election, hoping that the economic situation will be improved next year.

Of course, the SPD is not willing to give up. It will, on the one hand, conduct propaganda against the unions, saying that after the latter assumes power, those social and economic policies which "have been proved to be unsuccessful in the United States will be repeated." Also, it will lay particular emphasis on attacking the FDP leaders and winning over the leftwingers. Judging from the outcome of the Hesse election, the position of the SPD has more or less been restored and the rate of the votes it got in the election was basically maintained. Therefore, the possibility still exists that the SPD will win more votes in the new general election.

The complicated political situation in West Germany is still changing. People are paying serious attention to the trend of development of the political situation in West Germany.

[Text] Oslo, 4 Oct (XINHUA) -- Norwegian Minister of Oil and Energy Vidkunn Hveding, when receiving a Chinese journalists delegation here today, said that Norway and China are faced with the same problem in petroleum exploration, that is, the problem of using foreign funds and advanced foreign technology, while adhering to the principle of self-reliance.

He said: When Norway built its first oilfield, only 20 percent of the needed equipment was produced at home. When building the second oilfield, Norway provided 25 percent of the equipment. But in building the third oilfield, Norway is able to provide 60 percent of the equipment and has mastered the technology of deep-sea petroleum exploration.

He said: Norway and China can extensively cooperate in petroleum exploration and production. Norway has already provided advice and experience to China in this field.

On Norway's present petroleum production conditions, Minister Hveding said: The proven deposit in Norway's North Sea oilfield is 5 billion tons which, at the present annual production of 50 million tons, will be enough for 100 years of exploitation. In addition, petroleum has also been discovered in waters north of Norway. So, Norway's petroleum production has broad prospects.

Minister Hveding visited China not long ago. He said: "The grand plans put forward by Hu Yaobang at the 12th CPC National Congress on China's four modernizations are very hopeful. I believe that China will be able to lay a solid foundation for the four modernizations in 10 years time and will achieve a leap forward in the next 10 years."

FURTHER COVERAGE OF PERUVIAN MINISTER'S VISIT

Talks With Zhao

[Text] Beijing, October 6 (XINHUA) — Zhao Ziyang, premier of the State Council, held talks here this afternoon with Manuel Ulloa Elias, prime minister of Peru, in the Great Hall of the People. The two leaders exchanged views on bilateral relations and the international situation.

Premier Zhao expressed satisfaction with the development of the relations between the two countries in the past 10 years since the establishment of diplomatic relations. He said: "The current visit of Prime Minister Ulloa will not only promote the development of bilateral relations, but also will benefit mutual understanding and friendship between China and Latin-American countries."

Zhao said: "Both China and Latin American countries belong to the Third World and they had similar sufferings in the past and are facing common tasks today."

"No fundamental conflict of interests exists between us. China and Latin American countries should coordinate and support each other in safeguarding national independence and sovereignty, developing national economies, improving people's livelihood, reforming the old international economic order and building a new and reasonable international economic order," Zhao said.

Zhao outlined the guideline of China's foreign policy. He said China adheres to an independent foreign policy and establishes and develops relations with all countries including Latin-American countries on the basis of the five principles of peaceful coexistence. He said: "China permits no foreign interference in China's internal affairs and no violation of China's sovereignty, and vice versa."

Zhao said China cherishes its unity and cooperation with the Third World countries including Latin American countries. "We hold that prospects are broad for South-South cooperation and will promote the progress of South-North dialogue. China is willing to unite with all peace-loving and justice-upholding countries and make efforts for opposing hegemonism and safeguarding world peace," he said.

Prime Minister Ulloa said that his current China visit manifests the aspiration of the people of all walks of life in Peru. He said: "China is playing an ever increasing role in world affairs. Expansion of Sino-Peruvian relations is an important aspect in Peru's relations with other countries. Peru and other Latin-American countries have many points in common with China and should develop their friendship on the basis of mutual respect, independence and coordination."

Ulloa said: "China has been consistently supporting South-South cooperation so as to promote the progress of South-North dialogue." He said he believes the "Latin-American countries will surely win China's support in their struggle of establishing a new international economic order."

Ulloa said: "In the current strained international situation, Latin America's position in the world has become increasingly important. Latin-American people, as the people in other regions, are concerned about world peace. They will strengthen cooperation among themselves."

Both leaders said China and Peru will further develop cooperation in the fields of economy and trade.

Attending the talks on Peruvian side were: Juan Alayza Rospigliosi, ambassador to China; Daniel Linares Bazan and Carlos Ricardo Burga Velasco, congress deputies from the Popular Action Party; Roberto Ramírez del Villar, deputy from the Popular Christian Party; and Angel Delgado Silva, representative of the Leftists League.

Zhao Hosts Banquet

[Text] Beijing, October 6 (XINHUA) -- Zhao Ziyang, premier of the State Council, gave a banquet in the Great Hall of the People here this evening in honor of Dr Manuel Ulloa Elias, prime minister of Peru, and other distinguished Peruvian guests. Both Premier Zhao and Prime Minister Ulloa spoke at the banquet.

In his speech, Premier Zhao welcomed Prime Minister Ulloa as the first leader of the Peruvian Government to visit China. "The current visit is a big event in the annals of the Sino-Peruvian relations," he said. He said that the Chinese Government and people highly treasure their friendship and cooperation with Peru. He said the establishment of the diplomatic relations between China and Peru in 1971 ushered in a new stage in the Sino-Peruvian relations. "There have been steady growth and expansion in the exchange and cooperation in political, economic, trade scientific and technical and cultural and other fields between the two countries," he said.

Zhao praised Peru as an ancient civilized country with a long history and the Peruvian people as "industrious and creative with a glorious tradition of opposing foreign aggression."

"In recent years," Zhao said, "the Peruvian Government and people have made unremitting efforts to defend state sovereignty, consolidate political independence and develop the national economy and culture, and have achieved gratifying success. In international affairs, Peru opposes dependence and foreign domination in any form. It adheres to the founding principle of the Nonalignment Movement and has made positive contributions to the development of unity and cooperation in Latin America, safeguarding the peace and security in the region and defending the norms of international relations and the world peace."

Zhao Ziyang said: "At present, suprepowers are intensifying their contention for world hegemony, and international situation is tense and turbulent. The world economic situation is also serious. The economic recession in developing countries and their policy of shifting economic crisis deteriorates the economy in Third World countries." The Chinese premier said: "We are convinced that so long as the Third World countries close their ranks and support each other, they can play a major role in the struggle against hegemonism and in defense of world peace, as well as in the struggle of establishing a just, reasonable, new international economic order. China is a developing socialist country and willing to endeavor for this common goal along with other Third World countries."

In his speech, Prime Minister Ulloa said both Peru and China are countries with time-honored civilizations and vitality. "Though the two countries are far from each other, Chinese emigrants settled in Peru more than one hundred years ago and made contributions to the development of Peru. This constituted one of the factors linking the two countries," he said. He said his talks with Premier Zhao this afternoon showed that the two sides hold identical views on the questions they touched. "While maintaining the stand and independence of their respective governments and people, the two sides have put up a broad and solid bridge for the development of the Peruvian-Chinese relations in future," he said.

Prime Minister Ulloa reiterated, on behalf of the Peruvian Government, that "Peru recognizes the Government of the People's Republic of China as the sole legal government of China and appreciates the Chinese Government's efforts for the realization of the reunification of the motherland."

Referring to the international situation, Ulloa said: "There still exist gaps between rich and poor nations. Moreover, such gaps, instead of becoming smaller, have been enlarged. The world today is in a morbid state. Our people cannot indefinitely live in poverty and dependence."

He said South-North dialogue was proposed long ago. "We hope for peace, progress and decent life for people. The people of the Third World countries are being organized in order to strengthen their position in the dialogue, to make rich nations obliged to accept a more reasonable distribution of wealth and to respect the desire for independence of the people of all countries," he said.

[Station commentary: "The Policy of Becoming Rich Through Hard Work Will Not Change"]

[Text] With the rapid agricultural development, great changes have taken place in the countryside over the past few years. However, peasants always worry lest policies change and the good days will not last long. This is because they suffered much under the leftist line in the past.

The documents of the 12th party congress have set the peasants' minds at ease. The party Central Committee has made it very clear: to achieve the grand goal of socialist modernization, it is not enough only to make the state rich; it is necessary to enable peasants households, localities, collectives enterprises, individuals and the state to become rich at the same time.

At present people in some localities have not yet sufficiently emancipated their minds. They should further broaden their horizons and emancipate their minds. They should fully mobilize and guide the peasant masses to open up more avenues of production so that they can become rich faster while ensuring the fulfillment of the grain production task. When the 800 million peasants become rich faster through hard work, it will greatly promote the development of industry, commerce, culture and all other socialist undertakings.

Peasants in Changde, Hunan, said: We should be good signs in achieving the grand goal for the state and the collective before the end of this century and in becoming rich faster through hard work.

What a lofty aspiration and a great ideal! The policy of becoming rich through hard work will not change, and everyone should work toward this end without any misgivings.

[XINHUA commentator's article: "Use Patriotic Ideas To Inspire the Masses To Launch the 'Five Stresses and Four Beauties' Activities"]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 6 Oct (XINHUA) -- The Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee recently called a meeting attended by the central organizations and bodies concerned, affirming that in October all units throughout the country must pay attention to studying and publicizing that portion of the documents of the 12th CPC Congress concerned with striving to build a high level of socialist spiritual civilization and make it known to every household and to every woman and child. The meeting also called for launching an extensive campaign to promote civility and courtesy with the "five stresses and four beauties."

In his report to the 12th CPC Congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang laid before the whole party and the people of all nationalities in China the task of building a high level of socialist spiritual civilization while working for a high level of material civilization and regarded this task as a strategic principle. The report seriously pointed out: The success or failure of socialism depends on whether or not we adhere to this principle.

We achieved very good results in launching the "all-people civility and courtesy month" activities in all localities, particularly in big and medium-sized cities, last March. We must further deepen and broaden the publicity of socialist spiritual civilization and the activities to promote civility and courtesy with the "five stresses and four beauties" in October to achieve still greater results. To fulfill this task, we must integrate the activities with education in having a deep love for the party, socialism and the motherland. We must educate the masses to greatly develop their patriotic spirit.

In his opening speech to the 12th CPC Congress, Comrade Deng Xiaoping solemnly decla Independence and self-reliance have always been, and will forever be, our basic stan No foreign country can expect China to be its vassal, nor can it expect China to swa any bitter fruit detrimental to her interests. Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening spee brimmed with warm patriotic spirit and strong national pride. In the "five stresses four beauties" activities in October, we must deepen the study of the speech.

The intelligence and wisdom of the Chinese nation are universally acknowledged; achi over the past 33 years since the founding of the People's Republic of China are obvi everyone. Particularly since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committ have summed up the experience of socialist revolution and construction, corrected th "left" error in our guiding ideology and laid down a whole set of new policies. The CPC Congress proposed the great task of creating a new situation in all fields of so modernization. It can be expected that our socialist motherland and the Chinese nat grow and flourish. In the present "five stresses and four beauties" activities, we national self-respect and sense of national pride strike deeper root in the hearts o people. We must inspire hundreds of millions of people to develop their patriotic s ments and achieve new results in promoting socialist material civilization.

JOURNAL REPORTS RISE IN URBAN LIVING STANDARDS

OW071001 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 3 Oct 82

[Text] According to a report in SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO [WORLD ECONOMIC REPORT] publis 4 October, since the 3d plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee, owing t series of measures adopted by the party and government for improving the people's li standards, the living standards of city dwellers have improved markedly.

In 1981 the average monthly income of a regular worker and staff member was 75.12 yu increase of 17.34 yuan over that in 1978. Because more family members have jobs, th monthly living income per person, after deducting the factor of price increases, sho real increase of 24.4 percent over that in 1978. The average monthly living expense person amounted to 48.71 yuan in 1981, an increase of 35 percent over the 36.07 yuan 1978, mainly as a result of increased purchases of commodities, especially food, clo and necessities. Among necessities, the increase in high-grade durable consumer goo purchases is even more obvious. According to statistics at the end of 1981, every 1 households owned an average of 274 wristwatches, 112 radios, 85 sewing machines, 76 sion sets, 74 electric fans, 70 bicycles, 17 tape recorders, 10 cameras and 1 washin

FINANCE OFFICIAL PLEDGES SUPPORT FOR AGRICULTURE

[Text] Beijing, 6 Oct (XINHUA) -- The 12th CPC National Congress has taken agricul as one of the strategic priorities in economic development. Adhering to the guideli the congress, the Ministry of Finance is determined to strengthen its financial supp agriculture.

Discussing this subject with the reporters of the XINHUA NEWS AGENCY and the ZHONGGU BAO, a responsible person of the Ministry of Finance said recently: The financial d ments at all levels should constantly enhance their understanding of the support for agriculture and improve and strengthen relevant work. At present and for a period h after, the central tasks of the financial departments in support of agriculture are constantly raise the effectiveness of the support-agriculture funds; make efforts to all-round development of agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline undertaki fishery; energentically support agroscientific research and the popularization of ne agricultural techniques; and further make the rural economy thrive.

The responsible person pointed out: In order to accomplish these tasks, it is necessary to work well in the following four aspects:

1. It is necessary to firmly implement the policy of sparing no effort in promoting grain production and diversified undertakings. While actively supporting diversified undertakings, the financial departments in all localities should henceforth provide energetic support for grain production in order to make diversified undertakings and grain production promote each other and thus create a favorable cycle of agricultural production. The financial departments should work in coordination with other departments concerned and adopt measures to ensure the area sown to grain crops accords with the state plan. The financial departments should continue to attach importance to the building of bases for producing marketable grain and support the transformation of low-yield fields and efforts to raise unit area output. They should actively help communes, brigades and other collectives and commune members develop diversified undertakings, provided the undertakings do not occupy grain-yielding land. They should work in coordination with other departments concerned to consolidate and develop existing bases for diversified undertakings managed by communes and production brigades.

2. It is necessary to support the development of forestry and promote water and soil conservation in rural areas. The financial departments at all levels should play the role of a coordinating department, work out a unified plan and make overall arrangements for effective management and the use of available funds in forestry in coordination with the agricultural, forestry, water conservancy, animal husbandry and other departments. In places where soil erosion is serious, the financial departments should consult with other departments concerned to make rational adjustment of the distribution of the support-agriculture funds and properly increase the funds for water and soil conservation according to actual needs, if possible.

3. It is necessary to energetically support agroscientific research and the popularization of new agricultural techniques. The financial departments at all levels should take the initiative to work in coordination with the agroscientific research department and the technical popularization department to apply successful research results in agricultural production as soon as possible. At present, the peasants are in urgent need of state assistance to obtain breeding stock, breeding fowl, saplings and technical services. The financial departments in various localities should give them energetic support. At the same time, the financial departments should actively support the implementation of the system of responsibility for agricultural techniques and make it serve agricultural production in a still better way.

4. It is necessary to carefully calculate and pay attention to economic results in the course of agricultural spending in order to make more and better accomplishments with less spending and to make limited funds yield maximum economic results.

CHINA DAILY VIEWS AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT

["Special" to CHINA DAILY by Shu Yao: "Rural Upsurge Boosts Economy"]

[Text] China's success in feeding and clothing a quarter of the world's population with only seven per cent of the total arable land on earth was a significant contribution to the world and to its own national economy, said Lin Hujia, minister of agriculture, animal husbandry and fishery.

This year, despite a service drought in northern China and low temperature with heavy rains in the south, the nation's summer grain harvest was estimated to be 3.2 percent or 2.05 million tons more than last year.

The total rapeseed output, an important oil crop, this summer reached four million tons, six per cent higher than last year.

In the first half of this year, the state purchased 12.5 per cent more grain, cotton, rapeseed, tea, pigs, eggs, vegetables and other farm products from the rural producers than it did the same period last year, the minister revealed.

Autumn crops, which account for most of the country's total grain and cash crops output, are now growing well, promising another bumper harvest.

Income

In wide areas of China's countryside today, most households have surplus grain in store and savings in the bank as they never did before. And new family houses are mushrooming.

The per capita increase in peasants' income from 1979 to 1981 more than doubled the total increase shown over the two decades before 1976, according to survey conducted by the State Statistical Bureau.

The survey, involving 18,529 peasant households in 568 of the country's some 2,000 counties, revealed the average per capita income of the peasants reached 223.4 yuan in 1981, 89.8 yuan more than 1978.

This increase gained in only three years was more than twice the increase of 40.2 yuan per capita over the period from 1957 to 1976.

Another sign of the upsurge in rural economy is the consumer goods boom in the countryside.

Statistics showed that each rural resident spent an average 117.4 yuan buying consumer goods in 1981, 53.9 yuan or 84.9 per cent more than what they spent in 1978.

The upsurge of rural economy in past three years was largely attributed to the important changes in overall agricultural policies plus the widespread employment of scientific methods in farming, said Minister Lin.

These policy changes include the introduction of the "responsibility system" in 90 per cent of China's 5.7 million rural production teams.

This system allowed peasants to contract plots of farmland from their teams and to be paid according to the amount they produce from such a farm.

Another new policy increased the maximum quota of farmland set aside from peasants' private use from the former seven per cent to just below 15 per cent.

Moreover, the peasants are allowed to pursue such sidelines as raising their own livestock and poultry, breeding fish, doing handicraft work or other service trade.

As a result, the peasant's income from domestic sidelines also rose more than 100 per cent in the last three years.

In 1981, the income from sideline production accounted for more than one third of the total annual income of the Chinese peasants as against only one quarter before 1978.

CHINA'S SHIPPING DESIGN INDUSTRY FEATURED

HK070147 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0804 GMT 6 Oct 82

[Text] Shanghai, 6 Oct (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Since its establishment in Shanghai in 1961, the Chinese Shipping and Marine Engineering Design and Research Institute has accomplished the task of designing more than 600 models of boats and ships. About 300 of these models have been built by scores of shipyards throughout the country.

In the last 2 years, this research institute has designed 32 ships for shipowners in Singapore, Italy, Hong Kong and other countries, with a total deadweight capacity amounting to more than 400,000 tons. The task of designing 9 triple-purpose work ships for a shipowner in Singapore with capacity ranging from 4,000 to 6,000 horsepower has nearly been completed. The blueprints and designs of the project have been approved by the shipowner. According to a contract signed last March, these nine ships will be manufactured by the Hudong shipyard in Shanghai.

Since 1980, the Chinese Shipping and Marine Engineering Design and Research Institute has established business relations with more than 30 countries and areas in Europe, America, Asia and Australia and has carried out technical cooperation with countries such as Britain, France, West Germany, Norway, Switzerland, Denmark, the Netherlands, Greece, the United States, Canada, Japan and so forth, as well as with the Hong Kong area.

This institute is China's biggest organ in charge of the designing and development of shipping and marine engineering projects and one of the members of the international shipping model and experimental meeting. It has employed 1,200 senior engineers, engineers and technicians. A number of ships first manufactured in China were designed by this institute.

The main ships and boats designed by this research institute include: the 17,500-ton multipurpose oceangoing freighter "Hai Jian" for export; the 27,000-ton bulk freighter "Chang Cheng" for export; the oceangoing shooting range survey ship "Yuan Wang"; off-shore comprehensive survey ships "Xiang Yang Hong No. 10" and "Shi Jian"; the oceangoing salvage and lifesaving ship "J302"; "Bohai No. 1," China's first submerged off-shore drilling rig; "You Dian No 1," China's first submarine cable-laying ship; other large, medium and small landing ships and boats; full-cushion and side-cushion hovercraft; high-speed hydrofoil passenger ships; water-jetting propulsion speedboats; and so forth.

In May 1980, when China carried out an experimental launching of its first long-range guided missile in the Pacific, the electronic survey ships, meteorological survey ships and salvage and lifesaving ships used in the experiment were all designed by the institute.

CPC FORUM PLANS TO MARK MARX ANNIVERSARY

[Text] Beijing, 6 Oct (XINHUA) -- The Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee held a forum on 29 September to make preparations for commemorating the centenary of the death of Marx. The forum stressed the need of linking the commemorating activities with the study and propaganda of the 12th CPC Congress documents and the need for seriously planning and holding academic and propaganda activities in commemoration of Marx so that the broad sections of cadres and masses may receive further education in Marxism.

The centenary falls on 14 March 1983.

Wang Huide, deputy head of the Propaganda Department, said at the forum: During the commemoration activities, it is necessary to vigorously publicize that only the scientific Marxist theory can guide China's revolution and construction to victory and that only by integrating the universal truth of Marxism with China's concrete practice can we correctly grasp and resolve the various problems in China's revolution and construction. During the activities, it is necessary to teach the broad sections of cadres and masses to vigorously study and seriously understand Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, to deepen the situation and problems in the new period, to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization and to advance Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought.

Preparations for the commemoration activities are being actively and seriously made in the capital. Under the leadership of the Party School of the CPC Central Committee and the Academy of Social Sciences, party schools, social sciences research institutes, institutions of higher learning and academic groups have been organized to prepare papers for various symposiums and discussion meetings. Fruitful results have been achieved in this respect. Preparations are being stepped up for the opening next March of an exhibition on the life of Marx, which is jointly sponsored by the Bureau for translating Works of Marx, Engels, Lenin and Stalin and the Museum of the Chinese Revolution, and an exhibition of Marx and Engels' works and their dissemination in China, which is jointly sponsored by the Bureau for Translating Works of Marx, Engels, Lenin and Stalin and the Beijing Library. In addition, the publication bureau of the Ministry of Culture is making arrangements with relevant publishing houses to publish new editions of Marx' works, his biography, pictorials, memoirs and commemorative readers prior to his anniversary. Newspapers and journals, as well as radio stations, are preparing commemorative and theoretical articles for release during the anniversary period. Futhermore, the Ministry of Culture and the China Federation of Literary and Art Circles are organizing literary and art workers to stage theatrical programs for the occasion.

Participating comrades related to each other the preparatory work done for the commemoration. Present were some 40 responsible comrades from a dozen or so units, including the Party School of the CPC Central Committee, the Academy of Social Sciences, the Bureau for Translating Works of Marx, Engels, Lenin and Stalin under the CPC Central Committee, the Ministry of Culture, the Ministry of Education, the China Federation of Literary and Art Circles, the publication bureau of the Ministry of Culture, the Museum of the Chinese Revolution and Beijing Library.

SPACE INDUSTRY MINISTER ON ACHIEVEMENTS, PLANS

HK020502 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 2 Oct 82 National Day Supplement p 3

[Article by Zhang Jun, minister of space industry: "Fruits of Space Research Nourish Economy"]

[Text] Our country's space industry has developed because of the vision of the party Central Committee and the old proletarian revolutionaries -- Chairman Mao, Premier Zhou and the others.

Thanks to unified planning by the state, over the past 20 years or so a nationwide network of systematic scientific research and cooperation in space work has been set up, laying a foundation from which China's space industry can be developed through our own efforts.

We have persisted in taking our own road, responding to actual conditions and adopting advanced technology when it could move the industry forward. Although our space efforts started rather late, we have achieved high success, probably in less time and with less expense than if we had adopted others' techniques without adequate study of them.

Between 1970 -- when our country's first man-made satellite soared into space -- and 1976 we launched seven satellites. With the downfall of the gang of four, our space achievements have speeded up -- especially so after the third plenary session of the 11th Central Committee.

Pacific

We have launched several experimental satellites involving various aspects of science and technology. In 1980, we successfully shot a carrier rocket into a Pacific test area. In 1981, we sent up three satellites, using one rocket. A new type of satellite that we recently launched landed with pinpoint accuracy and was recovered safely after its planned orbiting journey. At present we are developing giant carrier rockets with which orbital satellites can be launched.

The national economy and scientific research are benefiting from the advances in science and technology made in space work.

The technology of telemetry, remote control and remote sensing are being applied more and more -- and reporting good results -- in agriculture, industry, forestry, medical treatment, hygiene, hydrogeology, mineral surveying, seismology, oceanology, and environmental monitoring. All point the way to further development of our space industry.

In his report to the 12th national party congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out that the key to the four modernizations is the modernization of science and technology. In the spirit of the congress, we must persist in making space science and technology serve the modernizations of agriculture, industry and national defence.

Advances

The space industry is determined to hold to this course of development in accordance with the condition and strength of the state in order to achieve the magnificent goal put forward by the 12th congress.

In this period of regulating progress to meet the needs of the national economy, it is imperative to give priority to practical development -- things urgently needed -- and to take the fruits of technology that are available now and apply them where needed.

The many uses of the advances and achievements of our space work have a profound significance for our country in the drive to achieve the four modernizations.

We will certainly be confronted with many difficulties in the future, but we are sure that the vast majority of the scientific and technological staff, workers and cadres at our ministry will overcome them -- and with great enthusiasm.

With wisdom and talent they are sure to make momentous contributions as we aim to achieve the great goal put forward by the party's 12th national congress.

PETROLEUM MINISTER DISCUSSES OIL INDUSTRY

[Article by Tang Ke, minister of petroleum industry]

[Text] The 12th National Congress of the Communist Party of China was the catalyst for change in all fields of socialist modernization. It has laid down the demanding task of striving to quadruple in real terms the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production by the end of this century.

Greatly inspired, the broad masses of oil workers and staff in China's oil industry are determined to develop further the petroleum industry and make contributions towards fulfilling the tasks laid down by the 12th party congress.

While inspecting the Daqing oil field on August 18th this year, Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the Chinese party Central Committee, encouraged the workers and staff to continue working in accordance with the revolutionary spirit traditional among Daqing workers. He went on to call upon them to achieve higher consciousness, higher scientific and technical competence, better organizational discipline and firmer will than in the 1960's and 1970's. Comrade Hu Yaobang's speech was a source of great encouragement to workers and staff in various oil enterprises.

Providing an important constituent part of China's energy resources, our petroleum industry has, in the 33 years since the founding of New China, expanded rapidly. A foundation of producing 100 million tons of crude oil a year has been laid. New progress has been made in all aspects of our work, particularly since the third plenary session of the 11th party congress, when a policy of readjustment was implemented, involving restructuring, consolidation and improvement.

Grand Objective

In light of the grand objective put forward at the party's 12th congress, development of the oil industry must be steady and continuous. It must accord with the demands of the development of our national economy.

First of all, better work should be done in maintaining a steady output from existing oil fields. From present production levels of 100 million tons a year, we have a firm foundation and foothold to make bigger strides, further improving products while at the same time consolidating our present base.

There is still great production potential in existing oil fields and some proven reserves which are under development have not been fully exploited. Many new resources can be explored in or in the vicinity of existing oil fields.

Oil and gas fields of various types have often been discovered, even in some areas which yielded nothing when they were first explored and are now being explored for the second or third time.

All this indicates that with the existing oil fields as a base, and relying on the improvement of exploitation techniques and exploration ability, we can not only stabilize the annual output of 100 million tons of onshore crude oil, but also increase output year by year.

For a long time to come, the emphasis in our work will be laid on greatly strengthening exploration and establishing backup reserves. Oil and gas resources are widely spread in the eastern and western parts of China's land mass. However, the scope of our exploration is still limited.

In the western part of China, in particular, there are several large basins with thick sedimentary rock formations and excellent conditions for oil formation. At present, we are still at the early preparatory stage of exploration.

By further absorbing advanced oil exploration techniques from abroad and by using sophisticated equipment we will strive to make major breakthroughs in the 1980s so as to lay a dependable material basis for the development of the petroleum industry in the 1990s. This will help us to bring about a remarkable increase in oil production in the years to come.

The exploration for off-shore oil resources is another important aspect in the development of the oil industry. According to the open door policy formulated by the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China and the State Council, we will continue to improve cooperation with foreign countries on the basis of equality and mutual benefit.

Oil Corporations

Up to now we have on separate occasions, signed contracts with oil corporations from Japan, France and the United States for cooperative exploration of parts of the sea areas in Bohai, Beibu Gulf, and the Yinggehai Basin.

During the first round of bidding for blocks in the South China Sea and South Yellow Sea, 33 foreign oil companies have put forward their proposals and work is developing smoothly.

We are making all kinds of preparations in order to do a better job. The Chinese Government's policy and principle on the issue of off-shore oil cooperation with foreign companies are firm and unshakable. We will have the support and cooperation from associated departments and regional organizations.

The crucial links to increase the economic results of the petroleum industry are: making a rational and effective use of oil and gas resources; developing downstream product processing facilities; and making better comprehensive use of petroleum. It is an urgent task to innovate, step by step, the existing refining and chemical enterprises with advanced techniques, and to rationalize our production structure and management. Efforts to do better work in recovering and making use of light crude oil and associated gas, and to increase production of raw materials for the chemical industry, will play an important role in increasing the nation's earnings. It will also help to expand the production of consumer goods.

Workers and cadres throughout the petroleum industry are studying conscientiously the documents of the 12th party congress. Realizing their heavy responsibilities and arduous tasks, they are determined to rally closely around the party Central Committee, take the spirit of the 12th party congress as their guideline, emancipate their minds, widen their horizons, and work hard and in a thorough-going manner to achieve better results in the petroleum industry.

RURAL ECONOMIC OUTPUT, DEVELOPMENT DISCUSSED

HK020436 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 2 Oct 82 National Day Supplement p 5

[Article by Du Runsheng, director of the Rural Policy Research Center of the CPC Central Committee Secretariat: "Flexible Policies Are Key to Rural Wealth"]

[Text] The Chinese countryside is undergoing a period of reform which finds expression in two ways. One is the change in cooperative economic production methods. The other is the adoption of a diversified economic development policy.

A job-responsibility system also appears within the co-operative economy in the countryside to bring forth the initiative of peasants towards production and to strengthen the collective economy.

However, land still belongs to the state. The administrative organizations of the co-operative economy jointly manage and co-ordinate agricultural work like farmland planning, irrigation systems, adoption of large agricultural machinery, and production planning.

At the same time, organizations encourage the enthusiasm of the peasants towards production by allocating land and farm tools to them under job-responsibility contracts but letting them run their own production. The organizations share the products with the peasants according to the contracts.

The contractors share the collective expenses according to the quality of their individual plots and get what they produce. Collectively-owned businesses and sideline occupations are assigned to the peasants after agreement on output, investment and profits.

The agricultural cooperative system thus involves management at several levels. The unified management of brigades and communes meshes with the individual management of peasants. This has changed production methods. Under the general plan, each peasant household can arrange its yearly work as it wishes and family members can cooperate with each other in their work.

Productive Method

This method of production may seem backward compared with centralized management and general distribution of manpower, but it suits the production forces in the countryside and so promotes production.

It takes into account the interests of individuals and overcomes the shortcomings of egalitarianism in work payments. this method also gives peasants freedom in production, removing the likelihood of confused orders and other inefficiencies. It combines power, responsibility and individual interests, fanning the peasants' enthusiasm toward agricultural production.

In a developing country like China, socialist reform in agriculture is sure to be a long process. Since economic conditions in each part of the country are different, agricultural management must also take different forms during a certain process.

It will get us nowhere to go after equality in agricultural management. Therefore, any production methods that can lead peasants to socialism should be adopted and encouraged.

China is a big country with a large population but a rather small amount for farmland. It is difficult to make the 800 million peasants rich quickly with limited farmland. For a long time we emphasized only the importance of grain production and neglected other crops. As a result, lots of forests and grassland were destroyed, and many lakes were filled in to produce grain. It did not increase the output of grain production but seriously broke the ecological balance.

In recent years, the party and government have called on peasants to develop agricultural production comprehensively. Apart from grain and cash crop production, animal husbandry, forestry and all forms of household sideline occupations, peasants have also established enterprises which process farm produce and have developed other small industries which require manpower rather than machines. They also set up service and commerical transportation businesses.

Diversified Economy

"We must positively develop diversified economic activity and pay close attention to grain production" is a slogan put forward by the party Central Committee and State Council. So we should develop mountainous or hilly areas, grassland and lakes by using our large labour force. This will have many benefits, raising peasants' income, accumulating agricultural funds, improving the diet of Chinese people and reducing the pressure of demand for grain. It will also use local labour forces in rural areas, thus avoiding further drift to China's already overcrowded cities, and will promote ecnomic effectiveness by reducing the amount of transport needed.

It can be used to maintain the ecological balance of the environment and train a great number of people. It will heighten the material and spiritual civilization of Chinese people in rural areas, reducing the differences between town and the countryside.

On the basis of further diversifying economic activity, a great number of farm households which specialize in animal husbandry, forestry, small handicrafts, industry and transport have emerged. They are usually called "specialized families."

Some are contractors belonging to the collective economy compared with those who operate individually. Some join forces and operate within a group of several families. Although this new form of agricultural production is in an experimental state, it has indicated the direction which will lead farm production to specialization and socialization.

These "specialized families" engage in commodity production and are quite different from self-supporting families of the past. As the members of "specialized families" are experienced in management and have production skills, so most of them achieve better economic results and are therefore better off than ordinary families.

It is natural for some peasants to become rich more rapidly than others through their labour and skills, and it is really a good thing to have richer peasant families under the socialist system -- as long as they do not exploit others -- because others can follow the same path.

In the course of economic development, many individual families will face common difficulties that will require joint efforts and co-operation in some phases of production. In that case, we can organize them well for production.

As is pointed out in a document from the 12th party congress, "it can be predicted that in the not too distant future, there will emerge in our rural areas an improved cooperative economy, with a diversity of forms, which will be able to capitalise on their advantages in the light of local conditions and facilitate the large scale adoption of advanced production measures."

By the end of this century, the lives of peasants in our country will reach a comparatively high standard, with their education and public health improved. Their consumption level of food and clothing and access to transport all also reach the world's medium level.

CHEN MUHUA DISCUSSES FOREIGN TRADE POLICY

[Article by Chen Muhua, State Council member and foreign economic relations and trade minister: "Openness Guides China's Foreign Trade Policy"]

[Text] In his speech at the 12th congress of the Communist Party of China, Comrade Deng Xiaoping explicitly announced that "China will unswervingly carry out the policy of openness to the world so as to expand its economic exchanges with foreign countries on the basis of equality and mutual benefit."

This will be the guiding principle of our foreign economic relations and trade.

Since the Third Plenary Session of the Central Committee of the 11th Congress of the Communist Party of China in December 1978, the committee has put forward the policy of openness to the world. The aim is to enliven China's domestic economy.

The policy aims to exploit both domestic and foreign resources, open domestic and international markets, organise China's domestic construction, and develop its economic relations with foreign countries.

Trade

Ever since then, China's foreign economic relations and trade have been developing rapidly. In 1981, international trade value reached a record high of $40 billion.

Its absorption of foreign capital through contracts amounted to more than $7 billion, of which more than two billion have already been put to use.

It also acquired a total of $3 billion foreign investment through joint ventures, joint exploration of offshore oil, and small and medium-sized compensation trade, and has put into use one billion of that total.

Moreover, it has signed more than 600 contracts, worth nearly $1 billion, for construction projects abroad and international labour service co-operation in dozens of countries and regions in the world.

All these indicate that China's foreign economic relations and trade have made a good beginning and promise a bright future.

Yet we have more things to do. Recently, the Central Committee set the goal for China's international trade value to quadruple to $160 billion in real terms by the end of this century.

The realisation of this goal demands new efforts in providing economic and technical aid to Third World countries, in developing bilateral and multi-lateral economic and technical co-operation, in tapping foreign capital, importing and exporting technology, and acquiring contracts for construction projects abroad and international labour service co-operations.

We will pay special attention to information collecting, commodity production and marketing, and learn to handle the correlation between imports, exports, sales at home and abroad, and production and marketing.

We will also study and perfect our international trade system so that the initiative at the local level may be brought into fuller play.

Closer investigation and study will be made so that we may be better informed of the situation on the world market with regard to trends in supply and demand, price movements, changes in currencies, the status of foreign commodities, as well as feedback about Chinese products.

At home, we will improve the structure of our export commodities, try to produce new products for export and at the same time expand production of our traditionally renowned commodities and develop them into the mainstay of foreign trade.

Transport

We will also improve the quality, increase varieties, and perfect the packagings, of our export commodities so that they may better satisfy the demand of the world market.

In order to increase sales of our commodities on the world market we will also expedite our transport system and improve marketing by setting up or amplifying our sales network.

Neither will we ignore improvements in the management of our international trade, or the need to raise the competitiveness of our export commodities on the world market. In this connection, we will stick to the principle of unified planning, unified policies, and concerted efforts to deal with foreigners.

We will also seek unity of thinking on the using of foreign capital and the import of technologies. We will try to win the confidence of foreign investors by perfecting our legislation.

Working Style

We will make plans for work in this field, and in related ones such as the accumulation of domestic capital and the improvement of our working style and work efficiency.

Acquiring contracts for construction projects abroad and establishing labour service co-operation with foreign countries offer good prospects for us. We will accordingly try to achieve a more rapid development of them over the near future, and through them expand our exports of building materials, machinery and electric products, and to promote our manufacturing industry.

For this purpose, we will do more in investigation and research, accumulate more data, learn to master the situation on the world market, and find out the rules guiding work in this field. We will also train more specialized and versatile workers to take up such jobs.

It is our unshakable international duty to help the peoples of the Third World to safeguard their national independence, develop their national economies and support their just struggles against imperialism, colonialism and hegemonism.

Our friendship with the Third World is sincere. But we will always respect their sovereignty instead of asking for any privileges or attaching any conditions when we establish co-operation with them or provide aid to them.

Moreover, we will regard their affairs as our own and try to help them achieve more with less expenditure, proceeding from their requirement and our capability. We will try to have an overall understanding of their economies so that we may cooperate with them better. We will also help them to train their own specialists, so that they may stand on their own in the future.

Bright Prospects

China is nevertheless a developing socialist country, and is therefore limited in its capacity to help. But we will certainly expand friendly co-operation with the Third World as our economic construction develops.

Our task in foreign economic relations and international trade is tremendous, and we have a long way to go, yet the prospect is bright. I am firmly convinced that we have before us bright prospects for our international trade so long as we make unified and untiring efforts under the inspiration of the 12th Congress of the Communist Party of China.

COMMISSION OFFICIAL ON TWO-PHASE ECONOMIC PLAN

HK020418 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 2 Oct 82 National Day Supplement p 2

[Article by Lu Dong, vice chairman of the State Economic Commission: "Long-Term Economic Plan Envisages Two Phases"]

[Text] The 12th National Congress of the Communist Party of China which ended not long ago has set the goal for the party and the whole nation to quadruple 1980's gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production by the end of this century.

It was put forward after thorough investigation of present conditions, potentials and the foundations of the Chinese economy. It can be realized with the persevering efforts of the people of the whole country.

We are confident of this because our party has reestablished its ideological, political and organizational lines since the third session of the 11th party Central Committee.

Ideologically, the party has set to right things which had been thrown into disorder, and brought forth a situation of unity, peace and improved livelihood. It has weeded our "leftist" ideas in the economic field and has carried out policies of economic readjustment, reorganization and development. The national economy has steadily moved onto the right track as a result of this.

Moreover, our country is rich in natural resources and labour and has a relatively large industrial foundation after more than 33 years of construction. It has amassed experience in business management, bringing up a batch of professionals in management and engineers. All this supports us in realizing our goal.

First 10 Years

In order to achieve the goal, the party Central Committee has decided to divide the time from now until the end of this century into two periods -- each of 10 years. The first 10 years is especially important because it will lay the foundations, amass strength and create opportunities for the economic revival and rapid development of the latter 10 years.

In the first 10 years, we must try to do two things. We must concentrate funds on major construction projects centering on energy and transport. Then we must encourage enterprises to give priority to making technical innovations to raise production.

We depend on two things to achieve our goal: policy and science. We count on policy to bring out the initiative of staff members, enterprises and local organizations, and we rely on science to develop production.

We aim to supply our industry and transport system with advanced technological equipment and speed up the replacement of aging products with advanced technolgoy. This will enable us to achieve better economic results when we carry out major construction work, and to make technical innovations in present enterprises.

Adopting advanced scientific technology can double industrial and agricultural production. This has been proved by China and many industrially advanced countries.

To open up to the world and enlarge economic and technical exchange with foreign countries on the basis of equality and mutual benefit is our country's firm and unshakable strategic policy.

In the future, we will continue to make good use of foreign funds and introduce advanced technology suitable to China, especially that which is conducive to technical innovation.

In doing so, it will be helpful to quicken socialist modernization, and helpful to strengthen exchange and cooperation with friendly countries. With the development of our economy, our economic power will be strengthened and we will be able to make more contribution to the world at large.

SICHUAN YOUNG, MIDDLE-AGED CADRES PROMOTED

HK040417 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 3 Oct 82

[Text] Our province has achieved a prominent success in selecting excellent young and middle-aged cadres to hold posts in leading party and government organs at and above the county level and has thus made a step toward the goal of rendering leading bodies at all levels revolutionary, young, educated and professionally competent.

In the 2 years or so before June this year, 4,574 young and middle-aged cadres were promoted to posts in leading party and government organs at the provincial, prefectural, municipal, autonomous prefectural and county levels. They have taken up major leading posts in departments, committees, bureaus and offices at the provincial level; in departments, committees and offices at the prefectural level; and in enterprises and nonproductive public organizations at and above the county level. The average age in the standing committees of 11 out of the 18 prefectural, municipal and autonomous prefectural CPC committees has been reduced to about 50. The average age of the magistrates and deputy magistrates of the people's governments of all countries has been lowered by 4.2 years. Besides, 20 professors were promoted to leading posts in institutes of higher learning in the last 2 years.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the provincial CPC committee has strengthened its leadership over the work of promoting young and middle-aged cadres. Many meetings were held to discuss how to select and promote young and middle-aged cadres. The principal responsible comrades of the provincial CPC committee personally examined and approved the young and middle-aged cadres selection and promotion scheme formulated by the Organizational Work Department of the provincial CPC committee. He demanded that the CPC committees at all levels must follow the directive of the party's central authorities to attach importance to the work of selecting and promoting those cadres who have both ability and political integrity and are revolutionary, young, educated and professionally competent to replenish leading bodies at all levels, to realize the cooperation between and the succession from old to new cadres and devote every effort to promoting this work as a strategic task. However, they were required to strengthen their work from two aspects: 1) Rely on old cadres; 2) Follow the mass line in a down-to-earth manner. In other words, they were to extensively heed the opinions of the masses, adopt the method of integrating the masses' recommendation with organizational assessment, and adhere to principles in selecting and promoting cadres. By taking the above measures, the province managed to speed up the work of promoting young and middle-aged cadres.

After promoting young and middle-aged cadres to hold leading posts, the leading bodies at all levels have become more dynamic than ever.

The Standing Committee of the Daxian Prefectural CPC Committee absorbed a comparatively large number of young and middle-aged new members in the last two years. As a result, the average age of the members of the standing committee has fallen to 48.4. As they are energetic, they can frequently go to the first front of production to carry out investigations and give specific guidance and thus score relatively good results. Through public opinion polls and organizational assessment, the provincial construction bureau promoted five young and middle-aged cadres to be deputy bureau chiefs.

Bringing about a fundamental turn for the better in the country's financial and economic situation, in the standards of social conduct and in the style of the party is a basic requirement for implementing the program and principles laid down by the congress and is a major sign for accomplishing the various tasks of the congress. In order to attain this aim, it is necessary to adopt a series of important measures and, what is especially important, do a good job of the following four tasks:

1. We should actively institute system reform and the reform of the economic system and, through succession of the old by the new and cooperation between old and new cadres, gradually ensure that the ranks of the cadres become more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent.

2. While building socialist material civilization, it is necessary to build socialist spiritual civilization, develop socialist democracy and improve the socialist legal system.

3. It is necessary to crack down on criminal activities in the economic and other spheres that sabotage socialism.

4. On the basis of conscientiously studying the new party constitution, it is necessary to rectify the party style and consolidate the party organizations.

Comrade Tan Qilong emphatically pointed out: The key to studying well the documents of the 12th party congress lies in the leading cadres at various levels who should first study well and have a good grasp of the essence of the documents and unify their thinking on the basis of the principles and policies of the 12th party congress. It is necessary to study and discuss the documents in light of our ideology and work, but this is aimed deepening our understanding of the essence of the documents. We should not be eager to solve specific problems without a good grasp of the essence of the guidelines of the 12th party congress. In brief, in their current study, the various units should make great efforts to truly understand the essence of the documents and, on this basis, link them with the reality in their own locality, department and unit. They must try as hard as possible to solve those problems that can be solved and draw up plans and measures for realizing the objectives of struggle set forth by the 12th party congress.

Comrade Tan Qilong finally said: It has been decided by the provincial CPC committee that we shall start by going to the grassroots level to explain and publicize the guidelines of the 12th party congress and purposefully solve some problems raised by the masses. The propaganda and theoretical departments in various localities should organize their forces, understand in good time the conditions in their study and give more guidance and help to the study so that the study can be conducted in a down-to-earth manner and can achieve effective results.

Therefore, the spirit of the 12th party congress will be made known to every household and every person."

"2. Deng Xiaoping's opening speech should be adopted as the general guiding idea in all activities of study and propagation. This means that under the guidance of communist ideology we should persist in the socialist road and concentrate our efforts on socialist modernization. We must grasp this fundamental point while studying and publicizing congress documents."

Meanwhile, in the study emphasis must be placed on understanding how to promote the socialist relationship of equality, unity and mutual assistance among all nationalities of our country and how to create a new situation in socialist modernization in Xizang."

"4. It is necessary to run all types of study classes and to train a good number of propagandists and instructors. All organs of propaganda and the mass media should be fully used."

"5. Around National Day, the activities of civility and courtesy should be further promoted in line with the spirit of the congress.

Attention must be drawn to public sanitation in cities and solving the problem of dirtiness, disorder and poor service. In conjunction with education in communist morality, CYL organizations must arouse their members and young people to take an active part in the activities of doing a good deed for the people."

"6. Party organizations at all levels should give strong leadership and be good at linking the study and propagation of congress documents with their work in all fields."

YUNNAN'S AN PINGSHENG CHECKS COUNTY PIG RAISING

HK041220 Kunming Yunnan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 1 Oct 82

[Summary] "Recently An Pingsheng, first secretary of the Yunnan Provincial CPC Committee, inspected pig raising in Luliang County. He said: The speciality division is an effective measure in rapidly raising pigs."

At present, Luliang County has overfulfilled 50 percent of their annual purchase of pigs. Some pig-raising families of this county raised sows, some raised mature pigs and some raised fat pigs. Xinjia brigade was good at raising fat pigs. They bought mature pigs at markets, raised them to become fat pigs and then sold them. In this way only, some families earned 1,000-2,000 yuan a year.

An Pingsheng visited two pig-raising families of (Jin Guangzhao) and (Jin Fushen), who have raised the most pigs in the brigade. (Jin Guangzhao) sold 67 pigs to the state and (Jin Fushen) sold 57.

"An Pingsheng carefully asked about the source of pigs, pig feed, prevention of pig disease, method of the peasants' payment and their income. He said: Your experiences are very good. Some families specially raise sows and sell piglets, and some others specially raise fat pigs. They can raise a mature pig from 100 jin to over 200 jin within 2-3 months. This method of dividing speciality is favorable to rapidly developing the method for preparing pigs for the market.

"An Pingsheng continued: (Jin Guangzhao) and (Jin Fushen), these two families who specially raise fat pigs, proceed in their production under the guidance of state plan and they are supported by collective economy. The two families require just three persons to raise the pigs. In the busy season, they also have to budget their time to take part in agricultural labor. The rest of the family members only help in odd work after their days of labor. The rich manure collected in pig raising is given to the brigade. The brigade records it and distributes grain according to the amount. Some additional feed is supplied by the state in a planned way. The pigs raised up are all sold to the state. The reward grain gained in selling pigs is also used as feed for pigs. This kind of family engaged in raising pigs is beneficial to the state, collective and individual and has nothing to do with capitalism.

"Comrade An Pingsheng encouraged them to make further efforts in raising more fat pigs to support the country's four modernizations."

(Jin Guangzhao) said: In the past, the cadres also encouraged me to raise more pigs, but I was always in fear of being labeled a capitalist. Now I feel secure. On the next day, he again sold five pigs to the state. He has planned to raise another 20 fat pigs by the end of this year.

(Jin Fishen) said: I intend to sell 70 pigs to the state; there are 7 members in my family, an average of 10 pigs per person.

The peasants of the brigade pledged to learn from these two families, make contributions to the country and strive to quadruple the total output value of agriculture by the end of this century.

Public Reaction

OW060529 Taipei CHINA POST in English 30 Sep 82 p 12

[Text] Public reaction to a six-point statement issued jointly by a gathering of nonpartisan parliamentarians Tuesday has been subdued, and generally negative when it has been voiced.

"Political Beliefs"

The joint statement spelling out six "common political beliefs" was issued at a "city government discussion and fellowship" meeting attended by nonpartisan members of the National Assembly, the Control Yuan, the Legislative Yuan, the Taiwan Provincial Council, the Taichung and Kaohsiung City Councils.

The statement presented the common views of the nonpartisans concerning a number of topics such as martial law, organization of the National Assembly, the ban on the formation of political parties and the publication of newspapers, human rights, local autonomy, the separation of party and state and other sensitive issues. For the most part, the opinions expressed were in divergence with the staced policies of the central government and the ruling KMT party.

In Spite of Kang's Disapproval

Another statement, not approved by the "fellowship," was released which purported to be "joint statement" by a number of persons serving prison terms for their complicity in the FORMOSA MAGAZINE incident. National Assembly Woman Chou Chingyu, wife of one of the convicted men supposedly issuing the statement, allowed the statement to be released in spite of the disapproval of Legislator Kang Ning-hsiang who is considered to be one of the main pillars of the nonpartisan alliance.

No official response to the statements has been made, but reactions expressed in the local press would indicate that under the present circumstances the furtherance of democracy must not be at the expense of unity, which is the major prerequisite for attaining the goal of reunifying China under the three principles of the people.

LIEN HO PAO Editorial

[Editorial: "Is It Not Strange; Where Did the 'Common Statement' Come From?"]

[Text] Nonpartisan personages held a "municipal administration seminar" at the Chungshan Hall in Taipei on 28 September. Some people were seen distributing a so-called "common statement of victims of Formosa" at the entrance. This "common statement" was signed signed by Huang Hsin-chieh, Chang Chun-hung, Yao Chia-wen and Lin Hung-i who are currently serving sentences. This is a shocking thing to do. Without first going through its contents, we think that this "common statement" itself cannot be tolerated in a society ruled by law. This is because:

1. Huang Hsin-chien, Chang-hung, Yao Chia-wen and Lin Hung-i have been convicted to serve fixed prison terms. They have lost their political rights as well as all other rights as citizens, including the right to serve in public offices; they no longer hold the right to express their views as citizens with regard to the affairs of the country and society, much less the right to issue a so-called "common statement" touching on the affairs of the country and society. If what they did is true, it will only show more glaringly that they are still scornful of the law of the state in spite of the fact that they have been sanctioned by the law.

2. According to article 65, chapter IX, of the "prison law" governing visits of family members, friends and relatives of the convicted persons, "aside from other provisions governing such visits, the visits should have been closely monitored and stopped if any violation of prison discipline had been detected." Article 66 of the same law also stipulates that "incoming and outgoing mail shall be inspected by prison officials and the mail shall be barred if any violation of prison discipline is discovered." These rules restricting conversations between convicted persons and their family members, friends and relatives, and limiting mail are far more strict in military prisons. Such being the case, how then could these four convicted persons including Huang Hsin-chien manage to issue and jointly discuss a "common statement" attacking the "ruling authorities." Were family members, friends and relatives of these convicted persons allowed to bring tape recorders with them on their visits?

3. According to the explanations given by Chang Chun-hung's wife Hsu Jung-shu and Yao Chia-wen's wife Chou Ching-yu, this "common statement" represented the views on the affairs of the country expressed by the convicted persons to their visiting family members, and the "common statement" was "compiled in a comprehensive way." However, the four convicted persons did not get to read the finished manuscript. This "common statement" was therefore not one decided on by the convicted persons but rather one issued by their family members. Thus, can it be called a "common statement" of the convicted persons of Formosa?"

Based on the above analysis, obviously, the "common statement" was illegal. We feel that we should get to the bottom of this matter so that the public may know the truth and the rule of law may be upheld. We suggest that, first of all, the responsible persons of the military detention facilities be questioned to find out whether or not they did their best to monitor and record the conversations between the family members, friends and relatives of the convicted persons, and to prevent them from bringing in tape recorders during their visits.

The personnel of the military detention facilities should be dealt with severely if they are found to have neglected their duties. On the other hand, if this "common statement" was a fabrication and the four convicted persons did not discuss the subject at all with their visiting family members, friends and relatives, and did not tape record anything they discussed with them, then the military legal authorities should flatly refute the family members of these four convicted persons by accusing them of fabricating things in violation of the provisions of the prison law, and should bar them from future visits.

We also suggest that the nonpartisan personages clarify their attitude on the "common statement." The nonpartisan personages, while always harping on the rule of law, have contradicted the spirit of law in this matter. If the nonpartisan personages are to tolerate such actions as taken by the family members of the four convicted persons, they have no right to speak about the rule of law from now on. Legislator Kang Ning-hsiang, a nonpartisan person, told Chun Ching-yu, family member of one of the convicted persons: "You should never do this kind of thing." It is quite obvious that "this kind of thing," in the eyes of the law, "should never be done." For this reason, the nonpartisan personages must solemnly declare that "this kind of thing should never be done." Otherwise, those who have been championing democracy and the rule of law, by being undemocratic and lawless themselves, will find it hard to make things clear to the public.

Although the "common statement of the convicted persons of Formosa" stated that "with this we hope to arouse the people of all strata in the country to squarely face the realities and to put their political conscience and the people's wisdom into play," the contents of the "common statement" actually run counter to political conscience and reflect no people's wisdom because this document was distributed against the rule of law and to create social unrest; thus it constitutes an act against political conscience and the people's wisdom. The authorities concerned must therefore get to the bottom of this matter and clear up this strange absurdity.

Statement Banned

OW062319 Taipei CHINA POST in English 1 Oct 82 p 12

[Text] The Taiwan Garrison Command yesterday officially censored the "joint statement" by persons serving prison terms for their involvement in the "FORMOSA MAGAZINE incident" which was released at a recent meeting of nonpartisan parliamentarians in Taipei.

The command announced its decision that the statement was in violation of the martial law publication regulations and was liable to seriously confuse the issues.

The decision was accompanied by a notice to all schools, libraries, newspapers, magazines, clubs, societies, unions and any other organizations that the statement is banned from any form of reproduction or publication.

The tone of the statement which was released at the "city government discussion and fellowship meeting" held at Taipei City Hall Tuesday was considered to be inflammatory and in direct opposition to the stated policies of the nation. Most observers felt that the statement expressed views typical of the "Taiwan Independence Movement," a group which is outlawed in the Republic of China.

Professor Huang Yu-chin of Chengchi University told a local paper yesterday that he was very concerned about the fate of the nonpartisan faction if they step across the boundary that divides the two realms of politics and public disorder. He warned the nonpartisans against attempting to further the development of democratic systems in Taiwan at the expense of unity under the three principles of the people.

[Text] Taipei, Oct 7 (CNA) — Foreign Affairs Minister Chu Fu-sung Wednesday reaffirmed that the Republic of China will not enter into any negotiations or make contact with the communist regime in Peiping.

Reporting at a meeting held by the Foreign Affairs Committee in Legislative Yuan, Minister Chu made clear the fundamental policy once again, stressing that all foreign policy should be in accord with it.

He further said that Communist China is continuing its plan and plot of ruining us domestically by creating turbulence and isolating us internationally.

"The so-called peace program set in the 'joint communique' issued by the United States and the Communist China is only an empty gesture, based on nothing," he said.

The minister finally emphasized that the main task currently is to pull the nation out of the hardship of being isolated by the communist regime and to rebuild the nation's position in the world.

OW061225 Taipei CHING CHI JIH PAO in Chinese 30 Sep 82 p 1

[Text] The Nuclear Energy Research Institute, under the Atomic Energy Council, indicated yesterday that through several years of research on the development and manufacture of nuclear fuel the institute now has acquired the capability of producing nuclear fuel, adding that in coordination with the national nuclear energy policy it will take part in helping to build a domestic nuclear fuel manufacturing industry. At yesterday's nuclear fuel technology discussion meeting, the institute indicated that results of its research in the past few years include the following:

Nuclear fuel development: 1) Extraction of titanium oxide from heavy sand along the coast; 2) using titanium oxide particles to absorb powered uranium in sea water and extracting uranium by washing; 3) extraction of uranium from phosphoric acid; powdered uranium is extracted in the process of phosphoric acid production; a manufacturing plant has been built with an annual capacity to produce 10 tons of yellow cake [huang bing 7806 7399] (308).

Manufacture of industrial grade nuclear raw materials: A plant has been built to produce up to 10 tons of uranium dioxide each year. It has also begun trial production of fuel pellets [ran liao wan 3595 2436 0029].

Research in material and fuel production technology: Trial production of zirconium alloy, uranium carbide and titanium dioxide is under way.

GOVERNOR ADDRESSES LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL 6 OCT

On Sino-British Talks

HK070202 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 7 Oct 82 p 1

[Excerpt] Sino-British talks on the future of Hong Kong have started at diplomatic level, the governor, Sir Edward Youde, said yesterday.

"Meetings in Beijing to follow up Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's visit have begun," Sir Edward said in his maiden policy address to the Legislative Council.

He declined to disclose the contents of the talks, but a spokesman said the governor himself would certainly step in when necessary.

The start of talks was greeted with mixed feelings, but one observer doubted whether the "real" talks had started.

In Beijing, a British Embassy spokesman confirmed that talks had begun, but he also refused to give details or say who was taking part.

"The contents of the talks must necessarily remain confidential," said Sir Edward. "The aim will be to complete them as soon as possible."

The governor also did not say how many meetings had actually taken place already.

The talks have started amid increasing nervousness among local investors about the political and economic future of Hong Kong.

Share prices plummeted following Mrs Thatcher's visit, but there was a partial recovery on Tuesday. However, the Hang Seng Index of leading shares closed 16 points lower yesterday at 856.

The Hong Kong dollar also hit an all-time low of 6.73 to one U.S. dollar on Tuesday, but made up some ground yesterday to close at 6.48.

Sir Edward said in his speech that the talks involved complex issues and there were differences to be reconciled.

"So steady nerves will be needed in the months ahead," he added, in what was seen as a reference to the volatility of the financial market.

Sir Edward said he shared Mrs Thatcher's belief that given the common objective, the differences can be reconciled and an agreement can be reached which will be acceptable to China and Britain, and which will be welcomed by the people of Hong Kong.

The governor, in his first major address to the council since taking office five months ago, said as far as the Hong Kong Government is concerned, "We shall go forward with confidence to pursue our policies and programmes to their conclusion and to project them into the future.

"It is the policy and the firm intention of this government to invest vigorously in the future of Hong Kong and its people."

Sir Edward also referred to the growing importance to the Hong Kong economy of China's modernisation programme and the problem of Chinese immigration to the colony, both legal and illegal. He said China was now the largest source of Hong Kong's imports, the biggest market for re-exports through Hong Kong and the fourth largest importer of goods made in the colony. While illegal immigration from China had been checked by tight security along the border, the government continued to be concerned by the arrival of some 55,000 legal Chinese immigrants annually, he said. Sir Edward said the administration was in close touch with the Chinese authorities and hoped that it would soon be possible to reduce the level of immigration.

He noted that Hong Kong's economic growth target for this year had been eroded by the global recession, but added that things were likely to be better next year, given an improvement in the economies of developed countries.

In his conclusion, Sir Edward said that our policies and programmes remain imaginative, ambitious and forward-looking.

"New towns and housing estates will continue to rise in the New Territories," he said. "The aged and the disadvantaged will be cared for with a growing sense of compassion."

"More modern hospitals and clinics will serve the needs of the sick and the expanding education system at all levels will educate more youth in the skills of the modern world.

"Hong Kong's domestic and international transport networks and facilities will be further developed, and major public works will improve and enlarge the infrastructure of the territory," said Sir Edward.

"In pursuing these policies and programmes, and in setting our priorities, we shall be prudent in our public expenditure for we must not live beyond our means."

On Trade With China

HK070338 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 7 Oct 82 p 12

[Excerpts] The economic prospects for Hong Kong next year are likely to be better than this year, the governor, Sir Edward Youde, said yesterday.

It is to be hoped improved growth in several economies -- such as the United States and Germany -- may bring about some recovery in world trade, he said in his address to the opening session of the 1982/83 Legislative Council.

Sir Edward said he was confident the export sector will be quick to capitalise on any recovery, given the very competitive prices of Hong Kong's domestic exports.

But the performance of the economy so far this year has been "disappointing. We now expect Hong Kong's gross domestic product to grow by only four per cent in 1982," he said.

But Sir Edward said there had been no sign of serious unemployment. "The unemployment rate in March this year was only 3.5 percent -- significantly less than the 4.1 percent recorded at the same time last year."

Some factory workers are working shorter hours, but the manufacturing sector as a whole is not shedding labour on any substantial scale, the governor added.

"Wages and salaries have increased all round in real terms, partly because the rate of inflation had fallen."

He said inflation is now running at about 11 percent per annum, after remaining at around 15 percent for two years.

He said trading relations with China had been good. China has moved from being the second largest source of Hong Kong's imports to being the largest, overtaking Japan, and has become the largest market for Hong Kong's domestic exports.

Sir Edward talked about the water agreement with China which requires major works on both sides of the border, with China-based construction companies winning significant public works contracts in Hong Kong.

"I have seen at first hand some of the investments of our manufacturers and entrepreneurs in the special economic zone in Shumchun and also in Canton.

"On the other side of the coin is the steadily growing investments by China-based companies in Hong Kong," Sir Edward said.

He welcomed the participation of the China Resources Company in the Tin Shui Wai development and the decision of the Bank of China to make a major investment in building a new head office in Central.

"This strengthening of our economic ties with China has been matched by a rapid expansion in the network of air and sea links with Chinese cities," he said.

On Guangdong Nuclear Plant

HK070346 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 7 Oct 82 p 13

[Text] The government has agreed to buy electricity generated by nuclear power plants in China, provided the cost is no greater than that of power generated by conventional plants in Hong Kong, Sir Edward said.

But he said discussions between China and other governments and companies with an interest in the proposed nuclear plant in Guangdong are still continuing.

"The government has agreed in principle to Hong Kong taking power from China provided that the cost is no greater than it would be if we provided the necessary fossil fuel based generating plant in Hong Kong," he said.

Sir Edward also pledged that the government will closely monitor the safety aspect of the plant.

"Should the Chinese authorities decide to build the plant near to Hong Kong we should have an interest in it, not only as a source of power, but in its safety.

"We have no reason to believe that those involved will be other than responsible in their attitude to the safety of the plant both in construction and operation."

In so far as the plant is likely to affect Hong Kong, Sir Edward said the government would keep the issue under close and careful review.

WEN WEI PO ON 'UNEQUAL TREATIES,' SOVEREIGNTY

[Editorial: "Regaining Sovereignty Has Legal Basis"]

[Text] On Chinese soil, British Prime Minister Thatcher repeatedly declared that the "Nanjing Treaty" and the other two treaties "must be abided by" and "cannot be abrogated." Naturally, this fallacy imbued with colonialism has aroused the indignation of Hong Kong compatriots and has once again recalled to the 1 billion Chinese people the history of aggression against China by the British Empire.

Today, the time has already passed when people can seek hegemony by gunboat diplomacy. If Mrs Thatcher holds that the Soviet Union has trampled on the principles of international law and violated the UN Charter through their expansion everywhere, bullying of weak nations and grabbing of benefits and thus that people all over the world must oppose Soviet hegemonism, then how can the British Government today still demand that people "abide by" those unequal treaties signed by their ancestors after invading China and threatening China with armed forces? Is this not an act of trampling on the principles of international law?

When speaking of the unequal treaties, the British prime minister repeatedly stressed that the British always observe laws. May we ask: A Western nation sent its gunboats to the Far East, sold opium by force to another sovereign country and forced this country to sign "treaties" with them which were like indentures by which people sell themselves to others.

How can it be said that Britain in the 19th century observed international laws? No they demand that people observe the unequal treaties which they, in violation of int national laws, forced China to sign by using armed force. Is that not ridiculous?

Before World War I, imperialist states could defy laws, invade other countries and force others to sign unequal treaties with them.

Since the passing of two world wars, all countries in the world have tended to treat benefits gained through aggression as illegal and included this in international law The UN Charter guarantees the sovereignty of all countries and gives this definition aggression: "Aggression means that a country uses armed strength to violate another country's sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence." In 1969, "Vienna Pact on Treaty Law" was signed in Vienna. Its 52d article stipulates: "Trea which violate the principles of international law specified in the UN Charter and wh are signed under threat or with resort to armed strength are invalid."

This international legal principle was accepted by all countries in the world a long time ago. As for the three unequal treaties Mrs Thatcher has mentioned, they were declared invalid as early as the success of the 1911 revolution led by Dr Sun Yat-se and the founding of the PRC in 1949.

What is laughable is the fact that some people still pretend to be naive or stupid. They drivel: "The Chinese Government is still 'observing' those treaties."

The right to interfere in China's tariffs; the right to examine China's sovereignty foreign trade, consular jurisdiction, the ability of foreigners to enter and leave Chinese cities freely; and the right to open five Chinese ports for trade -- all of were stipulated in the "Nanjing Treaty," "Beijing Treaty" and other unequal treaties have all been dropped into the Pacific Ocean by the Chinese people since the first f star red flag was hoisted in 1949. But now Mrs Thatcher wants the Chinese Governmen abide by these treaties. Doesn't she want to relive the old experience of aggressio

Mrs Thatcher assumes that she can use the problem of China's foreign exchange revenu from Hong Kong to force Beijing to barter away national dignity and sovereignty.

To be frank, China gains foreign exchange from Hong Kong on the basis of mutual bene The foreign exchange is not taken for nothing -- it is exchanged for goods sold. Wi these goods, how could Hong Kong be as it is today? What does she mean by repeatedl mentioning China's foreign exchange revenue and the unequal treaties? She has an attitude of looking down on the Chinese people.

When the Soviet Union threatened to force Beijing to barter away its sovereignty, Be preferred to refuse Soviet assistance and withstood the pressure from 1 million Sovi troops on its northern border. The economic losses and expenditures in that instanc were 10 times greater than the foreign exchange revenue from Hong Kong. This reflec the indomitable spirit and backbone of our Chinese people.

Mrs Thatcher was dreaming of the old British Empire when she spoke impudently of the "friendship" showed by Queen Victoria to China 100 years ago, the prosperity tha the British brought to Hong Kong in the 19th century and the "legitimacy" of the une treaties which "should be observed." May God give a blessing: If only China could continue to have emperors like Daiguang and Xianfeng and traitors like Yixin and Li Hongzhang!

It is a pity that the clock cannot be turned back. These fatuous rulers have all become historical criminals. The Chinese people have been standing alone for a lon time. They will never tolerate imperialists who attempt to bully them.

When things come to the present stage, it is better to take a realistic attitude. Premier Zhao Ziyang has pointed out: Problems left over by history are not difficult to solve as long as both sides approach them from a long-term, strategic perspective and take the five principles of peaceful coexistence as the basis. The five principles are mutual respect for territorial integrity and sovereignty, mutual nonaggression, noninterference in each other's internal affairs, equality and mutual benefit, and peaceful coexistence.

Repeated mention of the unequal treaties is equal to a violation of Chinese territories and sovereignty and an insult to the national dignity of the Chinese people. This will harm the talks.

Beijing is willing to solve the problem left over by history through diplomatic talks. This shows the magnanimity of China, which does not bear old grudges and is willing to solve problems by peaceful means.

WEN WEI PO EXAMINES SPECIAL ECONOMIC ZONES

HK060421 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 5 Oct 82 p 3

[Article by Song Zhengting [1345 2182 1656], dean of students of the Central Party School of the CPC: "Viewing the Prospect of the Shenzhen Special Zone Following the 12th CPC Congress"]

[Text] Lu Xun once said: We should admire the first man who ate crabs for daring to eat such a thing.

If we look at the long river of human cultural history, all the pioneers and explorers were also the first ones to eat crabs. Another of Lu Xun's sayings is also correct: There are no ready-made roads. "Roads are made by people walking on the ground." Those who invent new medicine, new vaccines and new antitoxins -- for instance Edward Jenner, the discoverer of the smallpox vaccine -- are the first ones to inject the dangerous vaccines into their own bodies. Why do I say all this? I want to say that those who work in the special zones are the ones who experiment in just such new enterprises. Since the creation of socialist states, there has never been anything like the Shenzhen and Zhuhai Special Zones in our country. The management of the zones is a new, complicated and risky experiment for those who engage in it. They are like the first person to eat crabs.

Facts show that great results have been achieved in the creation of the Shenzhen Special Zone. The future of the special zone is already becoming clearer. Those who have been to the special zone are convinced of this fact and can testify to it.

However, there are inherent contradictions in the special zone. Those who work there come into contact with capitalism and foreign influences. If they cannot stand firm and the principles and policies are not clear, they may get into trouble and become corrupted. It is true that there are some who have been contaminated by foreign influences in the dazzling human world with its myriad of temptations. They become degenerate and corrupted. It is pointless to conceal the facts.

On this question, the 12th CPC National Congress has made it clear that the Chinese people, CPC members and cadres of the PRC, especially the cadres who make contact with foreigners, should have even more self-esteem. They must not worship and have blind faith in things foreign and must not do things to damage the reputation of our people. Facts further prove that among the party organizations, cadres and masses, particularly in the coastal regions, there are plenty of good examples of people who "have stood by the riverside for a long time without their shoes becoming wet." The number of such organizations and individuals is increasing.

On the other hand, we should not be hesitant or pessimistic about pursuing our open economic policies, building special zones and making contact with foreigners for fear that some people may be polluted and corrupted. If it had been said that any contact with bacteria would result in poisoning, we would never have created public health services, still less antitoxins.

If you do not believe it, you can go to hospitals -- especially the hospitals for infectious diseases -- and ask them where sanitary conditions are worst in the whole of our society, where there are the most bacteria and viruses. Doubtless, these hospitals are the very places where the sanitary conditions are worst, where there are the most bacteria and viruses. In that case, are our doctors, nurses and medical personnel bound to catch diseases? No. Though there is some risk, their immunity is also the strongest. Is this not a universally acknowledged fact?

I do not work in a special zone and have not made any investigation or study of them. I have been to Shenzhen once. This is like watching flowers on horseback. Nevertheless, the place has broadened my mind and benefited me a great deal. In accordance with an old habit, I did not say anything at the time. But I worried a lot about the people who worked there. Before the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, when the rigid thinking symptomatic of the leftist disease prevailed, it would have been dangerous for them. But I then realized that the building of the economic zones is not an easy task. The road is bound to be rough and bumpy.

The reasons are simple: First, this is a new undertaking; there is no previous example to follow. Second, this is a dangerous undertaking; there is the possibility of being corrupted. Third, the undertaking is very complicated and involves many other problems. The special zone is not too big but "up above there are 1,000 pieces of thread, down below there is only one needle." If the cadres and other people who work in the special zone are courageous and enterprising, clear-headed and resolute, they will be like Tang Sanzang, the monk who entered the "girls' country". If his moral conduct had not been perfect, they would have banished him to the Samsara and the bottomless world of mortals.

When I took part in the 12th CPC National Congress, all my doubts dissolved. The 12th CPC National Congress formulated and explained the firm and clear principles of our party and country's foreign affairs, further confirmed our domestic economic policy, made further provisions for self-reliance and introducing foreign investments and provided clear directives for the special zones. The 12th CPC National Congress is the guide for the work of the whole party and has given the special zones firm and long-term directives.

The Shenzhen Special Zone is a special zone of socialist China. Like the rest of the country, it is entirely socialist from the economic base to the superstructure. From this point of view, it is nothing "special." It puts into practice the universal principle of socialism in Chinese society. Moreover, the party constitution should impose stricter demands on the party members and cadres in the special zone.

If anyone thinks he can to push the special zone toward wholesale Westernization and make the ugly and decadent things of capitalism "specialized" in the special zone, he is indulging in an absurd piece of wishful thinking and will not have the consent of the people. On the other hand, there is something special in these special zones. We must make this something more "special." We must keep our promise and win the trust of our people and the foreigners. If something which should not be specialized is specialized, that is an error. If something which should be specialized is not specialized but generalized, that is a dereliction of duty. It runs counter to the state's original intention in establishing these special zones and experimental special zones.

As far as the entire party and country are concerned, if we demand that all revolutionaries be firm and clear about the new situation, the new conditions and the new problems, I think even more of Shenzhen. I think that these demands are even more appropriate to the work and the workers in the special zone. I firmly believe that the 12th CPC National Congress will give the comrade workers in the special zone even greater strength to be clear-headed and firm revolutionaries.

WEN WEI PO ON SHENZHEN FOREIGN INVESTMENT PLANS

[Dispatch from Shenzhen: "Shenzhen Publishes Preferential Treatment for Foreign Investment and Plans To Draw in Foreign Capital for 58 Projects" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] In order to speed up the development of the enterprises in the special economic zone and promote technical renovation in the existing medium-size and small enterprises there, the Shenzhen authorities today began to give preferential treatment to businessmen from abroad in the areas of import tax, comprehensive industrial and commercial tax, enterprise income tax and land leases. They have published detailed regulations to guarantee the rights of investment and enterprises. Moreover, they have also published the details of the 58 industrial projects for which they plan to draw investments in the near future. They have expressed welcome to any Hong Kong, Macao, overseas Chinese or foreign businessmen who would come to Shenzhen to discuss business and invest in Shenzhen, either by setting up factories on their own or by setting up joint ventures in cooperation with China.

The 58 industrial projects include the manufacture of color TV sets, refrigerators, washing machines, computer-operated telephones, microprocessors, clock radio receivers, cassette recorders, electronic toys, cameras, electronic components, construction glassware, textile and knitted goods, a comprehensive food industry and the manufacture of air-conditioning equipment, leather goods, cement, colored porcelain handicrafts, shrink plastic film and other items. This reporter was informed that the following preferential treatment will be given to foreign businessmen in accordance with the conditions in the factories which they have set up and will set up in the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone:

Exemption of Local Additional Tax and 20 Percent Reduction of Tax for Big Enterprises. No Lease Will Be Charted on Formerly Unexploited Land for 1-3 Years

TAXATION 1) Import tax: Import tax is exempted for the equipment, spare parts, raw materials, transport apparatus and other means of production that are imported for the production of the enterprises in the special zone. As for necessary articles for daily use, a specific or reduced import tax rate will be levied in accordance with actual conditions. 2) Comprehensive industrial and commercial tax: If the stipulated tax rate will cause difficulties to the enterprises that produce goods for export to the Hong Kong and Macao areas or to foreign countries, the enterprises will receive an exemption or reduction of comprehensive industrial and commercial tax by applying to relevant departments. On the products that are permitted to be sold at home, the comprehensive industrial and commercial tax should be levied without exception. 3) Enterprise income tax: The rate of this tax is 15 percent and no local additional tax should be levied. For 1-3 years a 15 or 20 percent reduction of this tax will be granted to enterprises that are of relatively large scale and advanced in technology.

LEASE ON LAND A 20-40 percent discount will be given to relatively large and advanced industrial enterprises on the most preferential standard lease rate of 10 yuan for each square meter per annum. An exemption from the lease for 1-3 years will be granted on formerly unexploited land such as mountainous waste areas, hilly land and marshland. The land lease is allowed to be changed and an increase of under 30 percent is allowed to be made for every 3 years. The lease can be paid in one lump sum or by installments. If it is paid by installments, an interest rate of 8 percent a year will be charged.

Wages in the Special Economic Zone Are 50 Percent Lower Than in Hong Kong

RENT ON FACTORY BUILDINGS In order to meet the demands of industrial investors, the Shenzhen Municipal Industrial Development Service Company has built a number of standard factory buildings using its own investments in the Shangbu industrial district. A preferential rent rate of 3-5 yuan per square meter is being offered to industrial investors.

WORKER WAGES Enterprises in the special zone have to pay a labor service charge to every staff member and worker they employ. The amount of the charges should be fixed in accordance with the nature of the work and the enterprise at the time the employment contracts are signed. According to the management needs of the enterprises, these enterprises are allowed to adopt on their own the methods of piecework wages, hourly rate or premium bonus schemes and can set the relevant rates. The wages in the special zone are 50 percent lower than those in Hong Kong under similar working conditions. The general monthly wage scale is between HK$600 and HK$800.

OTHER PREFERENTIAL TREATMENT 1) The revenue that the enterprises in the special zone acquired by selling their products in the special zone under permission of the authorities of the special zone will be allowed to be used to pay a part of the relevant expenditures (including wages, tax, water, electricity, road tolls, insurance and others) of the enterprise in proportion to the ratio of its sales in the special zone to total sales. 2) Water is charged at 0.18 yuan for each cubic meter. Electricity is charged at 0.085 yuan per kilowatt hour for industrial production and 0.20 yuan per kilowatt hour for daily use. 3) Businessmen and personnel from abroad who must travel frequently between Hong Kong and the special zone to discuss business, investment and the establishment of enterprises can apply for special visas which can be used to enter and leave the special zone through a special channel.

As for the rights and interests of the investors in their enterprises, the special zone will provide them with a very wide scope of transaction power for the businessmen who come from outside to invest in and establish industrial enterprises. The special zone will also protect the legitimate rights and interests of both the Chinese and foreign sides in accordance with the "Regulations for the Special Economic Zones in Guangdong Province" and other laws and decrees. It will protect foreign businessmen's rights in owning and disposing of their properties and in disposing and sending out the profits they have earned.

In the enterprises established by businessmen from abroad, businessmen enjoy the following rights:

1. They can manage their enterprises independently and employ foreign personnel on technical and management posts.

2. They can employ local people as staff and workers through the recommendation of the labor service company of the special zone or by advertising for staff and workers on their own. They can hold examinations to test their employee candidates and select the good ones as they please. The employers and the employees should sign employment contracts and a probation period of 3-6 months can be fixed for new employees. When there is surplus labor in some of these enterprises due to a change in production and technical conditions and unfit workers cannot meet the production requirements after training or the enterprises cannot provide them with other jobs, the enterprises can dismiss unfit workers. The enterprises are empowered to mete out, in accordance with the nature of the cases, punishment of having demerits recorded, wage reduction penalties and even dismissing staff and workers who have violated the regulations of the enterprises and have thus brought about evil results.

3. They are empowered to adopt, on their own, the wage systems of piecework, hourly rate, daily rate and monthly rate.

4. They can open accounts in the Bank of China and other banks in the zone that are allowed by the Chinese authorities to carry out business. These banks will facilitate their foreign exchange transactions.

5. The foreign, overseas Chinese, Hong Kong and Macao staff and workers these enterprises employ can change their wages and their other properly earned income after the personal income tax deductions into foreign currency and send it out of the country through the Bank of China and other banks in the special economic zone in accordance with the foreign exchange management regulations of the zone.

6. The Chinese people in the zone can buy insurance from the Chinese People's Insurance Company and other insurance companies that are permitted to operate in the special zone by the Chinese authorities.

7. The legal profits of the enterprises after the enterprise income tax deduction can be changed into foreign currency and sent out of the country through the Bank of China and other banks in the special zone in accordance with the foreign exchange management regulations of the zone.

8. If for some reason the enterprises must close down, after filing the reasons to the relevant department of the zone, undergoing all the procedures of winding up and paying all debts, the remnant assets can be sold and the proceeds of the sales can be sent out of the country.

9. If disputes emerge in the process of carrying out contracts (agreements), the two parties can solve these disputes through consultation on the basis of the spirit of equality and mutual benefits. If the disputes cannot be solved through consultation, the two parties can ask the Chinese Arbitration Institution to mediate in the disputes or settle the disputes through arbitration or they can appeal to other international arbitration institutions that both parties agree to in order to resolve the disputes.

MING PAO ON UPCOMING CHANGE OF GUANGDONG LEADERS

[Dispatch from Guangzhou by Szu Jo [2457 5387]: "Guangdong Provincial Leaders Will Be Changed"]

[Text] Following the conclusion of the 12th CPC Congress, the Guangdong provincial authorities held a meeting of cadres of the provincial, prefectural and county levels to implement the spirit of the congress. The meeting also touched on the arrangement of personnel in the coming structure reform.

Although the arrangement of the provincial party and government personnel should finally be decided through election at a provincial party congress that will be convened by the Guangdong Provincial CPC Committee, some clues about the change can already be found.

This reporter has learned that the provincial advisory committee (no advisory committees will be set up at municipal or county level) which will be set up will be formed by a number of old cadres above the age of 60 whose health is poor and who have relatively high prestige. Liu Tianfu, Li Jianzhen, Yin Linping and Ou Mengjue, who have already been elected to the CPC Central Advisory Commission, will be the leaders of the provincial advisory committee. As Wang De is applying for retirement, four secretaries of the Guangdong Provincial CPC Committee -- Liu Tianfu, Li Jianzhen, Yin Linping and Wang De -- will be replaced.

What concerns the people is the question of who will replace Liu Tianfu and become the governor. Judging by the fact that Wang Quanguo and Lin Ruo have been elected members of the CPC Central Committee, one of these two will be appointed the governor. It seems that Wang Quanguo will more probably become the governor because he has already held the post of provincial CPC committee secretary, been responsible for economic work for a long period of time and has gained rich experience. Lin Ruo is secretary of the Zhangjiang Prefectural CPC Committee. He was formerly director of NANFANG RIBAO and is a promising young cadre. It is thought that he will be transferred to some important post in the provincial CPC committee if he is not appointed governor. Ren Zhongyi's post as first secretary of the provincial CPC committee will not be changed. It is reckoned that Liang Linggnang will continue to hold his present post as first secretary of the Guangzhou Municipal CPC Committee but, according to the principle of putting an end to the practice of holding too many posts concurrently (normally only two posts can be held by a person concurrently), Liang will probably relinquish his post of Guangzhou mayor because he will continue to hold the post of provincial CPC committee secretary, which will make him the No 3 leader (the No 2 leader is the governor).

Ye Xuanping, Wang Yuefeng and Xie Fei, who have been elected alternate members of the CPC Central Committee, are reckoned to be elected provincial CPC committee secretaries. The probability is especially great for Ye Xuanping, because he is in the prime of life and full of vigor and has been doing work related to science, technology, industry and machine equipment for a long time. He can be regarded as a revolutionary minded, young, professionally competent and educated cadre. He is now a vice governor of Guangdong Province.

Therefore, following this new arrangement, the leading group of Guangdong Province will be neither too old nor very young. The situation will mainly be succession of the old by the young and cooperation between the old and the young, but certainly the leading group will be younger than it is now.

Promising Young Cadres Will Be Selected For Leading Groups of the Provincial Department, Bureaus and Offices

Selecting new people for the leading groups of the provincial departments, bureaus and offices is also being planned. It seems that the Guangdong Provincial Overseas Chinese Affairs Office has carried out this plan quicker than others. It has already been published in the newspapers that Cao Xingning, a 57-year-old cadre who was formerly deputy commissioner to Foshan Prefecture, has been appointed the director of this office. Judging by Cao's age, most of the cadres who will be promoted to the level of leaders of provincial departments, bureaus and offices will not be as young as people expected. Their age will be about 55. This is because of the fact that for a long time few young cadres have been promoted to leading posts and, as a result, it is very difficult to find many young cadres to take over the leading posts in a short time. However, we are sure that there will be some cadres of ages ranging from 40 to 50 who will be promoted to the leading posts of provincial departments, bureaus and offices.

The work of promoting young cadres in Guangdong Province will naturally encounter resistance. However, good results are expected to be achieved. Because the policies of the CPC Central Committee are correct, because the leading group of the Guangdong Provincial CPC Committee is relatively firm and because most people will take the interests of the whole into account, all the above-mentioned factors will form a torrent which will wash away all kinds of resistance.

TA KUNG PAO ON PRC'S BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

[Article by TA KUNG PAO Correspondent Wanda Lee: "China's Balance of Payments Good"]

[Text] Beijing, 6 October -- Judging from China's foreign earnings as compared with its foreign debts the country has done rather well in the efforts it made over the past three years to adjust revenue and expenditure.

China began borrowing funds from foreign governments and international monetary institutions -- the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund -- as far back as the early months of 1979. A spokesman for the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade said at a recent interview that up to the end of June this year, however, the country has used only 29 per cent of the U.S.$7,040 million it had negotiated in soft loans.

The government made do with the concessionary U.S.$2,040 million, cautiously borrowing only an additional U.S.$3,000 million through commercial bank loans, the ministry said.

Meanwhile, total exports last year alone brought in U.S.$20,900 million. This means that China's debt servicing ratio covers at a healthy 11 per cent, an indication to foreign bankers that Chinese ability to repay foreign debts is very strong. With this year's first 6 months' export growth posted at 10.2 per cent compared with the same period last year despite prolonged world recession, China is certain to be seen as a good risk borrower.

Part of the reasons why the restructuring program has been able to get along with so seemingly little is because a substantial amount of foreign funds being sunk into Chinese industry is from overseas investors. Joint ventures and compensation trade have, up to the end of June, drawn U.S. $1,000 million from foreign investors, who have pledged another U.S. $2,000 million, the ministry said.

Nor has the government overlooked her vast labour force. Through 600 work programs in some 30 countries, a total of 25 thousand Chinese engineers, construction workers, and chefs bring in a gross income of U.S. $970 million.

While observers contend that hiring out its work force mitigates problems of unemployment and underemployment at home, the Chinese say 25 thousand abroad is insignificant in that context. They note that those employed at home in processing and assembling work for overseas businesses make a more significant figure at 300,000. The longer advantage of sending people abroad, the Chinese say, is manpower training. Also, when engineers go overseas, they bring with them Chinese equipment and materials. This could in the long run boost Chinese exports in areas such as the machine building industry.

LIAONING'S ECONOMIC PERFORMANCE REVIEWED

HK070709 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 7 Oct 82 Canton trade fair supplement p 21

[Article from the CHINA TRADER Magazine: "Liaoning Shows Economic Strength"]

[Text] A great tribute to the fundamental strength and resistance of the economy of Liaoning Province was its performance last year.

It had to cope with economic readjustment policies, drought and some shortages in the energy sector.

Yet, in the face of adverse conditions, production held its own and exports continued to grow at a healthy pace.

Industry

The promotion of light industry mandated by the national economic readjustment policy inevitably led to the diversion of investment and resources away from heavy industry.

Initially, the policy cut a bit close to the bone in China's leading heavy industrial province, causing temporary sharp drops in some sectors such as machine-building.

In the long term, the shift may be seen as a correction of a previous bias toward heavy industry.

Since 1949, China has invested about 35 billion yuan (about HK$105 billion) in capital construction in Liaoning.

The chief beneficiary was heavy industry, whose output value grew 96-fold between 1949 and 1980.

Light industrial output value during the same period registered a 19-fold increase.

There can be no question about readjustment's favourable impact on light industry, which responded to the added investment with rapid growth.

Total light industrial output value last year amounted to 17 billion yuan, 15.2 per cent above the 1980 mark.

The growth is projected to sustain a high rate over the next few years, aided by provincial plans to develop 60 key products manufactured in 10 different trades.

Highlighting the light industrial surge were consumer goods. The leaders, with their growth over the previous year shown in parentheses, were washing machines (470 per cent), television sets (123 per cent), wrist watches (45.7 per cent), electric fans (43.8 per cent), bicycles (41.5 per cent), leather shoes (22.5 per cent), sewing machines (22.1 per cent) and cigarettes (6.8 per cent).

Clocks, soap, washing powder, woolen thread and cotton-polyester fabric also posted significant gains.

Overall industrial output last year amounted to 45.53 billion yuan, which exceeded the plan by 3.5 per cent but stood at just about the previous year's level.

However, heavy industry, which in many ways took advantage of readjustment for internal restructuring, began to pick up in the latter half, particularly last month. The momentum in the direction of positive growth has continued into the current year.

Agriculture

The drought afflicting the north of the country did not spare Liaoning. Areas especially hard hit were Chaoyang, Jinzhou and Fuxin prefectures.

The province also experienced a trend seen throughout the country of a decline in the amount of cultivated land. These influences have been counter-balanced by increases in the productivity of the land.

Grain production fell somewhat last year, owing to the drought and to a slight shift of emphasis in crop patterns, but this was more than offset by increases in the output of cash crops.

Peanuts, for example, went up by 17.4 per cent in production value, while sesame seeds rose by 42 per cent and sugar beets by 72.4 per cent. Tobacco, fruit and vegetables also recorded gains.

Rural produce markets flourished, with provincial agricultural departments alone providing three billion yuan worth of farm and sideline produce.

In all, the farm produce markets accounted for 6.5 per cent of business volume of all commodity retail sales last year, as opposed to 5.1 per cent in 1980.

The volume exhibited the largest rises in the case of such products as rice, sorghum, maize, oilseeds, pork, live chickens, eggs, edible vegetable oil, aquatic products and vegetables.

Energy

During the past couple of years in China, production of the chief energy sources -- petroleum and coal -- held steady, resulting in shortages from time to time.

The difficulties have been attacked by a two-pronged effort. On the one hand there has been an attempt to improve efficiency of energy use. On the other hand, the search for new energy sources is being pressed forward with a will.

In the case of Liaoning, the province's industries managed to reduce the amount of energy expanded per unit of output value by 4.2 percent last year. Further progress on this front is expected this year.

As for developing new energy sources, in the past three years Liaoning has witnessed the opening of five new coal mines and the re-organization of two others, resulting in a raise in production capacity of 3.6 million tons.

The new openings have had an important impact. Although first-quarter coal production in Liaoning had been showing a tendency to lag in the past few years, the province was able to fulfill production plans for the first quarter this year, spurring optimism that the province's target of 35.1 million tons this year will be met.

Provincial output value of industrial exports amounted to a record 2.4 billion yuan last year, 20 percent above the previous year's figure. Heavy industrial products took up 60 percent of the total.

Over 1,000 factories, mines and other enterprises in the province turn out goods for export.

The more than 700 factories involved will be working hard to meet this year's provincial target of a 10 per cent boost in industrial exports.

Between 1979 and the early part of this year, the province used US$85 million in foreign capital obtained through loans, processing accords, compensation trade and joint management in order to renovate some 260 enterprises.

The funds have more than paid for themselves, with the projects increasing export commodity value by 320 million yuan and earning the province US$120 million in foreign exchange.

REPORT ON HEILONGJIANG GOVERNOR'S WISCONSIN VISIT

HK070647 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in English 7 Oct 82 p 3

[Report by TA KUNG PAO Correspondent Wanda Lee]

[Text] China's Heilongjiang Province and the U.S. State of Wisconsin are to become sister states when Heilongjiang Governor Chen Lei meets his American counterpart Lee S. Dreyfus later this week.

Governor Chen Lei heads the 7-man provincial government delegation which left China on October 6 for Madison City, the capital of Wisconsin. The highlight of the 9-day visit to Wisconsin is expected to be the signing of the sister states relations agreement, the second between a northeast province and an American state. Liaoning and Illinois became sister states on August 31.

Chen Lei told TA KUNG PAO Tuesday that he was looking forward to talks with his American host on economic cooperation, trade, and cultural and technological exchanges between the two states. "For a start," he said, "we have much in common in natural resources. We are both strong in the dairy industry, animal husbandry and in agriculture."

Wisconsin's Governor Dreyfus had proposed the idea of sister states during his visit to Harbin early last December. Anhui and Maryland, Hubei and Ohio, Henan and Kansas, Zhejiang and New Jersey are sister states.

The delegation's 2-week stay includes visits in New York and Washington, sources say.

Heilongjiang is also sister state with the Canadian Province of Alberta.

HUANG HUA SPEAKS ON PRC-U.S. RELATIONS

[Text] New York, October 6 (XINHUA) -- Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Minister Huang Hua said here today: "We look forward to working together with our American friends for the removal of obstacles and for the continued development of our bilateral relations."

Speaking at a dinner in his honour hosted by the U.S. Council on Foreign Relations, Huang Hua stated that "as we look to the next decade, we see great possibility of a further development of Sino-U.S. relations. In my view, there are at least four favourable conditions:

"1. The joint communique on the establishment of diplomatic relations on January 1, 1979, issued by our two governments has laid down the principles guiding the relations between the two countries. Provided that these principles are followed in earnest, continued development of Sino-U.S. relations will be ensured.

"2. China and the United States have different social systems, but they have many things in common under the present international situation. Further development of Sino-U.S. relations is in the fundamental interests of our two peoples and is of great importance to the maintenance of world peace and stability.

"3. Although China and the United States have different cultures, histories and traditions and are at different levels of economic development, it is entirely possible for us to make up each other's deficiencies and help supply each other's needs on the basis of equality and mutual benefit. There is a great potentiality for exchanges between our two countries in the economic, trade, scientific-technological, cultural and educational and other fields.

"4. In the United States there are but a handful of Taiwan lobbyists who stick to their position of hostility to China. It is the common desire of our two great peoples to see sustained and steady development of our bilateral relations."

He said: "There is no difficulty from the Chinese side in the further development of Sino-U.S. relations. However, I regret to say that the development of our bilateral relations is not free from obstacles."

Huang Hua pointed out that Sino-U.S. relations were once brought to a dangerous point because the U.S. Government persisted in selling arms to Taiwan. Through negotiations lasting for almost a year, the two governments issued a joint communique on August 17, 1982. This communique laid down the principles and concrete measures for solving the question of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan. We hope the relevant provisions will be implemented and the commitments fulfilled in earnest so that this issue can be thoroughly settled at an early date.

He said: "The question of Taiwan was all along a key issue obstructing the normalization of Sino-U.S. relations. In the Sino-U.S. joint communique on the establishment of diplomatic relations, the United States recognizes the Government of the People's Republic of China as the sole legal government of China and acknowledges China's position that there is but one China and that Taiwan is part of China. Accordingly, the question of Taiwan should have been settled. However, soon after the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries, the United States passed the 'Taiwan Relations Act', which in essence continues to treat Taiwan as an independent political entity. Many of the provisions of this act constitute an encroachment upon China's sovereignty and interference in China's internal affairs.

In this respect, the so-called security provisions go even farther than the defunct U.S.-Taiwan 'mutual defence treaty.' In passing this act, the U.S. Government has gone back on its own solemn pledge and seriously violated the basic principles of the joint communique on the establishment of diplomatic relations. This act has been a dark cloud hanging over the relations between our two countries and a serious obstacle to the development of Sino-U.S. relations."

He said: "History has proved and will continue to prove that the Chinese nation has great vitality and cohesiveness. Its fervent aspiration for reunification has become a strong historical trend which no one can resist. I wish to point out in particular that the return of Taiwan to the embrace of the motherland is not only the common aspiration of one billion Chinese people, but will also be conducive to peace and stability in Asia and the world at large. Our government has on several occasions indicated that it will strive for the reunification of the motherland by peaceful means and it has time and again made major efforts towards this end.

"At the same time, our government has repeatedly stated that it will never make any commitment to any foreign country that it will not use force with regard to Taiwan. For it is entirely China's internal affair as to how Taiwan should be reunited with the motherland. It brooks no foreign interference. This is our unswerving stand," he added.

He said that there are still some people in the United States today who deliberately cover up or distort historical facts. They disregard the basic norms of international relations universally acknowledged in the 20th century. These people still cherish the fond dream of creating "two Chinas" or "one China, one Taiwan", and stubbornly regard Taiwan as the U.S. "unsinkable aircraft carrier" in Asia. Hostile to the development of Sino-U.S. relationship, they try to undermine it. Running counter to the course of history, they are playing a very dangerous game. If U.S. policy is to be swayed by such people, the political basis of Sino-U.S. relations would be completely undermined and what our two peoples have achieved in furthering our bilateral relations would go down the drain. Therefore, far-sighted and responsible persons must keep on guard against this possibility and step forward boldly to stay their hands.

He said: "In our bilateral exchanges, there are also some other problems and obstacles. I once said that the U.S. authorities had made many nice remarks about developing our bilateral relations. Yet what has happened can be described by a Chinese saying, 'loud thunder, but little rain'. Discrimination against China has been intensified in the trade relations and in scientific and educational exchanges between the two countries. While Sino-U.S. trade has grown from zero to nearly 6 billion U.S. dollars annually in the past ten years, China has always had a big deficit. China ought to have been treated fairly. The U.S. also continues to increase dsicriminatory restrictions on the export of high technology and sophisticated equipment to China. In view of the recent developments, one cannot help asking: Does the U.S. Government regard China as a friend or an adversary? If Sino-U.S. relations are to develop, it is imperative to proceed from the over-all interests of these relations and stop making insincere statements and taking embarassing actions. In their endeavour to modernize their country, the Chinese people continue to follow firmly the policy of opening to the outside world. However, our basic principles are still independence and self-reliance. Even if the discriminatory or hostile restrictions continue to be imposed on us, progress in our four modernization efforts will not cease. We are full of confidence."

The Chinese foreign minister said: "China adheres to an independent foreign policy and will never attach itself to any big power or bloc, never yield to pressure from any big power and still less will it swallow the bitter pill of infringement on its independence and sovereignty. We are willing to establish normal diplomatic relations with all other countries on the basis of the five principles of peaceful coexistence. We have consistently upheld this position of principle in our approach to relations between states. We neither play the U.S. card nor the Soviet card. At the same time, we will never permit others to take China as a card. The Chinese mean what they say and they are serious in their statements."

"The Chinese Government highly cherishes Sino-U.S. relations and hopes that they will continue to develop and not stand still, and still less move backward. I believe that far-sighted U.S. statesmen will also fully recognize the great significance of developing Sino-U.S. relations and take a positive approach," Huang Hua added.

SHIJIE ZHISHI VIEWS U.S. POSTURE TOWARD USSR

Beijing SHIJIE ZHISHI in Chinese No 17, 1 Sep 82 pp 2-4

[Article by Zhu Zhou [2612 1558]: "New U.S. Posture Toward the Soviet Union"]

[Text] Changes

Ronald Reagan's attitude toward the Soviet Union has gradually changed to some extent since he came into office more than 20 months ago. Generally speaking, his fairly rigid attitude tends to be relatively flexible and he has made substantive explorations in U.S.-Soviet talks and dialogues. Therefore, some new circumstances have arisen in U.S.-Soviet relations.

Since it came to power, the Reagan administration has adhered to a principle toward the Soviet Union, that is, first to achieve military superiority over, and then to hold talks with, the Soviet Union. Reagan stressed that it is first of all necessary to strengthen U.S. military power. In the first fiscal year after he was in office, he increased military expenditure by large margin. In August last year he announced the production and stockpiling of neutron bombs. In October he announced his five-point plan on improving the U.S. strategic nuclear weapon system. On the other hand, he publicly indicated that he was not eager to hold talks with the Soviet Union. However, since the summer of last year, his attitude toward the Soviet Union has gradually changed from one of rigidity to one of flexibility. Since March this year, the United States has, on its own initiative, set forth certain proposals on the issue of nuclear disarmament. On 9 May Reagan again set forth a whole set of relevant proposals and said that the Soviet leaders were also quite "concerned" about preventing the use of nuclear weapons. This was his most "conciliatory" attitude toward the Soviet Union since he came to office. On 31 May the United States and the Soviet Union jointly announced the time and place of the talks and the heads of the delegations for the talks. On the same day, Reagan departed from his previous position by indicating his readiness to abide by the SALT II agreement. Despite the great gap between the contents of the talks set forth by both parties, they both affirmed the importance of the talks. Therefore, nuclear arms talks between the two countries finally started at the end of June this year.

In its past relations with the Soviet Union the Reagan administration has consistently advocated the "principle of linkage," that is to say, whether the United States holds summit meetings or talks on reducing strategic nuclear weapons with the Soviet Union is determined by Soviet Union in regional conflicts and whether or not the Soviet Union adopts a restrained attitude in these conflicts. In other words, a prerequisite of the U.S.-Soviet dialogue is that the Soviet Union restrains its foreign expansion.

Now, although the United States is still talking about the "principle of relations," U.S.-Soviet dialogue has been somewhat disconnected from Soviet "conduct" in various parts of the world. The Soviet Union is still occupying Afghanistan, still supports Vietnam's occupation of Kampuchea, and so on. However, the United States no longer views these as a stumbling block to the dialogue. The United States has also departed from its past indifferent attitude toward the proposal for a U.S.-Soviet summit meeting, and now takes the initiative. A meeting between Reagan and Brezhnev is likely to take place this autumn (perhaps in October).

In addition to the two major issues in U.S.-Soviet relations, the United States has also adopted a flexible and mild attitude toward other issues. Soon after he came to office, Reagan laid particular emphasis on handling the turbulent situation in Central America by considering the Salvadoran issue as a very serious one and by holding the Soviet Union responsible for the tense situation there. The United States also adopted a blustering and aggressive manner, claiming that it was prepared to resort to military intervention. However, since the beginning of this year, the United States has repeatedly assumed a conciliatory attitude by expressing its readiness to solve problems through negotiations. Since March this year, the United States has entered into high-level talks with Cuba, adopting tactics of both persuasion and pressure toward it.

With respect to the Polish issue, the United States reacted strongly when military control was established in Poland but, apart from applying limited sanctions at a later period, it did not take any other drastic action. At present, the United States is making arrangements for deferred payment of debts by Poland.

Do the facts mentioned above imply that the United States has changed its policy toward the Soviet Union? No. The basic U.S. strategy of competing for hegemony and of confrontation with the Soviet Union has not changed. The circumstances stated above merely reflect that its methods and tactics in dealing with the Soviet Union have changed to some extent.

Origin

Why did the Reagan administration change its tactics toward the Soviet Union? We should observe this question from both the subjective and objective points of view. On the one hand, the administration was under the pressure of the domestic and foreign situations and, on the other hand, it used these tactics to counter the Soviet peace offensive and to engage in a new round of contention by taking advantage of Soviet weak points.

Since he came to office, Ronald Reagan has publicly preached the need to vigorously increase armaments and has expressed unwillingness to hold talks with the Soviet Union in an attempt to exert pressure on it. The Soviet Union, however, stepped up its "peace offensive" by taking advantage of the antinuclear and antiwar peace movements by the people of West European countries. The more the United States one-sidedly stressed arms expansion, the stronger the peace movements became. The announcement by the Reagan administration of its decision to manufacture neutron bombs added more fuel to the fire. Taking advantage of this situation, the Soviet Union tried by every possible means to direct the spearhead of the peace movements at the United States and raised its voice on "disarmament" and "detente." This made the position of various West European countries more difficult and sharpened the contradictions between the United States and Western Europe. Since the beginning of this year, antinuclear movements in the United States have also speedily developed and both the Democratic Party and "liberal" figures have taken advantage of this opportunity to attack the Reagan administration.

Particularly, under the present difficult circumstances when the U.S. economy is steadily declining, when there is a huge federal deficit and when the unemployment figures are daily increasing, if the Reagan administration persists in huge military expenditures and refuses to enter into a dialogue with the Soviet Union, it will certainly be placed in an even more vulnerable position. Moreover, 1982 is a mid-term election year in the United States. Ronald Reagan has to take domestic public opinion into consideration. All these factors have forced Ronald Reagan also to raise the banner of negotiation, disarmament and peace in order to extricate himself from a position of passivity.

On the other hand, the Soviet Union has also been confronted with fairly serious difficulties. Its hegemonistic moves are unpopular and its economic situation is not good either. It is, it seems, very difficult for the Soviet Union to continue expanding its armaments according to its original scale and speed. The burden caused by its foreign expansion is so heavy that it is finding it extremely difficult to cope. In addition to that, there has been a poor harvest for several years running. Although it has sold large quantities of gold, oil, arms and ammunition to gain hard currency, it is still short of foreign exchange in cash. Consequently, a rare phenomenon has occurred in which the Soviet Union is asking credit or short-term commercial loans abroad. The United States recognized the serious difficulties facing the Soviet Union and considered it a "historic opportunity" to exert pressure on the Soviet Union through negotiations. Hence the adoption of new tactics by the United States. Under the pressure of its own difficulties and in the hope of weakening the U.S. movement against it, the Soviet Union, for its part, is also ready to have a trial of strength through negotiations. Therefore, fully armed, both parties will take their seats at the conference table.

Substance

What is the substance of the Reagan administration's new tactics toward the Soviet Union? How does it continue to contend for hegemony with the Soviet Union in strategy, while being comparatively flexible in tactics? The main idea of the new tactics can be found in "the strategy of national security" proclaimed by William P. Clark, special assistant to the President for national security affairs, on 21 May this year. This is a product of over 3 months of deliberation and research by a group headed by W.P. Clark, which was organized by Reagan early this year. It has, in fact, become program for U.S. action toward the Soviet Union. Reagan has ordered all departments of his administration to implement it.

From this program, it can be seen that the United States, as before, continues to see the Soviet Union as its main adversary in the world. But its tactics have to some extent changed.

Generally speaking, whereas in the past the Reagan administration laid particular emphasis on military tactics, it has now changed to using military, political, diplomatic and intelligence means together or in turn. Its previous hard tactics have changed to dual tactics of coupling threats with promises. That is to say, the Reagan administration not only carries on a blow-for-blow struggle with the Soviet Union for spheres of influence, but also employs dialogue and negotiations to force the Soviet Union to make more concessions. As a matter of fact, from the words and deeds of the Reagan administration, people have already found clues to some of the methods of the new tactics earlier than they were published. These new tactics can be summed up as follows.

1. While curbing the territorial expansion of the Soviet Union, efforts are also being made to intensify its internal difficulties in order to force it to restrain itself. The new tactics emphasize that the United States should not only keep up a certain amount of pressure on the Soviet Union on the issues of Afghanistan, Poland and Kampuchea, but it should also, taking a long view, make use of political and economic means to pin down the Soviet bloc internally.

One of the methods is political infiltration by entering into rivalry with the Soviet Union in the ideological sphere and making trouble in its internal political situation. Another method is "economic warfare" by strictly controlling trade with and transfer of technology to the Soviet Union and East European countries, cutting back on favorable term loans and causing further economic difficulties for the Soviet Union so as to force it to "turn inward" instead of poking its nose into other countries.

2. While continuing its arms race with the Soviet Union, the United States is promoting negotiations on disarmament and dialogues between heads of state. This is a tactic of using attack as a means of defense, a means of beating back the Soviet "peace offensive" and an attempt to fish for some advantage at the negotiating table.

3. In the military field, while enhancing its position of strength to counter the Soviet Union, the United States is revising its war plans against the Soviet Union by laying particular stress on defense.

4. While giving full play to its own role, the United States is making every effort to persuade its allies to resist the Soviet Union together. In his efforts to achieve coordination with his West European allies and Japan on policies toward the Soviet Union, Reagan has tended to use pressure rather than persuasion. This has aroused their dissatisfaction. In order to prevent further discord, he now has no option but to stress the importance of the unity and concerted efforts of the Western countries and do something to repair relations with them.

Negotiations

At present, both the United States and the Soviet Union have their own difficulties in the economic and political fields as well as in international relations; and such difficulties can hardly be lessened quickly. Therefore, both of them now need a degree of detente and some dealings with each other. At the same time, they are also pulling the carpet out from under each other's feet. However, neither the United States nor the Soviet Union has adequate means with which to influence each other's major policies, and one party's difficulties can hardly be turned directly to the other party's favor.

The world status of both countries is declining as is their control over international affairs, including affairs within their own spheres of influence. This is inevitably reflected in the relations between the two countries. Precisely because the two countries can see each other's difficulties and weaknesses, both sides think that now is the time to assume the offensive and try to gain extra advantage in the struggle for hegemony. Hence, they both need to use the method of negotiations.

In recent months, messages exchanged between the United States and the Soviet Union have been confined to their own affairs, or those concerning their traditional spheres of influence. It is strange that both sides are not so much at daggers drawn as before on the sensitive problems at issue as the Soviet invasion and occupation of Afghanistan and its support of Vietnam's invasion and occupation of Kampuchea, as well as the Israeli invasion and occupation of Lebanon, with U.S. connivance, in its attempt to eliminate the PLO armed forces. People are wondering what kind of dirty deal is going on between the two hegemonists. This phenomenon merits our attention when viewing present relations between the United States and the Soviet Union.

Another conspicuous phenomenon is: It seems that the two countries have compromised on the issue of their traditional spheres of influence, although there are still certain misgivings between them.

For example, the Soviet Union and Cuba have expressed their willingness to bring about a degree of detente and stability in Central America -- the "backyard" of the United States -- while the United States has restrained itself on the Poland issue. This shows that, on the one hand, both sides are ready to "respect" each other's spheres of influence and interests by taking relevant actions. On the other hand, both sides also use their opponent's weaknesses as a trump card to restrict each other.

Under such circumstances, it seems possible that the United States and the Soviet Union will reach a compromise on certain problems on the basis of certain mutual concessions; their negotiations on disarmament are worth noting in this respect. Because of their economic difficulties, both sides of the negotiating table hope to lower the level of the arms race, but they are also doing their best to maintain their own advantage at the expense of the other's. This is the very reason why the negotiations are so arduous and drawn out. Obviously, the negotiations are a kind of manifestation to show the fierce struggle between the two hegemonists. Although it is impossible to make any immediate breakthrough on major issues between the United States and the Soviet Union, the negotiations will bring about certain influences on international relations.

Moreover, the United States needs a lot more of help from its West European allies and Japan to resist the Soviet Union with concerted efforts, but their stands and interests are different from those of the United States. Thus, differences often appear in the tactics toward the Soviet Union. In recent months, the United States has promised to take better care of its allies' interests, but still has fallen far short in actual deeds. For example, in June this year, no sooner had Reagan returned home from his trip to Europe to foster cordial relations, than he suddenly declared that the economic sanctions on the Soviet Union should be extended. This directly infringed upon the interests of West European countries and Japan, thus arousing strong opposition. Misfortunes never come alone. In July the dispute over the gas pipeline deal and steel warfare once again turned white hot. At present, while economic depression still prevails in the whole capitalist world, contradictions between the United States and European countries are becoming more acute.

Now that the United States is ready to have a dialogue and negotiations with the Soviet Union according to its new tactics, the planned summit meeting of the two heads of state might bring about a little detente to U.S.-Soviet relations. However, the struggle between the United States and the Soviet Union for spheres of influence and nuclear superiority will never cease.

KYODO: WANG BINGNAN DISCUSSES PRC-USSR RELATIONS

OW071125 Tokyo KYODO in English 1113 GMT 7 Oct 82

[Text] Tokyo Oct 7 KYODO -- A ranking Chinese official Thursday denied the likelihood of an imminent normalization in relations between China and the Soviet Union, saying it is too premature.

Wang Bingnan, president of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries, told a Sino-Japanese meeting that China hopes to improve relations with Moscow because it would be mutually beneficial. But he said he cannot agree to Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev's proposal earlier this year for unconditional improvement in bilateral relations.

As conditions for improved relations, Wang called on the Soviet Union to withdraw 600,000 troops along the Sino-Soviet border and those in Afghanistan, and to nudge Vietnam into pulling its forces out of Kampuchea. He said he cannot believe the Soviet Union will carry out these conditions and added it is too premature to say that there will be a general improvement in their relations.

Wang was speaking at a sub-committee meeting of a three-day Sino-Japanese "private" conference which opened Thursday. The meeting was also attended by Huan Xiang, advisor of the Academy of Social Sciences, and Japanese delegates, including former Education Minister Michio Nagai and former Vice Foreign Minister Shinsaku Hogen.

Soviet Vice Foreign Minister Leonid Ilichev and Chinese Vice Foreign Minister Qian Qichen this week started talks in Beijing -- the first high-level contact between the two countries since the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan in 1979.

Huan told the meeting that the two countries started the unofficial talks because they felt it necessary to meet each other to discuss bilateral issues.

"Since China and the Soviet Union are not fighting, it is against international courtesy not to respond to repeated Soviet calls for such talks," he said.

Huan said the two superpowers -- the Soviet Union and the United States -- both pose threats to China but "the Soviet threat is much larger than the U.S. threat."

AFP: SPOKESMAN CITED ON USSR, SRV RELATIONS

BK071136 Hong Kong AFP in English 0154 GMT 7 Oct 82

[By Charles Antoine de Nerciat]

[Text] Beijing, Oct. 7 (AFP) -- As Sino-Soviet talks went into their third day in secrecy here today, China reaffirmed that it expects concrete Soviet initiatives before relations between the two countries, clouded for 20 years, can improve.

The Chinese were reacting to recent statements by Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev and Vietnamese President Truong Chinh, calling for improved relations between their countries and China.

A Chinese spokesman said his government's position consisted of "listening to what they say and watching what they do."

He said China remained opposed to "hegemonism" -- an accusation it has frequently levelled at Moscow and its ally Hanoi in the past.

Nothing has filtered out so far from the discussions being held here between Soviet and Chinese Deputy Foreign Ministers Leonid Ilichev and Qian Qichen -- the first bilateral discussions for nearly three years.

Mr. Brezhnev, who met his Vietnamese counterpart in Moscow as the talks were starting, urged the establishment of good neighbour relations between the Soviet Union, China and Vietnam.

Truong Chinh, for his part, favoured a return to "normal relations" between Vietnam and China, two former socialist allies in conflict since they went to war in February and March 1979. But he repeated charges that the Chinese Government was "expansionist" and "hegemonistic."

The Chinese spokesman today said: "It is our consistent principle to oppose hegemonism, safeguard world peace and develop relations with other countries on the basis of the five principles of peaceful coexistence. As to the relevant remarks made by the Soviet and Vietnamese leaders, our position is one of listening to what they say and watching what they do."

Even before Mr. Ilichev arrived in Beijing China insisted there could be no improvement in Sino-Soviet relations without "concrete actions" by Moscow to remove the causes of disagreement, and warned it would not be content with words.

In this context, China pointed to Soviet support for Vietnamese action in Cambodia -- where Vietnamese troops have been present since December 1978 -- as a threat to its security and an obstacle to detente with Moscow.

Two other such factors were heavy Soviet troop concentrations on the Sino-Soviet border, and the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan in December 1979, the Chinese said. It was after Soviet troops intervened in Afghanistan that China -- in January 1980 -- suspended negotiations on normalising relations with the Soviet Union.

Mr Ilichev, a Sino-Soviet expert, arrived here last Sunday by special plane. He began exploratory discussions with Mr. Qian on Tuesday.

Both China and the Soviet Union have so far refused to say how the talks are going. The discussions, according to Western sources, are "open ended" with no fixed agenda.

BREZHNEV, TRUONG CHINH DISCUSS PRC RELATIONS

OW071138 Beijing Russian to the USSR 1800 GMT 6 Oct 82

[Text] On 5 October talks were held between Soviet leader Brezhnev and Truong Chinh, chairman of the SRV State Council, who is visiting the Soviet Union.

As reported by TASS, at the talks Brezhnev and Truong Chinh exchanged information regarding Soviet and SRV relations with the PRC. They consider that giving these relations a more normal character naturally should not be to the detriment of third countries.

On the same day at a banquet held in honor of Truong Chinh, Brezhnev expressed willingness to further side with the SRV and support the SRV's proposal of establishing an inernational conference on Southeast Asia. In his reciprocal address Truong Chinh as usual called the PRC expansionist and (?hegemonist), however at the same time stated that Vietnam supports the restoration of normal relations between the SRV and the PRC.

WANG ZHEN ADDRESSES SINO-JAPANESE TOKYO MEETING

[Text] Tokyo, 7 Oct (XINHUA) -- In his speech at the first Sino-Japanese nongovernmental personages meeting held in Tokyo, Wang Zhen, head of the Chinese delegation, pointed out that the two countries' nongovernmental friendly contacts play a particularly important role compatible with the development of governmental ties. He added that the crux of the textbook controversy is to learn from the lessons of the past and have the friendship between China and Japan go down in history.

Wang Zhen continued: "Not long ago, the textbook controversy brought some anxiety about relations between our two countries. The crux of the matter is how to understand the aggression against China perpetrated by the Japanese militarists in the 50 years beginning in 1894 -- whether to respect historical facts and take it as a negative example or to distort and glorify them to mislead the coming generations and allow the opinion of a handful of persons to revive militarism. This is a matter of principle which should be considered seriously. China and Japan had a history of friendship over 2,000 years. Compared with such a long period, 50 years is only a twinkling. However, it is often easier to destroy than to build. The deep wounds of war caused by Japan's 50 years of aggression against China are still fresh in the minds of the Chinese people. At the same time, the aggression also brought massive calamities to the Japanese people. The people of the two countries should never forget the bitter lesson of the 50 years' aggression. We should carry forward the banner of Sino-Japanese friendship from generation to generation, always bear in mind the bitter lesson of history in order to avoid the recurrence of such tragedies. We should turn hostility into friendship and pereptuate Sino-Japanese friendship throughout the centuries.

Masayoshi Ito, former Japanese foreign minister and representative of the Japanese council of Sino-Japanese nongovernmental personages meeting, urged a further development of friendly cooperation between the two countries. He said: "Further strengthening of extensive, thorough and flourishing friendly ties between China and Japan would help stability in Asia and peace in the world and here lies the significance of the convening of the nongovernmental personages meeting."

The meeting was proposed by Haruo Okada, vice-speaker of the Japanese House of Representatives in January 1981. It was finally fixed after nearly 2 years of preparation. Fifty-one Japanese prominent figures and Japanese members in the council and 20 members of the Chinese delegation, headed by Wang Zhen, were present at today's session. Chinese Ambassador to Japan Song Zhiguang and other officials of the Chinese Embassy, as well as officials of the Japanese Foreign Ministry were also present.

AFP: FOREIGN MINISTRY OFFICIAL ON HONG KONG

[Text] Beijing, Oct. 7 (AFP) -- China gives priority to reestablishing sovereignty over Hong Kong and will take measures to preserve the colony's prosperity afterwards, a senior Chinese official was reported as saying as talks on the territory's future began here. The statement was made by a senior Chinese Foreign Ministry official yesterday to British journalists here.

During his talks with the British newsmen, the top Chinese official said China would adopt "special measures" to preserve the prosperity of Hong Kong, but only after restoring its sovereignty over the territory.

When the opening of talks between Britain and China on the future of the territory was announced during Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's visit here last month, both sides stressed their "common aim of maintaining the stability and prosperity" of the colony of some 5.2 million people.

Questioned about whether Britain would be able to maintain a role in the administration of Hong Kong, one of the world's top financial centres, the official commented: "I don't think that would be possible." China and Britain have already started preliminary talks, the foreign office in London confirmed yesterday, following the disclosure that day by Hong Kong Governor Sir Edward Youde that meetings had started.

China has repeatedly said it wants to recover sovereignty, while Mrs. Thatcher has stressed that she considers the 19th century treaties on Hong Kong valid in international law, but they can be "varied". Beijing has already said that it planned to accord Hong Kong the statute of a special administrative region, under constitutional provisions just about to be adopted, although it was not explained how they would operate.

AFP: PRC BOLSTERS HONG KONG DOLLAR, STOCK MARKET

[Text] Hong Kong, Oct. 6 (AFP) -- China intervened to stem both the fast declining Hong Kong dollar and stock exchange here in what is seen as a demonstration of Beijing's claimed influence over the market in this British colony, informed banking circles said here today. The panic was halted yesterday when the Hong Kong dollar climbed back to [words indistinct] to the U.S. dollar and the Hang Seng index rose by 88 points.

The revival followed a week-long nosedive in which the Hang Seng lost 280 points and the local dollar also reached its lowest post war level at 6.70 to its U.S. cousin. The dollar steadied at 6.49 this morning while the market was in somewhat of a lull, slipping down by seven points.

The Beijing-run Bank of China was believed to be behind to two unconfirmed actions which activated the brake yesterday.

The Bank of China, jointly with private banks here, reportedly plans to offer 20-year mortgages. The ending of the British lease on the New Territories in 1997 had effectively blocked any home loans over 15 years. The bank further stopped buying U.S. dollars here late yesterday, and might even have sold some of its own.

The Hong Kong Government was said to have considered defending the HK dollar in talks with the two issuing banks here, the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank and the chartered bank, though an official confirmation was not available.

The panic in the Hong Kong stock and money markets as triggered by the strengthening of the U.S. dollar on world markets coupled with the uncertainty hanging over Hong Kong's future after British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher had taken [words indistinct] matter with Chinese leaders during her recent Beijing visit.

Banking sources said China had only to stop, or slow down its U.S. dollar purchases here to bring on the HK dollar recovery. It would be against China's interests to create a crisis of confidence here or to have a much weakened HK dollar, the sources added.

But the same sources doubt that China could long refrain from buying daily some tens of millions of U.S. dollars, as it habitually gets over 40 percent (?of its) foreign exchange from Hong Kong and China always has great needs for U.S. dollars.

"China's political interests call for the maintenance of a sense of confidence in Hong Kong. At most, China could psychologically help prevent a too sharp deterioration of the situation," one source added.

Up to a certain point, it would be against China's interests if it had to pay much more to buy the thousands of millions of U.S. dollars that it purchases annually on the market. "Market structure shows that basically the HK dollar is not a strong currency," he added.

PLA NAVY COMMANDER LIU VIEWS PARTY CONSTITUTION

[Text] Beijing, 7 Oct (XINHUA) -- In studying the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress, leading members of the PLA Navy's party committee stressed that the key to creating a new situation in building the navy is to do a good job in building the party committees at all levels.

Since the closing of the 12th CPC National Congress, leading members of the navy's party committee have studied the views concerning party building embodied in the new party constitution and the report of the 12th CPC National Congress and have discussed them conscientiously in the light of existing conditions. Navy Commander Liu Huaqing [0491 5478 3237] said: The new party constitution has upheld the Marxist-Leninist ideological line of seeking truth from facts, eliminated the "left" mistakes in the party constitution adopted at the 11th CPC National Congress, inherited and developed the fine points of the party constitution adopted at the 7th and 8th CPC National Congresses, summed up both the positive and negative experience in party building since the founding of New China and put forth higher demands on party members and cadres. Only by acting in accordance with the requirements of the new party constitution in a practical manner can we build the party committees into strong nuclei in leading units to create a new situation for naval building.

In the course of study and discussion, leading members of the navy's party committee emphasized that the party committees at all levels must study the new party constitution seriously and analyze the current situation in the party committee in the light of the new party constitution in order to make clear the orientation of building party committees. To this end, they said, the party committees at all levels must accomplish the following:

1. Political stands must be firm. Steps must be taken at all times to keep in line politically with the party Central Committee and to correctly implement the party's line, principles and policies.

2. The party committees must be united. Party committee members must cherish friendship, emphasize support, respect and understand one another and must not say or do anything that might adversely affect unity.

3. Discipline must be strict. Efforts must be made to attach importance to the general interest at all times in all undertakings and to abide by the party discipline, and particularly to adhere to the principle of democratic centralism. No one individual may make decisions on important issues. Individuals must abide by the decisions made by the collectives and implement them earnestly; they may not change them at will nor overthrow them.

4. The style of work must be correct. One must try to be an ordinary party member and seek neither personal gain nor special privilege.

5. The spirit must be vigorous. One must have the fighting spirit of the Chinese women's volleyball team and must be willing to undergo hardship and work indefatigably to create a new situation in naval building until the goal is achieved.

Leading members of the navy's party committee said in one voice that they would do their utmost to bring about a basic turn for the better in the party's work style. They said: First of all, we must start with ourselves and play an exemplary role. We must take the lead in doing things that we expect the units to do; we must not do things that we do not want the units to do. Only by so doing can we boldly struggle against all unhealthy tendencies and lead the broad masses of commanders and fighters to march in giant strides along the direction charted by the 12th CPC National Congress.

EDITORIAL ON CONSTRUCTION FUNDS CONCENTRATION

[Editorial: "Concentrate Funds To Ensure Completion of Key Capital Construction Projects"]

[Text] The great target of realizing economic construction in the coming 20 years was put forth during the 12th party congress. Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out in his report: "To attain our strategic objective for the coming 20 years, the state must concentrate needed funds on key development projects in their order of importance and urgency. For this purpose, while endeavoring to overcome undue decentralization in the use of funds, we must bring into play the initiative of all concerned to expand production and achieve better economic results, so that the national income may rise more rapidly." We must firmly establish the idea of "coordinating all the activities of the nation as in a chess game," appropriately strengthen centralization and unity and use the funds on construction of projects which are urgently required by the state.

In the past, a serious flaw in our business management work was that we overemphasized a high degree of centralization. The concentration of surplus financial and material power in the hands of the central authorities weakened the reserve force of the localities and the enterprises, hampered the initiative of the localities and the enterprises and hindered the whole economic development. Over the past few years, the central authorities adopted resolute measures to expand the power of the localities and the enterprises and correct the deviation of overconcentration. However, since certain specific measures and methods are not perfect enough and actual work falls behind schedule, the phenomenon of dispersed funds is presently evident. As far as capital construction is concerned, decentralized use of funds has become an outstanding problem. In the first half of this year, the rate of increase of capital construction investment, which is included in the budget, was below 10 percent, but, capital construction investment not included in the budget, increased by more than 50 percent. The amount of capital construction investment not included in the budget accounted for 55 percent of the total capital construction investment. The huge increase in capital construction investment not included in the budget not only led to decentralized utilization of funds, blind construction and repetitive construction, but also aggravated the short supply of energy, transportation and communications, raw materials and equipment. It is hard to guarantee the construction of key projects at present and also in the next few years if this situation does not change. Thus, the realization of the annual plans, medium-term plans and short-term plans will be seriously affected.

It is imperative to concentrate the use of funds. The situation of energy and transportation and communications is rather tense at present and is expected to remain tense in the coming few years, restraining the speed of development of the national economy. Only by concentrating the essential strength on promotion of key projects, promoting such basic facilities as energy, transportation and communications, and ensuring a certain speed of development in industrial and agricultural production, can we enliven the overall situation, enliven the economy and realize the four modernizations. If we are dispersing limited funds and material resources on odds and ends, we will be unable to lay a good foundation or reserve energy to make good preparations for realizing the great target of struggle by the end of this century.

It is totally possible to centralize utilization of funds and ensure construction of key projects. When comparing our socialist system with the bourgeois system, one important aspect of its superiority is that we can "coordinate all the activities of the nation as in a chess game" while implementing the economic plans, and can ensure the construction of key projects. During the First 5-Year Plan period, we gained considerable positive experience in concentrating strength on the construction of 156 key projects. Under the current new circumstances, the key lies in unifying ideology and taking unanimous steps to integrate giving play to the enthusiasm and initiative of the localities and departments with national unity and planning.

Does appropriately strengthening centralization and unity mean taking the road back? Of course not. The policy of expanding the right of the localities and the enterprises is correct. We must continue to implement this in the future and must not change it. Appropriately strengthening centralization and unity is an objective demand of a planned economy and is a practical prerequisite for implementing the readjustment principles. From the macroeconomic point of view and in view of current and long-term economic construction, only by appropriately strengthening centralization and unity and making overall arrangements can we ease the major contradiction in economic development. Only by so doing can we enable the national economy to develop at a stable rate, adhere to the principle of taking planned economy as the key and market regulation as the subsidiary, enliven the economy and achieve better economic returns. We advocated in the past, and are still advocating now, that localities and enterprises should have certain financial and material reserves so that they can solve urgent questions in the course of production in accordance with local conditions. As early as in the 1950's, Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out that acting in accordance with local conditions means acting in accordance with local conditions under the guidance of the state plans. First, there must be state unity and centralization, and second, there must be actions in accordance with local conditions and flexibility. Otherwise, localism will emerge and no consideration will be given to the overall situation.

Will the appropriate strengthening of unity and centralization hamper the enthusiasm of the localities and the enterprises? No. The key to this lies in correctly handling the relationship between the overall situation and the partial situation and the relationship between centralization and decentralization. While drawing up plans and doing things, we must on the one hand consider the need for development of the various regions, departments and enterprises, and on the other hand, we must stress that partial interests be subordinate to overall interests and the implementation of the idea of "coordinating all activities of the nation as in a chess game." Only by making good arrangements for the overall situation can we enable the various partial elements to retain their initiative. If there are no good arrangements for the overall situation, and if the state's key constructi is not ensured, basic facilities such as energy and transportation cannot be promoted, and if the overall national economy is not enlivened, the development of the partial situation will definitely be restricted. Even though some units may be active for a period of time, their enthusiasm and efforts will be inconsistent. Certainly we must work meticulously and must carry out meticulous calculations concerning the division of financial revenue and the proportion of profits to be retained by the units or enterprises themselves. We must make rational decisions so that the localities and enterprises will have reserves. Only if the enterprises make active and strenuous efforts to increase production and revenue can they still retain a large proportion after submitting centralized funds to the state. Thus, they can still handle urgent things. In this way, the initiative of the localities and the enterprises will not be hampered. On the contrary, it will further arouse their initiative. Providing funds for construction of key projects is the glorious obligation of every enterprise and business unit, and is also their contribution to attaining the strategic goals. The fire burns better when everyone puts in firewood. Ours is a vast country; many small amounts add up to a lot when all units which have income provide the state with a small amount of capital. In the course of studying and implementing the spirit of the 12th party congress, we should take promoting production of the enterprises, increasing income and centralizing funds for construction of state key projects as practical actions.

In order to solve the question of funds for construction of key projects, we must rely on developing production and improving the economic return. However, we must not neglect or negate the idea of appropriately strengthening centralization and unity.

This is because the present situation is one in which certain phenomena of decentralization have weakened the planned economy. During the past few years, the scale of state capital construction investment included in the budget was reduced, but the scale of capital construction investment by means of gathering funds and asking for bank loans has tremendously increased in the localities. Now it is necessary to seriously reduce the scale of capital construction investment not included in the budget, overcome the phenomenon of decentralization of funds and appropriately strengthen centralization and unity in order to ensure the construction of the key projects. Similarly, only by appropriately strengthening centralization and unity, continuing to implement the readjustment principles and promoting key project construction by squeezing funds from all sectors can we maintain a rational proportion and improve the macroeconomic return. Certainly in constructing key projects we must rationally utilize the funds and stress investment results. On the one hand, we must prevent unrealistic demands, and on the other hand, we must use the limited funds on construction of urgent projects such as energy, transportation and communications. We must strive to shorten the construction period of the projects now in progress and strive to fulfill them ahead of schedule. We must make good preparations for new projects, implement the "five quotas," and avoid slackening control of the construction period and extravagant use of funds which will lead to a "bottomless pit." Otherwise, even if investment is increased, we might not be able to achieve the anticipated results.

In order to ensure the smooth construction of the key projects, all departments concerned and all regions must adhere to the idea of "coordinating all activities in the nation as in a chess game," proceed from the overall situation, work with concerted efforts and make their own contributions under the guidance of the state plans.

ECONOMIST XU DIXIN ON REALIZING 'QUADRUPLING'

HK071411 Beijing ZHONGGUO QINGNIAN BAO in Chinese 30 Sep 82 pp 1, 2

[Special interview by staff reporters Li Baixiang [2621 4102 4382] and Mi Bohua [4717 0590 5478]: "'Quadrupling' Is Certainly Attainable -- Noted Economist Xu Dixin"]

[Text] The 12th CPC Congress put forward the grand strategic objective of economic construction for our country under the prerequisite of constantly raising the economic results, to strive to quadruple the total output value of industry and agriculture in the whole country, that is, to increase the 710 billion yuan in 1980 to 2,800 billion yuan in 2000. The broad masses of young people were deeply encouraged with this objective and wrote letters asking questions about aspects that they did not understand. A few days ago, our reporters visited the noted economist Comrade Xu Dixin, who is also a standing member of the 5th NPC, with these questions.

Veteran Xu is now over 70, but he is still in high spirits. Full of zest, he said: "According to the grand objective put forward by the 12th CPC Congress, the prospects for our country by the end of this century are quite good. At that time, our country will be stronger, the national defence and economic strength of our country will be stronger than ever before, and the socialist system will be more consolidated. At the same time, the living standard of the people will be greatly improved. Whether in cities or rural areas, the problems of wages, employment, housing, schooling, public facilities and many other problems that the masses are concerned about today will all be satisfactorily solved. Every individual's average income will also have increased several fold."

The reporters asked: "Do you mean to say that those young people who earn 50 yuan now will have quadrupled their income to 200 yuan by that time?" With a pause, Veteran Xu said: "I think yes. Speaking conservatively, they could at least earn 160-170 yuan. But it will not be completely the same for every individual.

"If you have special knowledge and skills that can contribute more to the country, perhaps you could get more than 200 yuan. Here we must mention one thing: we can not practice egalitarianism. In the past, we have suffered a lot from egalitarianism. According to my own opinion, since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we have unswervingly instituted the policy of distribution according to labor. The distribution policy in the days to come will more and more manifest the superiority of this principle. In a word, the amount of your personal income will depend on the efforts you make to realize the industrial and agricultural annual output value of 2,800 billion yuan."

The reporters asked: "In the past, we did have several economic construction targets, but they were not very well realized. What is the difference between the present grand objective of quadrupling and previous ones?" "It is fundamentally different," said Veteran Xu. He emotionally reminisced and said: "Generally speaking, the economic construction objectives put forward by the party before 1956 were practical. I was a delegate to the '8th CPC Congress,' and at that time. at the first meeting of the 8th CPC Congress, Premier Zhao Enlai said: In the Second 5-Year Plan starting from 1958, the output of steel will reach more than 6 million tons, 1 million tons more than in the First 5-Year Plan. The yield of grain will reach 500 billion jin, increasing by more than 100 billion jin. The accumulation rate of the 5 years will be 25 percent. This tentative plan of Premier Zhou Enlai's was unanimously adopted by the 8th CPC Congress. But in the winter of that year, the erroneous 'leftist' deviation that was eager for quick results was running rampant. The 'Second 5-Year Plan' was repudiated and criticized as a conservative plan and the so-called 'Great Leap Forward' was put into action. They obstinately claimed that the output of steel could reach 10.7 million tons, later resulting in a blunder. After that, we had several economic construction objectives, but they were all bound by the 'leftist' deviationist ideas and they ignored the characteristics of the large population and a poor national foundation, despised the objective laws of economy and practiced high targets, high accumulation and high speed after their own wishful thinking. It is not strange that all these finally failed."

Veteran Xu said: "The 20 year plan put forward by the 12th CPC Congress drew from the bitter experience since 1958, resumed the work style of seeking truth from facts, respected the objective law of economy and was formulated with an honest attitude and through careful consideration. Therefore, it is based on the actual foundation of the economy of our country and on the comprehensive analysis of various potentialities and conditions within and outside the country. The CPC Central Committee and the State Council summoned in advance the responsible members of the departments and bureaus of the Central Committee and of all provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions to constantly discuss the plan.

"The departments concerned carried out comparisons, analysis and forecasts on a series of schemes and also finally laid down the realistic and concrete measures and a strategic plan for realizing this objective. Viewing the situation since the foundation of our country, the annual total output value from 1950 to 1981 increased by an average of 9.2 percent. Deducting the 3 years restoration period when it developed at a very fast speed, we still have an increase of 8.1 percent. In the five 5-year plans, except the Second 5-Year Plan, the increase was over 7.2 percent."

Veteran Xu continued saying: "Why do we have to put forward such a concrete objective at present? Why is it four times and not twice or eight times? This is because if we want to encourage the people to engage in socialist construction, we need a concrete fighting objective. Realizing the four modernizations is a great objective, but it is not concrete enough. We need an objective that is understood by the people at very first sight. What is more, this objective can neither be too high nor too low -- we will fail to attain if it is too high and fail to encourage the initiative of the people if it is too low. The current objective of 2,800 billion yuan is a bit higher than the level within our capabilities. Certainly, this is by no means to say that all products and enterprises must be quadrupled.

For instance, if the total output of energy resources, the output of steel, cement, chemical fertilizer, cotton yarn, paper and other important means of production, all increased by 100 percent in 1980, then the output of the main products of the machinery industry can increase by over 200 percent. Due to the improvement of technology and reduction of consumption, and the improvement of product quality and processing techniques, we can produce double the value from the same amount of energy resources and raw materials. In other words, double the economic results. Meanwhile, those newly developed industries such as electronics, information devices, nuclear energy, petroleum and chemical industries, new materials and so on will be rapidly expanded. This will also give great impetus to the increase in industrial output and the rise in output value."

The reporters said: "There are some young people that don't have enough confidence in quadrupling." With a smile, Veteran Xu said: "This is understandable. At present, there are some people who are not bold enough and who are afraid of difficulties. This is because they are not fully aware of the favorable conditions for quadrupling."

The reporters asked Veteran Xu to give more details. Veteran Xu started talking in the way of someone familiar with his subject: "There are five favorable conditions in general: 1) The superiority of our social system. In our country, we can realize the linkage between social production and social need and organize production in a planned way. This is what the capitalist cannot do. 2) We have instituted economic construction for 30 years and succeeded in the First 5-Year Plan. Although we suffered setbacks later on, we have after all laid a certain material foundation for the national economy and we have gained both positive and negative experiences. 3) The current grand objective is solid and reliable. The method put forward is to continue to readjust and lay a foundation in the first decade, when the speed may be a little slower, while in the latter decade to advance with great strides. This way of carrying the tasks in two stages is the method of steadily advancing. 4) The people who have had several years of experience long for an improvement in their material and cultural life. They are also aware that developing the national economy and realizing the four modernizations are the prerequisites for improving people's lives. If people are unanimous in their thinking then we can fight together for the common objective. 5) Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the whole country is in a political situation of stability, unity, and lively vitality. This is the political guarantee for us to successfully carry on our economic construction."

Veteran Xu said: "We have the above conditions in realizing the grand strategic objective, and at the same time, there still exist difficulties that need to be surmounted. It is wrong not to have sight of these favorable conditions; it is also wrong to have no sight of difficulties, blindly optimizing and thinking it very easy to attain the quadrupling. Provided that we make the difficulties we are facing public to the people and youths, then we can be united and make concerted efforts to solve these difficulties."

Veteran Xu said: "The problems of agriculture, energy resources, communications, education and science are all difficult problems that we confront. In agriculture, our labor production rate is low, we have a large population and limited arable land and our capability in resisting natural disaster is also low. In industry, energy resources and communication are in short supply and in a state of tension. Our level of enterprise management and production techniques is rather low, economic returns are not fast enough, the problems of science and technology were, for a long time, not duly stressed. The economic and financial condition has made a turn for the better in the last 2 years, but it has not fundamentally improved. There is financial deficit, prices are not stable and there are difficulties in improving peoples' lives. All the above mentioned difficulties need to be solved."

Veteran Xu said: "I am president of the population association and I wish to say something on population. Young couples must try to bear fewer children. China has a large population. Every year there are more than 10 million births, equivalent to half the population of Canada. If we do not control the population increase, what we have produced will all be eaten by the children and it would simply be impossible to talk about improving people's lives. Everybody must pay attention to this problem. I hope that young couples will consider both the state and themselves and strive to bear fewer, excellent children. Otherwise, if the population increases too fast, the objective of quadrupling will be in vain.

At the end of the interview, Veteran Xu earnestly said: "When I was young, like many other revolutionary youths then, we were at the time of the KMT's white terror rule and the crucial juncture of Japan's occupation of the northeast and the nation's fate was in peril. At that time, the sole ideals of young people were to resist the Japanese aggressors and they were not willing to be slaves to a foreign power. We drifted from place to place and life was very hard. We never thought of 'thirty legs.' [legs refer to the legs of furniture that young people seek for today]. To be sure, the income of young people at present is rather low and their material and cultural life is not rich. The reasons are varied in many respects. Suppose there had been no blunder of 20 years of 'leftist' deviation, suppose there had been no interference by Lin Biao and the 'gang of four,' suppose we had controlled the population expansion in the 1950's and there were now only 700-800 million people, suppose there had been no 'Great Leap Forward,' no 'Cultural Revolution' and suppose the economic construction of our country had steadily advanced like the First 5-Year Plan, the living standard of our people would have long ago reached or surpassed the comparatively well-off level. Now, the task of the four modernizations are placed on young people. I hope that young people will study hard, work diligently, shoulder the historical task placed on them and build up the cause with vigor and vitality."

EDITORIAL URGES DEVELOPING ANIMAL HUSBANDRY

[Editorial: "Raise the Development of Animal Husbandry to a Higher Position"]

[Text] The objective issued at the 12th CPC National Congress is to strive to quadruple the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production while steadily working for more and better economic results. The further development of the rural economy, including the vigorous development of animal husbandry, bears a close relationship to the realization of this grand strategic objective. Along with the continuous improvement in living standards, the demand for meat, eggs, milk, pelts, wool and their products is increasing. Many animal and poultry products are also important industrial raw materials and goods for export. Therefore, the development of animal husbandry has a great bearing on urban and rural peoples' production and livelihood, as well as on China's modernization drive. At present, viewing the country as a whole, animal husbandry is still a weak link in the national economy. So it is urgently necessary to raise the development of animal husbandry to a higher position.

Some people think that animal husbandry is merely a sideline occupation appended to agriculture and that there is thus not a question of raising its position. This is a one-sided view. China has a large population but insufficient arable land. In order to handle agriculture well and satisfy the needs in industrial development and people's livelihood, it is necessary to produce more grain and cash crops on the limited land and develop forestry, animal husbandry, sideline occupations and fishery in a comprehensive way. Here, animal husbandry holds a decisive position. We need to revise our strategy for agricultural development and one of the important links relative to the agricultural development strategy is to energetically develop animal husbandry.

The current annual grain output in China is more than 600 billion jin and it is not easy to double it. But, if we try to increase the production of meat, eggs, milk and other foodstuffs with the same value as grain, things will become much easier. Stress can be laid on developing the raising of dairy cows and sheep. Demands and conditions for developing dairy animals exist in all pastoral areas and half-farming, half-pastoral areas. Some places need to repair grassland and plant grass, and other places can make use of existing grassland resources and all kinds of fodder resources. State-run stud farms, livestock farms and stations for improving livestock breeds should function as a backbone force. It is necessary to organize and guide rural communes and production teams, specialized households and all peasants to energetically develop the production of fresh milk and dairy products. When people consume more meat, eggs and milk, their consumption of grain will fall. This will help improve the people's health. The development of animal husbandry can also provide large quantities of organic fertilizers to farmland and help raise per unit area yield. Thus, developing animal husbandry also promotes the development of grain production. We should devote the same efforts to developing animal husbandry as we do to developing grain production.

At present, the total annual output value of animal husbandry only accounts for 14 percent of the total annual value of agricultural production. This proportion is too low. We should, through several years of efforts, make the production of animal husbandry approach and attain the scale of farming production and catch up with the development level of agriculture and animal husbandry in developed countries as soon as possible. Animal husbandry production should be listed as a key development item in our plans, so as to gradually set up a production system with equal stress on farming, forestry and animal husbandry and further rationalize the agricultural production structure.

Whether the orientation in developing animal husbandry production is correct or not is the key to whether animal husbandry production can be developed. In the past, owing to the influence of "leftist" mistakes, some places blindly developed large-scale mechanized pig farms and other animal farms. This used up a lot of money but achieved poor returns, thus causing grave waste. We must draw lessons from this. Some people think that, since funds and fodder in China are limited, it is impossible for us to adopt the methods other countries have used and it is difficult to substantially develop animal husbandry. This shows that some local leaders have not really solved the problem concerning the orientation in developing animal husbandry and that some comrades still underestimate the great potential for developing animal husbandry in China. Now, in China, there are more than 170 million peasant households which are engaged in livestock raising, a large number of state-run animal farms, a technical contingent that is ardent in veterinary work, vast mountainous areas, water areas and several billion mu of grassland, and rich fodder resources, such as stalks and oil grains which have not been fully utilized. All this is the potential strength and material base on which we can develop animal husbandry. There is no reason that animal husbandry cannot be rapidly developed so long as we proceed from this actual condition, earnestly implement the party's policies, uphold the principle of self-reliance, simultaneously give play to undertakings run by the state, collectives and individuals, pay special attention to bring animal and poultry raising specialized households, key households into full play and tap the potential in the millions of peasant households, raise funds by mainly relying on the peasants and herdsmen with the state providing necessary support, and establish and perfect a setup for breeding and popularizing fine breeds, building fodder bases, preventing and curing animal and poultry diseases, and providing scientific and technologic services. At the same time, state-run stud farms, veterinary stations, breed-improving stations, grassland work stations and scientific research and teaching units of veterinary medicine should play a backbone and exemplary role in promoting China's animal husbandry modernization. All departments relative to animal husbandry should share out the work and cooperate with one another and continuously improve their efficiency and economic results. Then, the development of animal husbandry in China will be full of promise.

In order to develop animal husbandry, departments concerned should bear the main responsibility, local party committees and governments should strengthen their leadership, all relevant parties should actively cooperate to effectively solve key problems in the work and create favorable conditions for developing animal husbandry.

In recent years, we have achieved marked results in implementing the policies for restoring and developing animal husbandry. At present, some problems still need to be solved as soon as possible. For example, problems concerning the introduction of production responsibility systems in some pastoral areas, rights to using grassland, policies regarding the raising of private animals and the arrangement of herdsmen's production and livelihood should be properly solved. Farming areas should sum up their experience in pursuing responsibility systems and strengthen the work of offering supply and marketing service to animal-raising specialized, key households.

In the past 2 years, some animal products have often been difficult to market. For example, in some places, dairy goats and long-haired rabbits developed very fast, but these products were not easy to sell. As a result, production fell. In other places, due to difficulties in selling pigs, production had to be cut back, and so the masses found it difficult to buy meat again. This shows that the development of animal husbandry will inevitably lead to the problem that the original circulation channels are not suitable anymore. Relevant leading departments should pay attention to adjust circulation links, otherwise, the development of animal husbandry will be hindered. Based on the new situation in the rural areas, commercial departments and newly established integrated complexes of animal husbandry, industry and commerce in quite a few places have given energetic support to the peasants and herdsmen in funds, materials, technology, purchasing and marketing information. This has effectively advanced the development of animal husbandry and has been welcomed by the masses. All localities should seriously sum up the successful experience and adopt effective measures to make circulation serve production better. State-run commercial and industrial departments should try their best to reduce links, and lower costs so as to expedite circulation. They should also concentrate a portion of funds to strengthen some necessary capital construction projects for refrigeration and processing of animal and poultry products. It is necessary to diversify circulation channels. Animal and poultry products beyond the state quotas for purchasing should be allowed to be marketed by producers themselves. Integrated complexes of animal husbandry, industry and commerce should actively develop. Commercial departments must strictly implement the purchasing policies specified by the state. Production and commercial units should both abide by their contracts. The State Council stipulated in 1979 that when live animals are purchased, "it is necessary to weigh the animals one by one and set prices according to their quality. Prices should not be set by the whole herd." But until now, some pastoral areas still have not seriously implemented this stipulation when purchasing cattle and sheep but persist in the old pricing method. This has caused losses to the herdsmen. Commercial personnel must act according to policies and always take production and the intersts of the masses into consideration so that they can safeguard the rights and interests of the peasants and herdsmen and expedite the circulation of commodities.

NEW SUCCESSES IN INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION NOTED

[Text] Beijing, October 7 (XINHUA) -- China is now one of the world's four largest producers of steel oxygen cylinders with 18 plants producing 1.5 million annually. Cylinders produced by the Shanghai high-pressure container plant are now being exported to the United States, West Germany, Argentina and Hong Kong.

China's first railway freight car with a loading capacity of 350 tons has been trial produced at the Qiqihar railway car plant in Heilongjiang Province. The 62.2-meter-long car, which uses all domestically made materials and accessories, is designed to carry such long and heavy loads as stators for large generators and heavy machines. It has automatic dumping equipment.

Movable, aggregate far [as received] infrared ovens for drying timber have been trial produced by the Heilongjiang Provincial Research Institute of Electronics Technology and the Harbin Qianwei electric appliances plant. The new ovens consume only 0.9 kilowatt-hours of electricity to remove one kilogram of water.

Heilongjiang Province has begun serial production of aggregate automatic water sprayers for use in coal mines. The sprayer has a photoelectric controller, a contact controller and a monitoring meter. When a coal car passes through the tunnel, it is automatically sprayed. When workers pass through, the photoelectric controller prevents spraying. The product, developed by the Jiamusi explosion-proof electric appliances plant, cuts coal dust by 80 percent.

XI ZHONGXUN, ULANHU AT COMMEMORATIVE MEETING

[Excerpts] Beijing, 7 Oct (XINHUA) -- On the afternoon of 7 October, the China Democratic League held a meeting in the main hall of the auditorium of the CPPCC National Committee to commemorate the 35th anniversary of the death of Comrade Du Bincheng and the 15th anniversary of the death of Comrade Yang Mingxuan who were great patriots, outstanding educators and activists of the democratic movement.

Both Comrades Du Bincheng and Yang Mingxuan were founders and leaders of the China Democratic League in northwest China. Under the leadership of the CPC, they joined the war against Japanese aggression, conducted the democratic movement to oppose Chiang Kai-shek, promoted education and culture and trained large numbers of revolutionary cadres. They made outstanding contributions to the Chinese revolution. Comrade Du Bincheng was assassinated by the reactionary forces of the KMT in October 1974. Comrade Yang Mingxuan was chairman of the Central Committee of the China Democratic League and vice chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress. He died of illness in August 1967.

Over 450 people attended the commemorative meeting. They were: Party and state leaders Xi Zhongxun, Ulanhu and Li Weihan; Liu Lantao, vice chairman of the CPPCC National Committee; Yang Jingren, director of the United Front Work Department of the CPC Central Committee; Shi Liang, chairman of the Central Committee of the China Democratic League; Hu Yuzhi, Hua Luogeng, Sa Kongliao, Li Wenyi and Wen Jiasi, vice chairmen of the Central Committee of the China Democratic League; Gao Tian, secretary general of the Central Committee of the China Democratic League; Qu Wu, Hu Juewen, Ye Shengtao, Yan Xinmin, Huang Dingchen, Xu Deheng, Cai Xiao, Hu Ziang and Lin Liyun, responsible persons of the All-China Federation of Industry and Commerce and the All-China Federation of Taiwan Compatriots; Du Ruilan, daughter of Du Bincheng; Yang Shiyang, son of Yang Mingxuan, and other relatives; friends of Du Bincheng and Yang Mingxuan; and responsible persons of units concerned.

Xi Zhangxun, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and secretary of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee and vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, paid tribute to Comrades Du Bincheng and Yang Mingxuan and extended sincere regards to their relatives on behalf of the CPC Central Committee.

Xi Zhongxun said: Both Comrades Du Bincheng and Yang Mingxuan were faithful communist fighters. They were the most prestigious and influential persons in the educational circle and in the patriotic and democratic movement in northwest China. After the CPC Central Committee arrived in northern Shaanxi after the Long March, they fought for long years in Xian -- the center of the enemies and the city of hostility against the communists and the people. They rendered outstanding contributions in safeguarding the national united front against Japanese aggression led by the CPC, in opposing the reactionary rule of the KMT and in defending the Shaanxi-Gansu-Ningxia border areas. Their lofty moral character distinguished them as paragons of virtue and learning.

Xi Zhongxun continued: Proceeding from the spirit of constantly pursuing knowledge and truth, Comrade Du Bincheng and Yang Mingxuan progressed from being vehement patriots and devoted democrats to communists sacrificing their lives for the lofty ideal of communism. While teaching at Shanghai University in 1923, Comrade Yang Mingxuan was inspired by Comrade Qu Quibai, Deng Zhongxia and Yun Daiying to study Marxist theories. He joined the CPC in 1926 and, thereafter, he faithfully and conscientiously devoted himself to the liberation of China and the Chinese people and to the communist cause. Although Comrade Du Bincheng was not a communist, he also progressed from a revolutionary democrat to a faithful communist fighter. In 1933 he proposed to General Yang Hucheng to "cooperate with the communists in fighting Chiang Kai-shek and the Japanese aggressors." When the 'Xian incident' occured in 1936, he shouted the slogan of 'following the communists.' When Comrades Du Bincheng and Yang Mingxuan jointly founded the Northwest General Branch of the China Democratic League, they drew up the political program of "fraternizing with the Soviet Union, befriending the Chinese Communist and striving for the realization of new democracy." In 1937, Comrade Mao Zedong praised Comrade Du Bincheng as the "faithful friend of the CPC." In December 1948 Comrade Zhou Enlai praised him as the "Lu Xun-style communist."

Xi Zhongxun pointed out: Comrades Du Bincheng and Yang Mingxuan were noted personages of society. They were not corrupted by wealth or subdued by force but wholeheartedly served the motherland and the people. Their courage in waging unremitting struggles for the communist ideal was particularly moving. The militant course traversed by these two comrades fully shows that the veteran intellectuals of China, in their revolutionary careers, generally proceeded from patriotism and democracy toward understanding the irresistible law of history through continual study and revolutionary practice and they eventually established the communist world outlook. The intellectuals in the new period must also follow the example of Comrades Du Bincheng and Yang Mingxuan by holding high the banners of patriotism and communism and unceasingly pursuing studies and practice and advancing forward. The revolutionary careers of Comrade De Bincheng and Yang Mingxuan also shows that we must have firm conviction and belief in communism and the Communist Party and possess the spirit of sacrificing our lives for truth. This is the spiritual pillar of the revolutionary. The revolutionary period was in need of this spiritual pillar. The current period of socialist construction is all the more in need of this spiritual pillar.

Xi Zhongxun concluded: In 1948 Comrade Yang Mingxuan ardently said in his eulogy for Comrade Du Bincheng: "Mr Bincheng and I were schoolmates at Peiping Normal University, colleagues in propagating education in Shaanxi and activists in promoting the democratic revolutionary movement in northwest China. Cherishing the same ideals and following the same path, we became bosom friends at an early age. We never swerved from the course of political integrity." Their profound revolutionary friendship fully embodies the fraternal relations of "treating each other with all sincerity and sharing weal and woe" between the CPC and the various democratic parties and between the Communist Party members and the patriotic democrats. During the revolutionary period, our party established these fraternal relations with the nonpartisan friends and won success for the revolution. In the new period of socialist construction, we must further consolidate and develop these fraternal relations and cooperation.

The commemorative meeting was presided over by Hu Yuzhi.

In the evening, the CPPCC National Committee held a banquet in honor of the relatives of Comrades Du Bincheng and Yang Mingxuan in the Great Hall of the People.

BAYI RADIO DEPLORES MISTREATMENT OF GENG BIAO

OW080341 (Clandestine) Radio Ba Yi in Mandarin to China 1330 GMT 7 Oct 82

[Text] The method of removing Defense Minister Geng Biao from his post is shameful. This cannot but arouse discontent among army cadres, particularly high-ranking cadres. Even if there were a need to transfer Comrade Geng Biao to another post, it should have been done openly and frankly according to the rules and regulations set by the party and the state instead of resorting to trickery.

For a long time there have been people who have adopted sinister measures to undermine Comrade Geng Biao's prestige and restrict his power as defense minister. Some people said: A large-scale military exercise was held in northern China last year. However, the defense minister was rarely seen. It was not until the last day that Comrade Geng Biao appeared, while many less prominent people were swaggering around on the reviewing stand and making a show of themselves. In May this year, Comrade Geng Biao was removed from his post as vice premier without good reason. Apparently this is an abnormal phenomenon. According to the usual practice, a defense minister usually works as vice premier or assumes other important posts of the party and state. This shows the significant role of the army in the state.

Another fact is: In the past, the defense minister has invariably been a member of the Political Bureau. However, in the 12th CPC National Congress, Comrade Geng Biao failed to occupy a seat in the Political Bureau. He was not even elected a member of the CPC Central Committee. He only has an empty title on the advisory commission.

In short, simply because Comrade Geng Biao is not to the liking of a certain person, all kinds of measures have been adopted to restrict his power and edge him out of the Ministry of Defense. Someone revealed that Comrade Wei Guoqing would succeed Comrade Geng Biao as defense minister, and that it is for this reason that Comrade Wei Guoqing has already resigned from his post as the director of the General Political Department. Comrade Wei Guoqing is an experienced, prestigious army leading cadre. He is physically healthy, although he is 76 years of age. He works boldly and resolutely. However, another question is: What would happen if Comrade Wei Guoqing were still not to this person's liking after his promotion to defense minister? In short, at present, there is a person who defies the guidelines laid down by the several plenary sessions of the CPC national congress. One's loyalty to this person has become the primary requirement for any assignment to leading party, government and military posts. This is why it is difficult now to achieve stability and unity among party, government and military leaders.

HEILONGJIANG GOVERNOR ON QUADRUPLING OUTPUT

SK020809 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 1 Oct 82

["Radio and television talk" by Chen Lei, secretary of the Heilongjiang Provincial CPC Committee and provincial governor: "Strive To Quadruple Our Province's Annual Industrial and Agricultural Output Value By the End of This Century"--recorded, date not given]

[Excerpts] Comrades, the political report made at the 12th CPC Congress by Comrade Hu Yaobang on behalf of the CPC Central Committee said that the general objective of China's economic construction for the two decades between 1981 and the end of this century is, while steadily working for more and better economic results, to quadruple the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production. This grand objective conforms to the will of the party and the people. It will surely become a powerful motive force to spur the millions upon millions of people to bring about a comprehensive upsurge of the socialist economy and create a brand new situation for socialist modernization. We wholeheartedly support this strategic objective set forth at the 12th CPC Congress and will unswervingly make more contributions to the successful accomplishment of the objective.

While studying and implementing the guidelines of the 12th CPC Congress, the provincial CPC committee and government held discussions and formulated initial plans for our province to quadruple its annual industrial and agricultural output value. Viewed from the actual situation of Heilongjiang, it is totally possible that the province quadruples its annual industrial and agricultural output value by the end of this century. In order to accomplish this objective, our annual increase should be 7.2 percent in the coming 20 years. Such a speed is not high compared with our previous records. In the 32 years from 1950 to 1981, our annual increase in industrial and agricultural output value was 8.6 percent, much higher than the quota we set for the next 20 years.

Regarding resources and economic conditions, we have the following favorable conditions:

1. We have great superiority in resources. We have a vast and fertile land, large areas of forests and rich mineral reserves. These are expectional advantages we enjoy.

2. We have a solid foundation for industrial and agricultural production and a great potential for economic development.

3. Through the efforts in readjustment in the past 3 years and more, our economic structure has been greatly changed and the proportion between the major branches of the economy has become more balanced.

4. We have summed up both positive and negative experiences of the past 30 years and more and and have found a new way for our economic development.

5. [Words indistinct] to accelerate our economic development.

6. The state's policy of enlivening the domestic economy and opening to the outside world will promote local economy.

7. We have achieved marked results in combining enterprise consolidation with he consolidation of the party and have made greater efforts to improve economic results.

8. With the whole party concentrating its efforts on improving economic results, economic problems are being solved continuously and economic experiences gained. Party work style, social conduct and public security have remarkably improved.

All these fully show that we are [words indistinct] and sure to accomplish the strategic objective of quadrupling our annual industrial and agricultural output value.

While striving to quadruple the annual industrial and agricultural output value, we should solve the problems concerning circulation and consumption and give full play to the role of circulation in promoting production and that of production in promoting circulation. We should continue implementing the line, principles and policies laid down at the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, maintain the stability and continuation of policies and further enliven the economy. We should bring every positive factor into full play to conduct ideological education, formulate specific policies, implement managerial systems and work out measures and methods. In the meantime, we should take the whole situation into consideration by coordinating all the activities of the nation as in a chess game, take the initiative in safeguarding the state's interests, strive to overcome departmentalist and decentralist tendencies and bring about a new upsurge in the socialist construction. Party committees at all levels should conscientiously strengthen leadership and conduct thoroughgoing and painstaking political and ideological work. Governments at all levels and their executive departments should fully play their role in quadrupling the annual industrial and agricultural output value. [sentence indistinct] We should start now in order to achieve the objective. We should do a good job in mapping out plans for next year and see to it that the plans for the sixth 5-year plan period which we are implementing are fulfilled or overfulfilled. We should combine the formulation of the plans for quadrupling the annual industrial and agricultural output value with current production, turn the plans into a motive force to promote current production and other work and fulfill the plans step by step.

Under the guidance of the guidelines of the 12th CPC Congress, let us be united and work diligently with one heart and one mind and make contributions to creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

HEILONGJIANG'S YANG YICHEN AT CPC SESSION

[Text] The Sixth Enlarged Plenary Session of the Fourth Heilongjiang Provincial CPC Committee opened today in Harbin. Ninety-nine members and alternate members attended the session. Attending as observers were standing committee members of the commission for discipline inspection of the provincial CPC committee, party-member vice chairmen of the provincial people's congress; party-member vice chairmen of the provincial CPPCC committee; secretaries of various prefectural, municipal and county CPC committees; principal responsible comrades of various provincial-level departments, offices, committees, sections and bureaus, mass organizations and universities and colleges; and responsible comrades of railway, farm, fishery and coal administrative bureaus. Party-member scientists and technicians who are representatives in their fields were invited to the session. Also invited were responsible comrades of various democratic parties.

In order to make this plenary session a success, the provincial CPC committee had done a lot of preparatory work. It held an enlarged standing committee meeting before the National Day to relay and study the guidelines of the 12th CPC Congress and discussed and studied initial plans for implementing the guidelines.

Today's session was presided over by Comrade Yang Yichen, first secretary of the provincial CPC committee.

Comrade Chen Junsheng, secretary, was the first to speak. He gave a brief account of the 12th CPC Congress and expounded its achievements, great historical significance and major guidelines. Comrade Li Jianbai, secretary, relayed the speech made by Comrade Deng Xiaoping at the first plenary session of the Advisory Commission of the CPC Central Committee. Comrade (Zhang Ming), permanent secretary of the discipline inspection commission of the provincial CPC committee, relayed the speech made by Comrade Hu Yaobang at the First Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee.

Yesterday evening all the committee members to the Sixth Plenary Session of the Fourth Heilongjiang Provincial CPC Committee held a meeting. Comrade Yang Yichen chaired the meeting. The guiding ideology, tasks, agenda and schedule of the plenary session were discussed and approved at the meeting. The meeting noted that the 12th CPC Congress was a most important meeting, a meeting of the greatest epoch-making significance since the 7th CPC Congress. The central tasks for the plenary session are to relay and study the guidelines of the congress and discuss the plans for our province to implement the guidelines. These are tasks of first priority after the 12th CPC Congress.

The meeting held: It is imperative to fully understand the importance of the study. The implementation of the guidelines of the 12th CPC congress first depends on successful relay and study, through which the whole party will reach a common understanding. In the course of the study, we should concentrate, read carefully and thoroughly, think hard and study again and again. It is not enough to read major documents once or twice only. We should read them many times. We should not become persons who can talk fluently on the importance of the documents and yet are impatient and absent-minded when the time comes to study them. We should not interpret the study as any activity participated in only by lower-level cadres. In the current activities to relay and study the congress documents, leading cadres at and above the county level must take the lead in the study.

They must write for themselves the outlines for their speeches on their study. They should conduct the study in line with reality; the first being ideological reality, to correctly master the basic guidelines of the documents and unify their understanding in accordance with the guiding principles and policies set at the 12th CPC Congress. On the basis of a thorough understanding of the congress documents, the enlarged plenary session should exert greater efforts to discuss the ways for our Heilongjiang Province to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. We should hold comprehensive discussions, particularly those on economic construction. We should mainly discuss the guiding ideology, the strategic objective, ways for development and important measures so as to reach a common understanding and adopt concerted action.

Comrades attending the provincial meeting of propaganda department directors and the provincial meeting of forestry bureau directors and party-members cadres at and above the deputy section chief level of the provincial departments listened to the broadcast relay of the session. They will also study together with the members of the provincial CPC committee during the enlarged plenary session.

HEILONGJIANG'S YANG YICHEN ATTENDS CONFERENCE

SK270908 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 26 Sep 82

[Text] The recent provincial conference on the construction of villages and small towns noted that all localities should develop villages and small towns in a planned manner to turn, step by step, comparatively backward villages and small towns into modern and culturally advanced socialist ones.

The conference noted: Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, following the rapid development of rural economy, rural communes, brigades and peasants have markedly increased their incomes and unprecedented achievements have been scored in village and small town construction, particularly in building new houses. Many villages and small towns have stepped from unitary residential house construction onto the stage of comprehensive construction.

The conference held: Village and small town construction is an important aspect of the economic construction. All localities should proceed from the situation of rural development as a whole in carrying out village and small town counstruction in a planned manner to turn comparatively backward villages and small towns into modern and culturally advanced socialist ones. Efforts should be made to successfully map out plans and design for the construction to avoid blind spots. Village and small town construction should be done in accordance with the principle of comprehensively improving mountains, rivers, farmlands, forests and roads, and the principle of appropriately concentrating construction in certain areas and scattering it in different areas.

In designing for construction, efforts should be made to develop the strong architectural points in our province's villages and small towns, respect the people's good habits and gradually establish the construction pattern for our rural areas. Arbitrary building of houses should be resolutely banned. Land necessary for daily life, including that for housing, roads and afforestation, in villages and small towns should be strictly limited within the amount and ratio set by construction departments. It is essential to comprehensively develop villages and small towns with the emphasis placed on the development of market towns.

While attending to housing construction, close attention should be paid to water supply and drainage, road construction, afforestation and the construction of public facilities for production and livelihood, so as to gradually improve the peasants' housing and environmental conditions and conditions for obtaining necessary service.

The conference stressed: Village and small town construction needs a great amount of building materials. The contradiction between supply and demand is acute. The fundamental way to solve the problem is to achieve self-reliance, take measures suitable to local conditions and use local materials. Efforts should be made to encourage communes and brigades to develop production of bricks, tales sand, stone, lime and other building materials to supply neighborhood areas. Mountainous areas should be encouraged to use more [words indistinct] and the outskirts of cities more industrial waste materials.

The conference called on leading persons at all levels to deepen their understanding of the importance of village and small town construction, place it high on their agenda and regard it as a major task.

The conference was held from 20 to 25 September in Harbin. Units and individuals advanced in village and small town construction were commended at the conference. Comrade Yang Yichen, first secretary of the provincial CPC committee, spoke.

HEILONGJIANG'S YANG YICHEN VIEWS CORN MACHINES

[Text] According to HEILONGJIANG RIBAO, two new-style sample corn-harvesting machines had test runs recently at the provincial farm machinery research institute. Comrades attending the enlarged Standing Committee meeting of the Heilongjiang Provincial CPC Committee viewed the test run. Of the two sample machines on display, one was the first new-style sample machine which can grind corn stalk into animal feed or collect corn stalk for burning. The other was (?complete corn-harvesting cample machine) modified from the original harvesting machines.

After viewing the test run, Comrade Yang Yichen encouraged all comrades participating in the research and production to redouble their efforts to achieve mechanization in all agricultural production links in our province and to release more manpower from the farm to engage in the development of forestry, animal husbandry, sideline occupations, fisheries and processing industry in order to make contributions to achieving the fighting goal set forth at the 12th party congress.

HEILONGJIANG RIBAO ON COMMUNIST EDUCATION

[Report on HEILONGJIANG RIBAO commentator's article, entitled: "The Emphasis of Communist Education" -- date not given]

[Text] The article states: In the socialist stage, we cannot make it mandatory for all the people in society to become communists. However, we must set demands on the Communist Party members, CYL members and advanced elements with the communist ideas and through them, educate and influence the broad masses of people to bring along more and more people in society to become laborers with ideals, morality, culture and a sense of observance of discipline. Therefore, in conducting communist education, the stress of current work should be laid on the party members, party-member cadres and youths. At present, some party members have a confused understanding of the destiny of communism in varying degrees.

There are many specific reasons for this. Different persons have different reasons for their problems. However, there is one reason in common: A lack of the basic theory of Marxism and a conscious understanding of the social development law, thus resulting in a lack of revolutionary steadfastness and a failure in withstanding the rest of hardships and twists and turns in the course of revolution.

To sum up historical experience and to enable our party-member cadres to firmly bear in mind the communist ideology, the essential thing to do is to strengthen education in Marxist basic theory. Only by understanding clearly the social historical development law of mankind, only by viewing the bright prospects which we are bound to achieve in the socialist and communist cause can we avoid being detoured by hardships, twists and turns. As to the issue of insufficient concern for this matter on the part of some people in society, efforts must be made to influence and help them with the staunchness of Communist Party members. In addition, we Communist Party members first of all must firmly bear in mind communist ideology and must have a firm conviction that the communist cause is most important. Through education, we must enable our Communist Party members to always remember that they are party members of the ruling party, their aim is to wholeheartedly serve the people and their final goal is to realize the communist social system. They must set higher and more severe demands on themselves. Besides, they must match their words with deeds and must really bring into play their role as model Communist Party members.

While strengthening communist ideological education among party-members cadres, special attention must be paid to the education of enlightenment among youths, including education on the communist outlook on life and the world outlook and the party's revolutionary traditions. In addition, efforts must be made to conduct education on communist ideology and ethics among the masses of the people and to include the principle of communist ideology in propaganda and education on social morality, professional morality and individual family morality. Efforts must be made to actively publicize and commend heroes and models in our practical life that are shining with the brilliance of communist ideology and use their ideology, moral character and advanced deeds to inspire the people's spirit to work hard and make progress.

To strengthen education on communist ideology, we must combine the study and propaganda of the constitution with the education on civil rights,obligations and discipline. In the past 2 years, in the course of carrying out the civility and courtesy activities, all schools mapped out rules for students; enterprises have formulated rules for workers; urban areas have drawn up a civilized pledge; rural areas have drafted rules for peasants; and all trades and professions have worked out a professional pledge. They have scored gratifying achievements in this regard. Such efforts must continue.

The article states in conclusion: Doing a good job in communist ideological education among party-member cadres will bring along all the people and the society as a whole, and doing a good job in education for youths will decide the future. This is a major matter affecting the whole situation, and the future of the motherland. We must pay attention to this and do it reliably and effectively.

[Text] According to JILIN RIBAO, the propaganda department of the provincial CPC committee, the provincial post and telecommunications office and the general office of JILIN RIBAO jointly sponsored the provincial press publication work conference recently. The conference held: Since the beginning of this year, the variety and amount of published papers and periodicals have remarkably increased thanks to the attention and leadership of CPC committees at all levels in the province and to the enthusiastic propaganda, active delivery and good service of post and telecommunications offices.

The conference held: To date, the upsurge of studying, propagating and implementing the guidelines of the 12th party congress has already started in our province. This new situation sets a new and still higher demand on the press publication work. The conference explicitly pointed out: To keep abreast of this new situation, the 1983 press publication work should be stressed on the publication of papers and periodicals sponsored by the CPC Central Committee and the provincial CPC committee on the basis of a comprehensive development of press publication work. While actively developing the urban press publication, close attention should be paid to developing the rural press publication so every production team may have papers and preiodicals. LI DESHENG VISITS FAMILIES IN LIAONING

SK040204 Shenyang Liaoning Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 3 Oct 82

[Text] According to our sources, on 1-2 October Li Desheng, Political Bureau member of the CPC Central Committee and commander of the Shenyang PLA units, paid a visit to families of a number of intellectuals who work in the general hospital under the Shenyang PLA units and sponsored a forum with the participation of 11 veteran intellectuals on the occasion of National Day.

At the forum, Comrade Li Desheng held a cordial talk with them and earnestly heard opinions offered by them in regard to implementation of the policy on intellectuals and on modernizing the hospital. Veteran intellectuals of the hospital were very satisfied with the party's policy on intellectuals, which has been successfully carried out since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee.

They stated: Over the past few years, intellectuals have sensed the warmth provided by the party and have been happy and full of vigor in conducting work.

After hearing their opinions, Comrade Li Desheng stated: Making a country prosperous depends not only on politics, but also on cultural knowledge and modern science and technology. The target set forth by the 12th national party congress in regard to creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization is an arduous task that challenges us to exert all-out efforts to wage an arduous struggle for fulfilling it. The success of communism will not drop from the sky but requires arduous struggles launched by the people of several generations. Our current efforts are aimed at this grand target. He urged forum participants to earnestly implement the 12th party congress guidelines and to do a good job in passing on their experience, giving help and setting examples in training their successors for the sake of the party's cause. Efforts should be made not only to successfully pass on their experience, give help and set themselves examples in politics and ideology, but also in professional technology. Concerted efforts should be made to make more contributions to creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

LIAONING HOLDS ANTIDROUGHT EMERGENCY MEETING

[Text] The provincial CPC committee and government held a provincial emergency antidrought meeting in Shenyang from 27 to 29 September. The meeting decided that early preparations be made to combat spring drought in winter so as to create favorable conditions for a good harvest next year.

Our province has suffered drought for 4 consecutive years. From January to August this year, the province's average precipitation was only 320 mm, 180 mm less than in normal years. Groundwater level has lowered by 1 or 2 meters in most areas and by 3 or 4 meters in a few places. In order to ensure industrial and agricultural production, the provincial CPC committee and government called for immediate action to counter drought and water shortage.

At the meeting the provincial CPC committee and government assigned the central paddy-field areas the task of sinking 2,580 pump wells and renovating 2,250 wells and dry farmlands and orchids in Dalian, Jinzhou, Teiling and Chaoyang the task of building 3,000 antidrought facilities, sinking 1,350 pump wells and renovating 4,000 wells. The provincial CPC committee and government urged that these tasks be fulfilled in quality and quantity before spring sowing in 1983.

The meeting called on all localities to pay close attention to the conservation of water for urban industrial use while storing and conserving water for agricultural use. It called for efforts to conserve water as we do coal, electricity and oil, recycle water as much as possible and strictly stop wasting water.

The meeting noted that relief from the drought and water shortage is being taken as a long-term strategic task of our province. We should include the task high in the agenda for leadership at all levels, strengthen leadership over it and give unified guidance and make unified arrangements for it. All trades and professions should render support for the well-sinking, antidrought work.

U.S. 'MUST NOT' DISCLOSE ARMS SALES INFORMATION

[Editorial: "The United States Has Become Enmeshed in a Web of its Own Spinning"]

[Text] The "17 August joint communique" issued by the United States and the Chinese Communists stated that U.S. arms sales to the Republic of China would not exceed, in terms of quality and of quantity, the level of those supplied in the few years since 1979. When the "communique" was issued, people of all quarters regarded this unreasonable restriction not only as absurd but also completely impractical. They believed that if it were to be observed, it would certainly touch off a series of serious complications causing extreme tension and turmoil in relations among all sides. Facts have since proven that developments have been exactly as predicted.

Now that the United States has promised that its arms sales to the ROC will not exceed, either in qualitative or in quantitative terms, the level of those supplied in the few years since 1979, the Chinese Communists can resort to sophistry and demand to know the details of U.S. arms sales to the ROC in the past. For example, the Chinese Communists may want to know what weapons were supplied, in which years they were supplied, the characteristics of weapons supplied, the quantity and prices of weapons supplied and so on and so forth. If the United States fails to supply the Chinese Communists with the information, they may argue that because they are not told of the level of arms supplies in the past, they cannot determine whether the new arms sales exceed the level of arms supplies in the past or not. And just as expected, the Chinese Communists have formally notified the United States that it should supply them with the information. They want not only information on arms sales to Taiwan in the years since 1979 but also complete information on arms sales to Taiwan in the past 20 years.

The Chinese Communists' demand has caused a real headache for the U.S. State Department, which was immediately caught in a dilemma. In view of the "joint communique," the United States cannot simply ignore the demand. However, if the demand is accepted, the United States will incur heavy criticism, touching off disputes at home and abroad. It may even trigger a storm. This is because if the United States fails to make the necessary reply to the Chinese Communists in response to their demand or fails to supply them with the information they want, the latter will, under the pretext that the United States is violating its commitment in the "joint communique," certainly stir up the controversial issue of arms sales to Taiwan in order to exert pressure on the United States. The consequence is that the "joint communique" becomes a scrap of paper and that the long-term, arduous negotiations over the past year fall through. But, if the United States accepts the Chinese Communists' demand and supplies them with information about arms sales to Taiwan, it will inevitably touch off strong objections within the U.S. Congress and a dispute within the administration itself. When this matter was made public, 15 U.S. senators immediately wrote a joint letter to Reagan voicing their resolute objection. The fact that the senators were able to know about the U.S. State Department's initial response so far in advance shows that U.S. congressmen and those in the U.S. State Department who are opposed to this demand are now making joint efforts to prevent the United States from giving in to the Chinese Communists' extortion. It is expected that this opposition force and momentum will increase in the future.

However, the crux of the matter is whether or not the issue can be resolved by itself. Can U.S. congressional opposition effectively block this demand on a long-term basis? Will the U.S. State Department perpetuate a gigantic fraud by secretly accepting the Chinese Communists' demand? Some time ago, U.S. congressmen also voiced strong objection on some issues, including on the abrogation of the Sino-U.S. joint defense treaty, but it was to no avail. Therefore, we cannot but feel skeptical about whether or not the congressmen's objection can continue to obstruct the supply of information on arms sales for a long period of time.

Because of congressional objections, the U.S. State Department is still not willing openly to admit the existence of the Chinese Communists' demand, let alone to openly make a statement that it has initially accepted the demand -- although it admits the existence of secret contacts. The U.S. State Department's attitude, as verified by many incidents in the past, justifies our misgivings on the future development of this issue.

Suppose the worst happens, that is, suppose the United States ultimately yields to the pressure put upon it by the Chinese Communists and hands over the information on arms sales since 1979 and all information on arms sales in the past 20 years. What then will be the overall consequence and effect on us? One of the consequences and effects will be, as the U.S. Congressmen opposed to the demand have pointed out, the complete exposure of all military intelligence concerning the ROC, including the operation and performance of our weapons, their varieties and our defensive power. In other words, our army will have all its secrets exposed and our opponents will be in a militarily favorable position by being able to know the enemy as well as themselves.

A more serious consequence will be that a precedent will be set which will encourage the Chinese Communists to ask for something else in a more absurd and bolder way. For example, if the Chinese Communists are given the information on U.S. arms sales to us, to make sure that new arms sales do not exceed the level in the past they may further want to examine and make an inventory of weapons and articles delivered to Taiwan on each ship and check each detailed list. Is this not preposterous?

Therefore, we feel that by promising in the "17 August joint communique" to limit arms sales to the ROC in terms of quality and quantity the United States actually became enmeshed in a web of its own spinning. It was also extremely unwise for the United States to do so. To prevent the Chinese Communists from continuing to extort the United States and from landing the United States in an awkward political predicament, the United States should immediately make this firm statement: The so-called restriction on arms sales to Taiwan, that is, that sales should not exceed previous levels either in qualitative or in quantitative terms, refers only to figures in the report made by the U.S. Government to the U.S. Congress. Other than this the United States must absolutely not accept any restriction or excessive demand. The United States absolutely must not fall back one more step.

TAIPEI WARNS AGAINST PRC MILITARY MODERNIZATION

[Station commentary]

[Text] The United States is agreeing to sell an advanced computer that can simulate missile flights to the Chinese Communists. Is that a good idea? The Republic of China does not think so. It could be said that Taiwan is prejudiced. But so are the Southeast Asian countries of the ASEAN, or the Association of Southeast Asian Nations group. Not one of them -- the Philippines, Thailand, Malaysia, Singapore and Indonesia -- favors the sale of modern computers and arms to Red China. Neither does the Republic of Korea. It is difficult for these countries to understand why the United States will sell the Chinese Communists anything that it would not trust the Soviet Union to have.

Some time ago the United States said it would sell sophisticated weapons to Red China. Peking was invited to send its military purchasers to the United States. They did not go. One reason is that the Chinese Communists have no money to pay for expensive weapons. Another is that weapons sales to the Republic of China are continuing. Peiping would like to make its own purchases contingent on the cutoff of those to Free China.

Most Asian countries fear the Chinese Communists more than either the Russians or the Vietnamese. There is sound reason for this. Soviet forces are massed along the border with Red China, not in Southeast Asia. Their so-called bases in Vietnam do not amount to a whole lot. No matter where you look in Asia, there is no evidence that the Soviet Union is about to start marching. This is not Europe.

Japan has some fears because the Russians are just to the north. But the Japanese are covered by both U.S. nuclear and conventional umbrellas. Any Soviet move against Japan would be one against the United States as well. South Korea also has a guarantee from the United States that would cover aggression from any communist source. The Republic of China and the ASEAN countries are not similarly protected.

Red China has said that it will proceed against Taiwan militarily if the island is not surrendered. The five ASEAN states have been targets of Chinese Communist infiltration and subversion. Each of them has a Chinese population. Many of these Chinese are loyal to the Republic of China and their countries of residence, but not all. There are enough resident Chinese Communists to constitute dangerous fifth columns.

Admittedly, the Chinese Communists did not do very well in attempting to punish Vietnam but they did not have modern weapons and were up against the strongest fighting force in Southeast Asia. Such countries as Thailand, Malaysia and Singapore do not have military forces to compare with those of Vietnam. The Philippines has its hands full with communist and Muslim insurrections. Even Burma is compelled to fight Chinese Communist-supported armies. The United States must be careful in trying to build up Red Chinese military strength to offset that of the Soviet Union.

First, will the Chinese Communists use weapons or computers against the USSR or will they deploy them against other targets? Second, even if the Chinese Communists do stand up to the Soviet Union, could the United States pay the price? Estimates for modernizing Chinese Communist forces run as high as $100 billion. Can the United STates support that, especially for an unreliable ally? Third, how can Washington be sure that the Chinese Communists would not take their new-found strength over to the Russian side and join forces with the Kremlin for an attack on the United States? Is America strong enough to fight in Asia and Europe at the same time? It is a definite risk if Red China is modernized militarily.

HSIANG KANG SHAH PAO REPORT ON SINO-SOVIET TALKS

[Editorial: "China and Russia Resume Talks"]

[Excerpts] China and Russia have resumed talks at the "deputy foreign minister" level in Beijing. The talks have been held between Russian Deputy Foreign Minister Leonid Ilichev and Chinese "Deputy Foreign Minister" Qian Qichen. This is the first contact since the Soviet Union sent troops to Afghanistan and since China announced the suspension of the talks on bilateral relations in January 1980.

What is the detailed content of these talks? Will they make any headway? Will there be a new breakthrough in their bilateral relations? It is still difficult to comment on or appraise them. However, we should understand that, on the one hand, they are old hands at conflict and are unlikely to make generous concessions. On the other hand, they are also opportunists who apply dialectic logic and know the great importance of the "unity of opposities." We should not, therefore, rashly conclude that no results will be achieved in their talks and that the relations between the two communist countries will not make much headway.

Over the past 22 years (1960-82), the dispute between China and Russia can be summed up in three aspects: 1) differences in theory and line; 2) contention over leadership of the international communist movement; and 3) border disputes and conflicts.

In order to adjust their relations and solve relevant problems between the two communist countries, China and Russia held talks at the "deputy foreign minister" level on several occasions in 1964 and 1969 but no results were achieved. The reason for the failure was not because the CPC had a "bitter hatred" for the CPSU or that they were extremely antagonistic. (The genuine "bitter hatred" was caused by Russian troops who raped, slaughtered and looted in the northeast and took away machinery from the northeast. It was also caused by Russia during the Korean War when China fought for Russia and sacrificed more than 1 million youths from the mainland, extorted billions of dollars for supplying China with a little military equipment. During the "airing of views," Long Yun said that the Soviet Union was in the wrong and had gone too far. As a result, he was criticized and denounced at public meetings by the CPC, which claimed that he "undermined Sino-Soviet relations" and persecuted him to death.) The reason was that both communist countries were old hands at holding "talks" and waging struggles. Each knew the ins and outs of the other party and each was "playing cards," with the result that they failed to come to a mutual agreement and parted on bad terms.

With respect to the talks between Ilichev and Qian Qichen, foreign news agencies have reported the remarks of Chinese "Foreign Ministry personnel" as follows: "The Soviet delegates have come as guests of the Chinese Government. The talks are neither border talks nor talks on expanding normal relations but a first step in restoring dialogue between the two countries." "There is neither a precondition nor an agenda in the bilateral talks in which questions can be raised freely in preparation for the official talks."

It now seems that the contact on this occasion is just an initial and exploratory one aimed at creating the atmosphere of "talks" and the impression of "playing cards" to the West.

However, the present situation in China and the Soviet Union is vastly different from that of the past and there is a strong possibility of the "two combining into one."

1. The principal figures who created the contradictions and differences in those years -- Nikita S. Khrushchev and Mao Zedong -- are dead and there are no sharp contradictions now between Leonid Brezhnev and Deng Xiaoping. There are not any major obstructions between them.

2. Viewed from the ideological line, in the past, the CPSU advocated "peaceful coexistence," "peaceful competition," "peaceful transition," "state of the whole people" and "party of the whole people" while the CPC advocated violent struggle. The CPSU denounced the CPC as "dogmatists" while the latter denounced the former as "revisionists." But now, the Deng Xiaoping clique also practices revisionism and begs "U.S. imperialism" for pity. Both of them are capitalist roaders who are in the habit of asking for help. Therefore, with the exception of "hegemonism," we have not heard for a long time such curses as "Soviet revisionism," "social imperialism" and "new czar." This shows that they "took wordless counsel" long ago.

3. The border issue constitutes a lesser problem. In its statement during the Mao Zedong era, the CPC indicated: "Although the Sino-Soviet border treaties signed in the past were unequal ones, the Chinese Government is still willing to respect these treaties...and is convinced that the Sino-Soviet border can truly become a border of eternal friendship."

Thus, it is not difficult to note that differences between China and Russia are not truly serious and that the confrontation between China and Russia is not genuine. A "thaw" between them is thus quite probable. Their common objective of "burying capitalism" will never change. The theories of what is called "uniting China in resisting Russia" and "parallel strategic interests" will certainly go bankrupt following a rapport between China and Russia.

STANDARD VIEWS PRC-UK TALKS ON HONG KONG

[Text] The British ambassador in Beijing is understood to have started talks with Chinese officials on Hong Kong's future, a government official said yesterday.

He also said the talks might be extended to London where the Chinese ambassador would hold talks with the British Foreign Office in the preliminary rounds.

These talks are mainly aimed at identifying the differences between the two governments over the sovereignty issue since both maintain that Hong Kong's prosperity and stability are their common objective.

It is known that Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and Chinese leaders had set the tone for the talks about Hong Kong's future during her recent visit to Beijing.

The official said he thought that Mrs Thatcher would have to take part in the talks' final rounds before a final agreement would be reached.

And Hong Kong's Governor Sir Edward Youde would join in when necessary.

He said China and Britain believed that their differences could be reconciled and an agreement acceptable to both could be reached.

He reiterated that statements would be issued by both governments on the progress of their talks from time to time.

But the official envisaged that the talks would not involve a visiting delegation to either country or a committee at this preliminary stage.

HUANG HUA'S 'SINCERE' SINO-U.S. RELATIONS TALK

HK080818 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 8 Oct 82 p 2

["Political Talks" column by Shi Chun-yu [2457 0689 3768]: "Huang Hua Speaks About Sino-U.S. Relations in New York"]

[Text] Deng Xiaoping Speaks About Sino-U.S. Relations

The speech delivered by Foreign Minister Huang Hua at an evening dinner in New York shows once again that there are still obstacles in developing Sino-U.S. relations. He appealed to the people of China and the United States to remove the obstacles and to continue their efforts in developing relations between the two countries.

On the whole, Sino-U.S. relations in the past 10 years have been good. This assessment was made by Deng Xiaoping when he recently met with former U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger. He also said that there have been setbacks in the past 2 years and the key problem is U.S. arms sales to Taiwan.

After holding talks for nearly 1 year, China and the United States issued in August this year a joint communique concerning the principles and concrete steps to settle the issue of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan. The United States has promised that the performance and quantity of arms to be sold to Taiwan will not exceed those sold in the past few years since the establishment of Sino-U.S. diplomatic relations and that it is ready to reduce step by step its arms sales to Taiwan so that this issue will finally be settled after a period of time.

The joint communique issued in August also stipulated that in order for the issue of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan to be finally settled after a time, an issue which is handed down from the past, the Chinese and American Governments will strive to take measures and create conditions to facilitate a thorough settlement of this issue.

The Spirit of Sino-U.S. Joint Communique Issued in August

According to this communique, so long as both sides work earnestly to settle the issue of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan step by step until it is thoroughly settled, Sino-U.S. relations will certainly develop.

However, there are a handful of people in the United States who attempt to interfere in Sino-U.S. relations through the U.S. "Taiwan Relations Act." They persist in regarding Taiwan as an independent political entity, such as when considering arms sales to Taiwan. This encroaches upon China's soversignty and interferes in China's internal affairs. Of course, Beijing strongly opposes this.

Recently the U.S. congressional investigation bureau [guo hu diao cha ju 0948 2585 6148 2686 1444] issued a report entitled "Taiwan and the U.S.-Sino Joint Communique," which openly criticizes the Sino-U.S. joint communique issued in August.

Some People in the United States Are Playing Tricks Again

This report, which was issued on 4 October, was intended to be a reference for congressmen in the U.S. Senate and the House of Representatives, but it makes various open attacks on the Sino-U.S. joint communique issued in August, alleging that if the United States reduces its arms sales to Taiwan, the latter's defense strength will be weakened and this may induce Beijing to use force against Taiwan or to make "threats" against it by forceful means.

What is more ridiculous is that this report attacks the U.S. Government, saying that the latter denies "one China and one Taiwan," "has made even greater concessions to China" than it did in the Shanghai Communique of 1972 and the 1979 communique for establishing diplomatic relations; and consequently, "the joint communique issued in August gives an impression that the United States is under China's pressure and causes political and social unstability in Taiwan" and so on.

It Is Said That the United States Will Sell 60 Airplanes to Taiwan

It is very clear that these fallacies run counter to the Sino-U.S. joint communique. According to reports by newspapers in Taipei, it is said that an agreement has been reached between the United States and Taiwan on the sale of 60 F5E and F5F fighter airplanes (amounting to $620 million). Of course, Beijing is closely following this move.

At the dinner party in New York, Huang Hua said: "The Chinese Government greatly treasures Sino-U.S. relations and hopes that they will develop instead of coming to a standstill. Even less should they retrogress." What he said is indeed sincere and earnest.

[Text] Beijing, October 9 (XINHUA) -- Chinese leaders have received more messages of greetings on the 33d anniversary of the founding of the People's Republic of China.

Chairman of the Standing Committee of the Chinese National People's Congress Ye Jianying received messages from El-Hadj Omar Bongo, president of Gabon, and Antonio dos Santos Ramalho Eanes, president of Portugal.

General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China Hu Yaobang received a congratulatory message from Denis Sassou-Nguesso, chairman of the Central Committee of the Congolese Party of Labor, head of state and president of the People's Republic of the Congo and president of the Council of Ministers.

The Central Committee of the Communist Party of China received a congratulatory message from the Central Committee of the Greek Communist Party of the Interior.

NONALIGNED COUNTRIES TO HOLD MARCH CONFERENCE

[Text] United Nations, October 9 (XINHUA) -- The 7th summit conference of non-aligned countries will be held in New Delhi from March 7 to 11 next year, according to a joint communique of the non-aligned countries issued here today.

This decision was made at a six-day coordinating meeting, beginning on October 4, attended by the foreign ministers and heads of delegations of the non-aligned countries to the current U.N. General Assembly session.

The communique condemns Israel for its policy of expansion and aggression and demands its immediate, total and unconditional withdrawal from Lebanon. It calls for an immediate U.N. Security Council inquiry into the Beirut massacre. It reaffirms support for the Palestinian and Arab peoples' struggle to restore their national rights and recover their land occupied by Israel since 1967.

The communique condemns South Africa for its apartheid policy and its acts of aggression against neighbouring countries. It calls for comprehensive and mandatory sanctions, including oil embargo, against South Africa.

On the Kampuchean problem, the communique urges a comprehensive political solution "which would provide for the withdrawal of all foreign forces and ensure full respect for the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of all states in the region, including Kampuchea."

The communique reiterates the call for a political solution to Afghanistan on the basis of the withdrawal of foreign troops and full respect for its independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and non-aligned status. It also expresses support for the right of Argentina to obtain the restoration of the Malvinas Islands to its sovereignty and calls for a negotiated settlement.

The originally planned two-day meeting was prolonged due to differences over the draft communique prepared by Cuba as current chairman of the Non-Aligned Movement. Sources close to the meeting revealed that Botswana had asked for an amendment to the draft to mention the Soviet Union concerning the Afghan problem and its proposal won the support of about 40 countries. But because of objection by Cuba and Ethiopia, the meeting decided to submit the issue to the 7th summit conference for consideration.

RENMIN RIBAO REPORTS ON 37TH UN GENERAL ASSEMBLY

["Newsletter from the United Nations" by Chen Yioun [7115 2011 2625]: "Voices From UN Headquarters"]

[Text] With this clear and crisp autumn comes the busy season of the UN headquarters, which is located on the bank of the East River in New York's Manhattan. Representatives from 157 countries all over the world have gathered there. They are attending the 37th UN General Assembly and discussing a series of important issues presently confronting the world.

So far, 12 state heads, 10 vice premiers and vice presidents, 121 foreign ministers and other ministers of governments have notified the UN Secretariat that they will attend the current conference to deliver speeches. The general debates began on 27 September and will be conducted for 3 weeks. In the past week, 7 heads of state and about 50 foreign ministers delivered speeches at the conference.

Huang Hua, Chinese foreign minister and chairman of the Chinese delegation, delivered a speech on 4 October. In his speech, Huang Hua introduced the great achievements scored at the 12th CPC National Congress and expounded the basic views and positions of the Chinese delegation on the current internatioanl situation. His speech drew loud applause from the audience and was warmly welcomed by the people. When he left the rostrum, representatives from more than 80 countries came to shake hands with him and warmly congratulated him. In the lobby outside the assembly hall, representatives from some countries told reporters that Foreign Minister Huang Hua's speech was very good, and it showed that China completely sides with the Third World. The questions he had spoken of were all current important issues of concern to people throughout the world. He also raised some principled views and proposals on these issues. A diplomat of the Bengali delegation said: "China is a friend of the Third World and is also a friend of Bangladesh. We agree with China's positions. We shall support each other and make joint efforts to realize these ideas."

The most noteworthy speech was made by Prince Norodom Sihanouk, chairman of the delegation of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, on 30 September. By presenting the facts and reasoning things out, especially using his personal experience, he convincingly exposed the Vietnamese authorities' perfidious criminal acts of despising international norms and conducting barbarous aggression against Kampuchea. His just, forceful and confident speech won long applause from the audience. A high-level UN official said: Working in the United Nations for many years, he has hardly seen a speech by a head of state so warmly welcomed by the audience. Except for representatives from more than 20 countries, including the Soviet Union and Vietnam, who boycotted the speech, other representatives from more than 120 countries all listened with rapt attention to Prince Sihanouk's speech. When he walked out of the assembly hall, more than 100 representatives extended warm congratulations to him and showed their respect for him. When Prince Sihanouk arrived at the United Nations, he was accorded the highest courteous reception as a head of state. The national flag of Democratic Kampuchea was hoisted where he carried out his activities. The warm and solemn reception accorded to the delegation of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea fully demonstrated the just desire of most countries in the world which uphold justice, love, peace and oppose aggression. At the same time, this showed that the Vietnamese authorities who seek regional hegemonism and their supporter the Soviet Union has become more isolated and unpopular.

Representatives from various countries who spoke at the conference generally expressed their deep anxiety about the increasingly turbulent and tense international situation caused by the intensive contention between the two superpowers -- the Soviet Union and the United States.

They demanded that these two superpowers immediately stop their frenzied arms race. French Premier Pierre Mauroy was the first French Government head since 1958 to attend a UN conference. He pointed out in his speech that, because the two superpowers were playing dirty tricks and scrambling for world hegemony, chaos and dislocation could be seen everywhere in the world. Since the founding of the United Nations, the world has seen about 120 bloody conflicts. In the last 2 years, crises arose one after another, primarily in the Third World. Many delegates demanded the Soviet Union, and the Vietnamese authorities supported by it, fulfill the UN resolutions and withdraw their invading troops respectively from Afghanistan and Kampuchea.

Delegates also strongly condemned the Israeli aggressors who were harbored by the United States for their crimes of occupying Lebanese territory and carrying out bloody massacres of the Lebanese and Palestinian peoples. They demanded a just and reasonable settlement of the Middle East issue. Delegates from many Third World countries also expressed their anxiety about the serious effects caused by the sustained recessions in developed countries. They demanded that the global talks be held as soon as possible so as to change the old unequal economic relationship between developing and developed countries and to build a new international economic order.

In the conference, delegates also appreciated and supported the proposition by the UN secretary general on upholding the UN Charter and strengthening the UN functions.

A total of 138 topics for discussion, of a vast scope never before seen, have been placed on the assembly agenda. This shows that the United Nations is confronted with an increasingly complicated and difficult international situation and various new questions which have emerged on the horizon. It seems that the United Nations will meet with many difficulties in solving these questions and it needs the painstaking and sustained efforts from all member countries, especially Third World countries.

["U.S. President Makes Statement in Violation of Sino-U.S. Joint Communique" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Washington, October 7 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan violated the Sino-U.S. joint communique in a statement yesterday by making China's peaceful reunification a prerequisite for an end to the sales of U.S. arms to Taiwan.

He was answering questions by Republican candidates at the White House. While expressing U.S. willingness "to sincerely and honestly do our best to improve the relations with the People's Republic of China on the mainland," Reagan stressed that "there has been no reversal" in his policy toward Taiwan and that Taiwan will "get everything they need for their own self-defense."

Insisting on the "Taiwan Relations Act", Reagan arbitrarily linked U.S. arms sales to how China will achieve its reunification, an entirely internal affair of China.

He said: "If the People's Republic keeps their word that... they would try to resolve their differences (with Taiwan) peacefully and arrive at a peaceful reunification... then there would be no longer any need for us to provide defense weapons and there would be a decline and an end at that time." Reagan's statement was an obvious violation of the Sino-U.S. joint communique.

Since the issuance of the communique on August 17, some U.S. Government officials have on many occasions made statements misrepresenting its spirit and letter. It is obvious that these statements are contrary to the wishes of the Chinese and American peoples for the further development of China-U.S. relations on the basis of strict implementation of the joint communique.

RENMIN RIBAO 10 Oct Article

["Short" commentary: "There Can Be No Preconditions for Implementing the Sino-U.S. Joint Communique"]

[Text] U.S. President Reagan stated when answering questions on Taiwan at a recent White House gathering that the United States would "genuinely and sincerely exert its utmost efforts" to improve relations with the PRC. However, he also stressed that the U.S. Government would continue to implement the "Taiwan Relations Act," and also announced: If the PRC keeps its pledged word on "striving for a peaceful solution" of its differences with Taiwan and "arrives at a peaceful reunification," there will be a "decline and an end" to U.S. arms sales to Taiwan. Reagan has completely violated the spirit of the joint communique issued by the Chinese and U.S. Governments on 17 August by treating a peaceful solution of the Taiwan problem by China as a precondition for halting U.S. arms sales to Taiwan, and this also conflicts with President Reagan's words about genuinely and sincerely improving relations with the PRC. The Chinese people will absolutely not agree with views like these.

The joint communique of the Chinese and U.S. Governments stipulated the principle of a phased and eventually complete solution to the issue of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan, that is, the United States must gradually reduce its arms sales to Taiwan and completely halt them after a time. There cannot and should not be any preconditions on this point. Taiwan is a province of China, and U.S. arms sales to Taiwan infringe on China's sovereignty and constitute interference in China's internal affairs and should be terminated as soon as possible.

As for the manner of solving the problem of reunifying Taiwan with the motherland -- that is China's internal affair, and no foreign country may interfere in it. The Sino-U.S. joint communique reiterated that mutual respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity and mutual noninterference in internal affairs constituted the guideline for all aspects of relations between the two countries; and this naturally includes the issue of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan. The U.S. side solemnly stated that it had no intention of violating China's sovereignty and territorial integrity, of interfering in China's internal affairs, and of pursuing a policy of "two Chinas" or "one China and one Taiwan." Thus, from the day the communique was published, the United States should have carried out its undertaking to gradually reduce its arms sales to Taiwan and eventually completely solve this problem. Now, when the communique has been issued less than 2 months, U.S. Government leaders actually state that they want China to keep its "word" on "solving by peaceful means" the Taiwan problem before the United States will reduce and finally terminate its arms sales to Taiwan; hence, people cannot but doubt the U.S. Government's sincerity in implementing the communique and improving and developing Sino-U.S. relations on that basis.

There are now, as always, those forces in the United States who are unreconciled to abandoning the policy of "two Chinas" and "one China and one Taiwan." Though living in the 1980's, they stubbornly cling to the "Dullesism" of the 1950's, continue to regard Taiwan as a U.S. "unsinkable aircraft carrier," and pay no heed whatsoever to China's sovereignty. From the very beginning they desperately opposed the agreement reached by China and the United States on the communique and, after its publication, they hampered the implementation of the agreement.

We hope that the U.S. Government will regard relations between the two countries and its own good faith as the most important things, clear away interference, abide by the agreement, and tangibly implement the relevant provisions and undertakings contained in the communique, so that Sino-U.S. relations will be able to overcome obstacles and continue to develop in accordance with the desire of the people of both countries.

[Excerpts] Beijing, Oct. 9 (AFP) -- China today for the first time accused U.S. President Ronald Reagan of violating the August Sino-American communique that included a U.S. pledge to limit military aid to Taiwan.

The Chinese Foreign Ministry reacted to Mr Reagan's statements, saying: "U.S. arms sales to Taiwan and how China is to achieve Taiwan's return to the motherland are two questions entirely different in nature. Any remarks about a linkage between the two constitute an interference in our internal affairs," the ministry said [words indistinct] specifically mentioning the U.S. chief executive.

Sister Ties Established

[Text] Chengdu, October 11 (XINHUA) -- China's Sichuan Province and the State of Washington of the United States today established official ties of friendship at a ceremony in Chengdu, capital of the province.

The protocol, in accord with the principles of the China-U.S. joint communique establishing diplomatic relations, was signed by Lu Dadong, provincial governor, and John Spellman, state governor. Sichuan, with 100 million people, is the most populous of China's provinces. It is on 560,000 square kilometers and is one of the nation's major industrial and agricultural areas.

In their speeches this afternoon, both Lu Dadong and Spellman said Sichuan Province in southwest China and Washington State in the northwest United States have many things in common. "There are wide possibilities and broad prospects for the two sides to cooperate and exchange in the economic, trade, scientific, technological, cultural and educational fields," Lu Dadong said.

Spellman said "Together with our counterparts from Sichuan Province, we have worked in partnership to remove, brick-by-brick, the wall that has separated us," and "have worked in partnership to build, plank-by-plank, a bridge of friendship."

Lu Dadong also stated: "Through consultations and negotiations the Chinese and U.S. Governments issued a joint communique Aug. 17 providing for a step-by-step solution of the question of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan, leading to a final thorough settlement. We are glad at this." "Provided that the guidelines of both the communique on diplomatic relations and that of Aug. 17 are followed," Lu Dadong believed, "we can further develop our friendship and cooperation. I hope such friendship will flow forever like the Yangtze River."

In the evening, Lu Dadong hosted a banquet to mark the occasion.

XINHUA CITES U.S. UNEMPLOYMENT FIGURES

[Text] Washington, October 8 (XINHUA) -- Unemployment in the United States in September soared to a double-digit-10.1 percent from the 9.8 percent in August, the U.S. Labor Department announced here today.

This is the highest unemployment rate in the country since 1940 when some 11.3 million Americans were out of work. Besides those out of work, there were 1.6 million "discouraged workers" who gave up searching for jobs. New claims for jobless benefits set a record in September, with 2.66 million filed, up from 2.42 million in August.

The Labour Department said that unemployment among whites in September reached a record 9.0 percent, up from 8.6 percent in August. Unemployment among blacks rose to 20.2 percent from 18.8 percent. Teenager unemployment fell slightly from 24 percent to 23.7 percent because of the reopening of schools.

U.S. Treasury Secretary Donald Regan predicted that the jobless rate might go even higher in coming months before a recovery from the economic recession. As soon as the unemployment report was released, about 2,000 people held a protest rally in Lafayette Park opposite to the White House, with placards reading "We Want Jobs," "Reaganomics Means Unemployment". Some speakers blamed the administration for its "bullheaded economic policies".

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland told the rally that "today's unemployment figures are a national disgrace and a human tragedy."

SOVIET UNION, VIETNAM ISSUE JOINT COMMUNIQUE

[Text] Moscow, October 8 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet and Vietnamese leaders said that "special emphasis was laid on the situation in Southeast Asia" during their talks, according to a joint communique released by TASS today. The joint communique was issued after the four-day visit beginning October 4 to the Soviet Union by Truong Chinh, chairman of the Vietnamese State Council.

However, the two leaders bypassed the Vietnamese military occupation of Kampuchea. Instead, they alleged that "persisting tensions in the region are caused by the policy of hegemonistic and imperialist forces."

The communique said that the Soviet Union supports Vietnam in the so-called "struggle against the conspiracy of these forces." The communique vilified the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea. It distorted the fact by calling the formation of the government "a direct interference in the internal affairs" of Kampuchea.

The communique described the presence of the representatives of the Kampuchean Coalition Government at the United Nations as "inadmissible."

On the Afghanistan issue, the communique made no mentioning of the Soviet withdrawal of troops from that country. The two parties "have reiterated their full solidarity" with the Karmal regime and "stand for a political settlement" on the basis of the statements made by the Karmal regime. The communique also pledged to deepen "all-round cooperation" between the two countries.

RENMIN RIBAO ON SOVIET LOSSES IN AFGHANISTAN

["International Jottings" by Tong Chang [6639 2490]: "Kabul's 'Special' Business"]

[Text] Under the heels of the Soviet aggressor troops, the Afghan economy has been in a deep depression and all businesses are declining. However, contrary to this universal trend, one business is thriving -- the coffin business.

According to Western reporters, because the Soviet troops have been suffering serious losses, the demand for coffins has been continuously growing. A coffin manufacturer in Kabul is making batch after batch of coffins of thin timber boards for holding the corpses of Soviet aggressors. When a Muslim in Afghanistan dies, no coffin is needed for burying him.

It is reported that on average, 16 of the invading Soviet troops in Afghanistan are killed every day. An army hospital in Kabul with 400 beds is crowded with 600 wounded Soviet soldiers. Moscow is forced to send transport planes at a scheduled date every week to carry back its wounded and dead aggressor troops. This is perhaps the reason why coffin manufacturers in Kabul have thrived despite universal depression.

As a saying goes: "One does not shed tears until one sees the coffin." It now seems that Moscow does not even shed tears when it sees the coffins. It continues to send a steady flow of aggressor troops into Afghanistan. Judging by this, it is not difficult to predict that the "special" business in Kabul -- the manufacture of coffins -- will not have to worry about overproduction.

COMMENTATOR'S ARTICLE FAVORS KOREA REUNIFICATION

[Commentator's article: "Resolutely Support the Korean People's Struggle To Achieve Their Long-Desired National Aspirations"]

[Text] Two years ago today, in his summary report delivered at the Sixth National Congress of the Korean Workers Party, in accordance with the three principles and five-point policy, President Kim Il-song put forth a new plan for the establishment of the "Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo" and 10 key administrative programs. According to the new plan and administrative programs, on the basis of recognizing and tolerating each other's ideology and social system, the northern and southern parts of this confederal republic should establish a national united government which places both the northern and southern sides on an equal footing. Korea should become a neutral state which does not take part in any political or military alliances or groups.

Under the leadership of the national united government, both sides should exercise regional autonomy, safeguard and defend people's freedoms and rights, carry out their economic cooperation and exchanges and develop in a unified way their science, technology, national culture and art as well as national education. Both sides should reduce the number of their troops to 100,000 or 150,000 and amalgamate them into national coalition troops. Both sides should be completely independent of any foreign countries and implement a neutral and nonaligned policy. No foreign countries should be allowed to establish military bases on the Korean Peninsula and the peninsula should be turned into a permanent peace and nuclear-free zone.

The new plan put forth by President Kim Il-song for the independent and peaceful reunification of the fatherland has pointed out the most practical and rational way for the Korean people's efforts to reunify their fatherland. This embodies the vital interests of the entire Korean people and fully demonstrates the national desires of the Korean people who are closely linked as flesh and blood. Therefore, the new plan has been warmly supported by the entire Korean people and extensively praised by world public opinion.

Over the past 2 years, according to the people's will and demands, the Korean Workers Party and the Government of the Democratic People's Republic have continued to exert their unswerving efforts, in order to realize the goal of independent and peaceful reunification of the country as early as possible. Last year, 23 political parties and organizations in Korea issued a statement proposing the convening of a meeting to promote national unity. Last February, the Korean Committee for the Peaceful Reunification of the Fatherland again put forward a proposal for holding "a hundred people's joint meeting" to be attended by political figures both at home and abroad to jointly discuss the important matter of peaceful reunification. This fully showed that the Korean Workers Party and the Government of the Democratic People's Republic are sincere in striving to solve the Korean problem.

However, since the Chon Tu-hwan regime assumed power, it has tried to set the clock back. This has adversely affected the peaceful reunification of Korea. It has brutally suppressed the mass movements led by patriotic personages in South Korea who demand democracy and actively promote national unity. The Chon Tu-hwan regime does its utmost to implement the policy of "two Koreas," trying to make the split and the country and nation legitimate and permanent. The Chon Tu-hwan clique's acts of showing no sincerity for independence and peaceful reunification and persisting in its reactionary splittist stand are the internal reasons why the problem of Korea always remains unsolved.

The fact that the United States rejected the resolutions on "Korean problem" adopted by the 30th UN General Assembly is the external factor blocking the settlement of the Korean problem.

The United States has increased the number of its troops stationed in South Korea; their equipment and facilities have been renewed and combat effectiveness has been strengthened. The United States has always played the plot of "two Koreas" and preached the fallacy that "big nations recognize them alternately," that the "South and North Koreas join the United Nations simultaneously," and so forth. To overcome foreign intervention and relax the tension, the Korean Workers Party and Government of the Democratic People's Republic have reiterated time and again that they are willing to hold consultations with the United States on replacing the armistice with a peace agreement.

However, the United States has never responded to the call. The U.S. Government should respond to the proposal put forth by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, respect the resolutions of the 30th UN General Assembly, stop its intervention in Korea and withdraw all its troops and arms from the country, so that the Korean people can solve their own problems without any foreign intervention.

The Chinese people always support the sacred struggles of the Korean people for independence and peaceful reunification of their fatherland and the new plan of establishing the "Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo" put forth by Comrade Kim Il-song. Not long ago, in his speech to welcome President Kim Il-song's visit to China, General Secretary Hu Yaobang stressed again: "The three principles and five-point policy for the peaceful reunification of the fatherland and the plan for establishing the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo put forth by Comrade Kim Il-song are rational and in accord with the vital interests and common desires of the entire Korean people." We firmly believe that the Korean people will eventually overcome all obstructions and accomplish their brilliant task for the independent and peaceful reunification of their fatherland.

He accused the United States of pursuing an aggressive policy, attempting to create "two Koreas" and impeding the peaceful reunification of Korea. He also denounced the Chon Tu-hwan clique of implementing the U.S. policy of colonialist enslavement.

The vice-premier reiterated the suggestion to convene a conference for promoting national reunification to be attended by representatives of all parties and factions both in the north and south of Korea and of overseas Koreans, excluding the Chon Tu-hwan clique.

SUZUKI RECEIVES WANG ZHEN, DELEGATION

[Text] Tokyo, October 8 (XINHUA) -- Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki today laid emphasis on non-governmental exchanges which would contribute to further effective cooperative ties between Japan and China together with close contacts between the governments. Suzuki made his remarks while receiving the Chinese delegation headed by former Vice Premier Wang Zhen to the Chinese Japanese non-governmental personages meeting.

Suzuki said that it is of significance that foresighted personages from the two countries meet to exchange ideas about stability in Asia and peace in the world. He wished their meeting a success.

Of the friendly relations between Japan and China, Suzuki hoped that they would make further progress in the way they have developed in the past decade. He said that remarkable progress has been made in friendship and trust between Japan and China thanks to the constant efforts contributed by their governments and people in the past decade since the normalizations of relations between the two countries. He noted that the future of the relationship is more promising as the two countries enjoy mutual understanding in the political, economical, cultural and other fields and have founded solid ties of friendship and cooperation on this base.

He expressed thanks to Prime Minister Suzuki for his positive attitude to the non-governmental meeting.

The Chinese delegation also called on Hajime Fukuda, speaker of the Japanese House of Representatives this afternoon. On the occasion both Fukuda and Wang Zhen appreciated the non-governmental exchanges' role in the strengthening of the friendly ties between the two countries.

JAPANESE CABINET ADOPTS DIPLOMATIC BLUE BOOK

OW250145 Beijing XINHUA in English 1851 GMT 25 Sep 82

[Text] Tokyo, September 24 (XINHUA) -- The Japanese 1982 diplomatic blue book, adopted at a Cabinet meeting here today, points out that the inter-national environment around Japan remains severe.

To do its bit to maintain world peace and stability, the blue book says, Japan must put up a posture to become forever a country of peace so as to win faith in Japan from different countries of the world.

In order to deal with foreign relations in various fields, the blue book says, the related domestic systems and the specific measures that may easily cause frictions with other countries should be re-examined.

This blue book, "The Current Diplomatic Situation of Our Country", was written on the basis of the world situation and Japan's diplomatic activities from January, 1981 to March, 1982. The blue book stresses that the Japan-U.S. security treaty is the pillar of security in Japan and Japan should make diplomatic efforts to strengthen its ties with Western countries.

The world economic situation beset with such difficulties as inflation, slow growth rate, unemployment and payments deficits suggests a dim prospect, with many problems remaining unsolved, the blue book says.

The high-interest policy in the U.S. has made it difficult for other countries to draw up their economic plans, and trade between Western countries has been under threat since protectionism has revived in the U.S. and West European countries, the blue book complains.

On Japan's relations with China, the blue book notes that one of the pillars of Japanese diplomacy is to maintain and develop stable relations with China, and Japan will try its best to help China's economic construction.

Referring to Japan's relations with the Soviet Union, the blue book says a stable Japanese-Soviet relationship is an indispensable condition for Japan's security, and to solve the problem of Japan's northern territories and to sign a peace treaty with the Soviet Union are the principal tasks of Japan's diplomatic efforts in relation to the Soviet Union.

The blue book says in the face of the Soviet military superiority, Japan calls for the establishment of a system of arms control and disarmament, while maintaining that efforts should be made by Western countries, including Japan, to strengthen their defence. The blue book also says the maintenance and development of stability of the political, economic and social life of the Third World countries are indispensable to peace and stability of the world.

It adds Japan should expand its links with Western countries and other concerned, in a joint effort to seek ways to solve disputes and conflicts in various parts of the world in a peaceful way and ease tension. The blue book also says Japan is ready to make contributions to the strengthening of the U.N. role in maintaining peace.

Feted by Peng Zhen

[Text] Beijing, October 11 (XINHUA) -- Peng Zhen, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, gave a banquet on behalf of Ye Jianying, chairman of the N.P.C. Standing Committee, in honor of Karl Carstens, president of the Federal Republic of Germany, and Mrs. Carstens in the Great Hall of the People here this evening.

In their speeches, Vice-Chairman Peng Zhen and President Carstens expressed satisfaction with the development of friendly relations since the establishment of diplomatic relations ten years ago. They expressed the hope that joint efforts would be made to further expand cooperation between the two countries in every field.

Peng Zhen said: "The establishment of diplomatic relations between China and the Federal Republic of Germany in October 1972 opened a new chapter in the development of their friendly relations. Since then, the contacts and cooperation between the two countries in the political, economic, scientific and technological, and cultural fields have been continually strengthened with excellent results. These can be attributed to the common efforts of both sides. We are very pleased and satisfied with these results."

He continued: "The current visit by President Carstens, the first F.R.G. president in office to come to China, has provided leaders of our two countries with an opportunity to exchange views on international issues of common interest and on the further development of relations between the two countries. This will help promote relations between the two countries and bring them to a higher level.

Peng Zhen said: "China relies mainly on its own efforts in socialist modernization, and at the same time, will continue to expand its economic, technical and cultural exchange and cooperation with foreign countries in accordance with the principle of equality and mutual benefit." He expressed confidence that there would be still broader prospects for economic and technical cooperation and scientific and cultural exchanges between China and the F.R.G.

Peng Zhen pointed out that the two countries were far apart geographically and differed in social systems, but both had the common desire to safeguard world peace. The root cause of the lack of stability and turmoil in the world today was the superpowers' scramble for world domination, he said.

Peng Zhen said that world peace could be preserved so long as the people of the whole world really united and waged a resolute struggle against hegemonism and expansionism.

He concluded by saying: "China supports the efforts made by the Federal Republic of Germany to promote a powerful and united Western Europe which is conducive to world peace and stability. Let us make joint efforts and contribute to checking aggression and expansion and safeguarding world peace."

Peng Zhen expressed admiration for the spirit of action showed by the people of the F.R.G. and for the many accomplishments they had achieved. He said that after World War Two the people of the Federal Republic of Germany displayed intelligence, ability and industriousness in modernizing industry, agriculture, and science and technology, bringing their country to the forefront of the developed countries.

President Carstens said his visit to China is an extraordinary one, because it is the first for president of the Federal Republic of Germany to the People's Republic of China and it also coincides with the 10th anniversary of establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries.

"We are soon going to establish a second permanent representative office in each other's country, i.e., a consulate-general of the Federal Republic of Germany in Shanghai, and a consulate-general of the People's Republic of China in Hamburg," he said.

He said expansion of contacts between the two countries is not only useful, but also necessary considering the world situation.

"What I feel very satisfied with," President Carstens said "is that we can see from our talks today our two governments share many identical or similar views on global issues. Moreover, our supreme goal is identical, that is, to safeguard world peace, and make it more stable under the principle of respecting the independence of every country."

"Our two governments have questions of common concern both in world politics and in the economic field. Both countries are trying to overcome the great difficulties confronting the world economy, strengthening North-South dialogue and beginning global negotiations within the framework of the United Nations. Our two governments are also determined to promote bilateral cooperation in our national economies, which can supply a great deal of each other's needs," he said.

He praised "the great and admirable modernization program the People's Republic of China is now undertaking," saying he wishes China success, because "China is one of the most important countries in the world. Her influence on world politics and economy will continue to grow."

Attending the banquet were Chen Muhua, state councillor and minister of foreign economic relations and trade; Ji Pengfei, state councillor; Rong Yiren, vice-chairman of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference and member of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress; Gao Kelin, member of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress; Gao Yamgwen, minister of coal industry; Zhang Jieqing, wife of N.P.C. Vice-Chairman Peng Zhen; and leading members of other government departments, the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries and the Beijing Municipal People's Government.

RENMIN RIBAO ON ISRAELI OPPOSITION TO BEGIN

[Short commentary: "Things Will Develop in the Opposite Direction When They Become Extreme"]

[Text] Since the Israeli Army invaded Lebanon and carried out inhuman bloody massacres in Beirut, the Begin clique has been besieged from all sides at home and has become a target of international censure. Some cabinet ministers have angrily quit in protest against the Begin authorities' fascist atrocities. Some high-ranking generals have resigned, more than 1,000 serving armymen jointly signed a petition against being sent abroad to lay down their lives, and several hundred thousand Israelis have demonstrated.... It is unprecedented in Israeli history for the ruling clique to encounter such strong and widespread opposition. This forcefully shows that the Israeli people are awakening, while the Begin clique is isolated to an unprecedented extent, and its policy of aggression and expansion has gone totally bankrupt.

Since Begin and his Likud clique took power in 1977, they have consistently and stubbornly pursued a war policy. As a result the country is up to its ears in debt, prices have soared, people's living standards have continually declined, and complaints are heard everywhere. Although their swindling methods can be used for a time, they cannot be sustained for long. The invasion of Lebanon, and especially the massacre in West Beirut, have revealed beyond doubt the reactionary features of the Begin authorities. Things will develop in the opposite direction when they become extreme. The Begin authorities' war policy has changed to an opposite direction and evoked strong opposition from the Israeli people, while leading Begin authorities into a dead-end.

Engels put it well: "When any nation is oppressing another, it cannot become a free nation." The Israeli people have painfully realized from several decades of Arab-Israeli war that the Israeli ruling clique's external aggression and expansion can only bring them endless suffering and senseless death. Neither are Israeli politicians and military men willing to incur worldwide condemnation together with Begin, Sharon and their ilk, for the massacre of Palestinians in Beirut; and so they resign, protest and so on, so as to draw a demarcation line between themselves and the Begin clique. Curbing the Begin clique's war policy has become for more and more Israelis an important topic to be pondered first. This change that is occurring in Israel is bound to have a major effect on the evolvement of the Middle East situation.

RELEASE OF SOUTH AFRICAN PRISONERS URGED

["Short" commentary: "The South African Authorities Must Immediately Release All 'Political Prisoners'"]

[Text] The UN Special Commission Against Apartheid has decided to set 11 October as "Support the South African Political Prisoners Day" and called on the international community to further develop extensive activities urging the South African authorities to immediately release Nelson Mandela, military commander in chief of the African National Congress [ANC] of South Africa as well as all "political prisoners" in South Africa. The Chinese Government and Chinese people firmly support this movement and strongly ask the South African authorities to immediately release Mandela and all their "political prisoners."

The infamous South African racist regime has for a long time pushed a barbarous policy of apartheid and racial discrimination and turned South Africa into a living hell. According to the reports of foreign news agencies, there are at present several hundred thousand blacks kept in captivity in the South African prisons, and most of them have been illegally arrested for participating in the struggle against the racist rule. Just the "political prisoners" detailed in the Robbeneiland prison, isolated from the rest of the world, constitute 1,000 of the leaders and activists of the ANC, the Pan-Africanist Congress of Azania, the Black Consciousness Movement and other nationalist organizations.

Mandela, who was sentenced to life imprisonment 20 years ago by the South African authorities for "instigations," had been kept on this island The South African authorities not only wantonly ill-treated and tormented these "political prisoners," but also sentenced many of them to death on groundless charges. Their diabolic and brutal means are enough to make one's hair stand on end.

The South African racist regime always thought that it could, by means of bloody suppression, force the African people to yield and abandon their struggle against racist rule. The result is just the opposite. In the reactionary courtroom of the South African authorities, such people as Mandela stood firm and unyielding without the slightest sign of fear. They solemnly declared: "We are innocent. Power should belong to the people, and we will devote our whole lives to carrying out a resolute struggle against racial discrimination." This great indomitable spirit inspired the masses of black people of South Africa, and the ranks of those taking part in the struggle against tyranny grows stronger daily. Their struggle not only has the support of the colored people, but is receiving more and more sympathy and support from white people with consciousness. This explains that the suppression of the reactionary authorities cannot stamp out the flame of the struggle of the suppressed people, but will only make the flame of resistance higher.

World opinion has repeatedly pointed out that the heroic struggle waged by the South African people for liberty and self-determination and the national sacrifice they made have not only been a powerful support to the Asian, African and Latin peoples in their struggle against imperialism and colonialism, but have also made an important contribution to the cause of human progress. All the crimes arbitrarily placed on the head of Mandela are unreasonable and cannot stand. The South African authorities must unconditionally release all "political prisoners" immediately.

JIEFANGJUN BAO ON UNDERSTANDING CLASS STRUGGLE

[JIEFANGJUN BAO commentator's article: "A Scientific Understanding and Handling of Questions Concerning Class Struggle"]

[Text] Beijing, 8 Oct (XINHUA) -- In his report delivered at the 12th CPC National Congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang clearly elucidated our party's basic views and guidelines on class struggle in China at the present stage. Doubtlessly this is of great significance in guiding us to further eliminate the "leftist" ideological influence and other erroneous views on this issue and to further unify, on a scientific basis, the ideas of all the comrades in the whole party, the entire army and people of all nationalities throughout the country on facts concerning class struggle. Historical experience and facts have proven that to correctly understand and handle the question of class struggle in China's socialist society constitutes an important condition in maintaining a stable state and social life, in developing democratic politics of socialism, in consolidating the people's democratic dictatorship and in strengthening our army politically. This also constitutes an important political guarantee for us in developing the modernization program and adhering to the socialist road.

"In a Socialist Society, We Cannot Carry Out the Guideline of 'Taking Class Struggle as the Key Link'"

After China entered the socialist society, our party committed serious "leftist" mistakes in understanding and handling class struggle, and learned extremely profound lessons. An important reason for committing such mistakes is that we had not truly distinguished the class struggle in a socialist society from that in the period of new democratic revolution and in the period of socialist transformation.

The question of class struggle is important in the theory and practice of Marxism and scientific socialism. As a social and historical phenomenon, class struggle did not exist at the beginning of human society. It began after the formation of classes. As Marx and Engels said, the existence of classes and class struggle "is only connected with a certain historical stage in the development of production" ("Selected Works of Marx and Engels," vol IV p 332). Like all other social phenomena which are born, developed and extinguished in society, class struggle will also be finally extinguished in history. To achieve their own emancipation, the proletariat and the revolutionary people must overthrow political rule by the bourgeoisie and other exploiting classes through acute struggle; establish their own state power; eliminate the system of exploitation; and install the socialist system under which there is no exploitation and suppression of man by man. There is no other way out. However, the final goal of the proletariat in waging class struggle is to eliminate class struggle and the differences among all classes in history and establish a communist society. It is necessary to achieve this goal by relying on the highly developed social productive forces and the tremendous progress in society. This is a long process in history. During this process in history, the contents and forms and the role in social life of the class struggle waged by the proletariat will also undergo continuous changes following the changes of the historical stages and the revolutionary tasks and the changes in historical conditions. Therefore, in examining and handling the question of class struggle, we must adopt a historical and dialectical analytical attitude. This is the basic requirement of the Marxist theory on class struggle.

During the period of new democratic revolution the revolutionary task of the proletariat and people in our country was to overthrow the reactionary rule by imperialism, feudalism and bureaucratic capitalism and to seize state power in the whole nation.

Therefore, the class struggle waged by the proletariat and the people against the three major enemies became China's main contradiction in social life at that time. This was also the central task of our entire party.

To solve this principal contradiction and succeed in this class struggle, our party, in accordance with the situation and characteristics in class contradictions and contradictions between nationalities and in the economic and political spheres at that time, led the people to adopt armed struggle as the highest form of class struggle (in addition to the forms of economic, political and cultural struggle) and the correct revolutionary road of encircling the cities from the rural areas. After 28 years of arduous struggle, our party finally toppled the three big mountains and established the People's Republic of China and the people's democratic dictatorship.

During the period of socialist transformation, the revolutionary task facing the proletariat in our country was to abolish the capitalist system of exploitation and the private ownership of all means of production and set up the socialist economic system of public ownership. Therefore, the class struggle between the proletariat and the bourgeoisie became the principal contradiction in social life. Because the proletariat became the leading force of political power throughout the country, we launched a class struggle, developed the state's economic construction and expanded and strengthened the state-owned economy at the same time. The form of class struggle in this period also changed. While carrying out socialist transformation in agriculture and the handicraft industry step by step, our party, with the dual character of the Chinese national bourgeoisie in mind, adopted the policy of peaceful "redemption" and a complete set of reasonable steps of transformation of the primary into the advanced and successfully fulfilled the historic task of transforming the capitalist economy. In addition, our party adopted a whole set of correct measures to gradually and effectively transform the absolute majority of the national bourgeoisie who were formerly exploiters into laborers who earned their own living, thereby peacefully fulfilling the historical task of eliminating the national bourgeoisie as an exploiting class. Although this transformation was carried out in the form of peaceful struggle, it was still a large-scale acute class struggle in society. Our success in socialist transformation proved that our party's understanding and handling of questions concerning class struggle in this period were correct.

After the socialist transformation was basically completed, social classes and the class struggle situation in our country underwent a fundamental change because of the overall adoption of the socialist system and the basic elimination of the bourgeoisie and other exploiting class as classes. The Eighth CPC Congress correctly pointed out: The socialist system has been basically set up in our country. The principal contradiction in China is no longer the contradiction between the proletariat and the bourgeoisie; instead it is the contradiction between the situation in which the people crave the rapid development of economy and culture and the situation in which the present economic and cultural development fails to satisfy the people's needs. The main task of the people throughout the country is to concentrate their energy on developing social productive forces and gradually satisfy the people's increasing material and cultural needs. Large-scale hurricane-type class struggle has ended. Although class struggle still exists and it is still necessary to strengthen people's democratic dictatorship, our fundamental task is to protect and develop productive forces in the face of new production relations.

At that time, Comrade Mao Zedong specifically told all comrades of the party that it was necessary to correctly understand and handle the two different stypes of social constructions and shift the party's work focus onto economic construction. However, for a variety of complicated social and political reasons, our party soon got away from the policy laid down by the Eighth CPC Congress in terms of guiding ideology. Our party not only failed further to study class struggle seriously and systematically in China's society and the actual situation in China's other social contradictions in order to make a scientific and concrete analysis of them, but also subjectively proposed and implemented with increased emphasis the principle of "taking class struggle as the key link."

The basic meaning of the so-called "taking class struggle as the key link" is to deny that the principal contradiction to be solved in social life after socialist transformation is completed in China has changed. It still regards the contradiction between the proletariat and the bourgeoisie as the principal contradiction in society and believes that the class struggle between the proletariat and the bourgeoisie always exists in the entire historical period of socialism. Accordingly, it calls for all economic and social work to center around class struggle as the key link and the focus and serve it.

Under the guidance of such theory, our party followed in practice the old viewpoint during the period of acute class struggle in order to observe and interpret all social phenomena and contradictions, and continuously launched political movements within the party and in society. As a result, many social contradictions without the class struggle nature were handled as class struggle contradictions and many contradictions among the people were handled as contradictions between ourselves and the enemy, thus seriously magnifying the class struggle. Finally, the situation developed to the point of hunting for the so-called bourgeoisie within the party and ended with the "Cultural Revolution," the tragic so-called "great revolution" of one class overthrowing another. This landed the political life of the party and the state and all social life into long-term chaos and caused tremendous losses and calamities to the socialist cause and the people's interests. History has fully proved that the theory and practice of "taking class struggle as the key link" under the condition of socialism ran completely counter to the actual situation in class struggle in China's society, violated the objective law of the development of socialist society and went against the strong desire of people of all nationalities in China to build a modern socialist state.

In his report to the 12th CPC Congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang specifically pointed out: "In a socialist society where the system of exploitation and the exploiting classes have been eliminated, it is erroneous to propose and implement the principle of 'taking class struggle as the key link.' We must very carefully draw a distinction between the two types of contradictions and handle them prudently in order to prevent the recurrence of mistakes that would lead to the broadening of the scope of class struggle."

Historical lessons have educated our party and people. After the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the party Central Committee resolutely ceased implementing the guiding principle of "taking class struggle as the key link" and decisively shifted the work focus of the party and the state onto socialist modernization. In addition, to correct the "left" errors of "taking class struggle as the key link," it adopted a whole set of important measures to engage in great amounts of arduous work, thus appropriately solving many contradictions within the party and among the people, and greatly promoting social and political stability and unity.

The "Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of Our Party Since the Founding of the People's Republic of China," adopted by the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, pointed out: "Class struggle no longer constitutes the principal contradiction after the exploiters have been eliminated as classes. However, owing to certain domestic factors and influences from abroad, class struggle will continue to exist within certain limits for a long time to come and may even grow acute under certain conditions. It is necessary to oppose both the view that the scope of class struggle must be enlarged and the view that it has died out." This is the basic conclusion on questions of class struggle in China's socialist society drawn up by our party in a scientific manner after it summed up its historical experience and lessons. This basic conclusion is wholeheartedly supported by cadres within and without the party and by the masses. Of course, it should also be noticed that some comrades within the party and in society have been unable as yet to get completely out of the straitjacket of "taking class struggle as the key link." Wittingly or unwittingly, they still view social phenomena and social contradictions in a "left" light.

They do not understand why the principle of "taking class struggle as the key link" must be corrected and even think that it is a "right" action or the "liquidation of class struggle" to correct it. This shows that to eliminate continuously the "left" influence on questions of class struggle is still a task which calls for sustained efforts and which must never be ignored.

The contradiction in the nature of class struggle constitutes only a part of the various contradictions in China's socialist society. Most of the economic, political, ideological cultural and other social contradictions do not belong to the category of class struggle. These social contradictions without the nature of class struggle again may be generally divided into two groups. The first group includes the contradictions manifested among those people who have the same fundamental interests but different specific interests, such as contradictions in specific interests between a person on the one hand and the state and society on the other; between an enterprise and the state; between enterprises themselves; between advanced areas and backward areas; between people of different nationalities; among workers, peasants and intellectuals; between cadres and the masses; between the leader and the led; between the army and the people; between the well-off and the poor; between the buyer and the seller; between the server and the served and between the producer and the consumer. These contradictions are legion in daily social life and can be seen everywhere.

The other group manifests itself as contradictions between the advanced and the backward and between correct and incorrect thought and understanding, while the general objectives are the same. The emergence and existence of the two groups of contradictions mentioned above are related to the varied forms of socialist ownership in our country and the principle of to each according to his work; to the division of labor left over from history, primarily the division between industrial labor and agricultural labor and between physical labor and mental labor; to the insufficient development of the social productive forces and the uneven economic and cultural development in different areas in our country; to the influence of old ideas, traditions and habits; to the imperfection of our socialist system and the shortcomings and mistakes in the work of the leadership; and to the differences in people's cultural and educational levels and cognitive conditions and abilities. These social contradictions, which do not fall under the category of class struggle, must be resolved correctly by methods other than class struggle and in many and varied ways as appropriate under the different circumstances in each case.

In short, in the entire historical process of building socialism, we must always pay close attention to studying the development and changes of various contradictions in our society, pay close attention to distinguishing strictly between contradictions which are of the class struggle nature and those which are not, and deal with various kinds of complicated social phenomena and social contradictions scientifically and not subjectively. Only in this way can we make sure not to take the same disastrous road of "taking class struggle as the key link" and only in this way can we accurately and effectively strike at a handful of enemies, unite all the forces that can be united, constantly develop the political situation of stability and unity and constantly push socialist modernization forward.

The Content and Characteristics of Class Struggle in the Present Stage in Our Country

In his report to the 12th party congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out: "Hostile elements of different shades are still attempting to undermine or overthrow our socialist system in the economic, political, ideological, cultural and other social spheres. The class struggle at the present stage chiefly takes the form of struggle by the people against these hostile elements." This is to say that the struggle by the people against hostile elements of various kinds constitutes the main content of the class struggle which still exists within certain limits in the present stage in our country.

On the Chinese mainland, with the elimination of the exploiting system and the exploiting classes, class struggle between antagonistic classes has been eliminated. This undoubtedly is a major step of decisive importance toward accomplishing the historical task of eliminating the social phenomenon of class struggle from social life in our country. However, this certainly does not mean that the historical task has been accomplished, as hostile elements of various kinds related to the exploiting system and exploiting classes are far from being eliminated, and the struggle by the people against them remains acute. These hostile elements are mainly:

1. Counterrevolutionaries and enemy agents. These include remaining old counterrevolutionaries and enemy agents from the old system, newly born counterrevolutionaries, and enemy agents dispatched from outside.

2. Remnants of the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques.

3. Criminals who seriously undermine social order: These constitute a part of the criminals in society, but their activities are different from ordinary criminal and antisocial activities, and are aimed at sabotaging our social and political stability and unity and our socialist production and social order (because of this difference, we cannot treat all criminal offenders as counterrevolutionaries).

4. New exploiters engaged in graft, embezzlement, speculation, swindling, smuggling and selling smuggled goods. These use all kinds of illegal means to take the fruits of social labor gratuitously and, in fact, are engaged in a special form of exploiting activities.

5. A very small number of old exploiters who are continuing their disruptive activities, such as former landlords and rich peasants in rural areas who have not reformed, and unreformed reactionary capitalists in urban areas.

In short, these hostile elements are using all conditions and opportunities favorable to them at home and abroad to carry out various evil activities hostile to, and undermining the socialist system in the economic, political, cultural and other social spheres. Their interests are fundamentally opposed to the interests of the masses of the people and socialism. Therefore, the struggle waged by the workers, peasants and intellectuals against them is still a kind of class struggle. We must not lower our guard and must maintain a high vigilance and wage a resolute struggle against the sabotage activities of these hostile elements. In view of past experience and lessons, this kind of struggle should be conducted according to the principles of the socialist legal system and should follow the legal procedures within the limits of the state law to hit hard at all kinds of hostile elements by correctly and effectively using the legal weapon, instead of launching political movements or mass campaigns. Of course this is not to say that dealing blows at the sabotage activities of hostile elements concerns only the judicial, procuratorial and public security departments. By not launching political movements or mass campaigns we mean not to launch widespread mass struggles, and we are not saying that in waging struggles there is no need to rely on the masses, follow the mass line or conduct widespread mass education. It is the unshirkable political and social obligation of every citizen who loves socialism to step forward and courageously expose and struggle against evildoers and evil deeds.

Is there class struggle among the people themselves? On the Chinese mainland, after the elimination of the national bourgeoisie as an exploiting class, the class struggle between the exploited and the exploiters, which existed formerly among the people themselves, between the working people and the national bourgeoisie, has ceased to exist. However, there still are some social contradictions which have the nature of class struggle. Some of the struggles constantly waged by the people against remnant feudal ideas and decadent capitalist ideas are of a class struggle nature to varying degrees. For example, in the past few years, due to corrosion and influence by capitalist ideas, some of our comrades have developed a tendency toward bourgeois liberalization.

They envy and pursue bourgeois liberties, consciously or unconsciously publicize them in their talks and writings and attempt to "introduce" into our social life the bourgeois parliamentary system, two-party system and election campaigns, bourgeois freedom of speech, publication, assembly and association, bourgeois ultra-individualism and anarchism, bourgeois money worship and the profit-before-everything mentality, the decadent bourgeois way of life, bourgeois moral and esthetic standards, and so on and so forth. These kinds of ideological tendencies and conduct are contradictory to the socialist system, the party's leadership over the socialist cause and the interests of the whole people. and hese kinds of contradictions fall under the category of contradictions among the people themselves. The method to resolve them is different from the method of struggle against hostile elements. Mainly it is to use the methods of criticism and of waging active ideological struggles to overcome these erroneous ideas and behaviors and correctly and effectively resolve the contradictions. The struggle to oppose and overcome the ideological influence of the exploiting classes is very complicated. It is imperative to pay attention to distinguishing between different circumstances and natures of contradictions, and not to put them all in the category of class struggle without analysis. There are some erroneous ideas and behaviors among the people, which are related to the ideological influence of the exploiting classes, such as certain superstitious ideas, the clan concept, patriarchal behavior, bureaucracy, male chauvinism of looking down on women and so forth. All these are ideological burdens left over from the old society which hinder our march toward a high level of civilization and should be overcome through a long period of patient education and help.

Since the main content of the class struggle in the present stage in our country is the struggle by the people against various kinds of hostile elements, seriously studying and grasping the characteristics of the activities of these hostile elements is of extremely great significance to the correct handling of this kind of class struggle. What, then, are the main characteristics of their activities?

First, compared with the class struggle in the past, the disruptive activities of these hostile elements are already a remnant form of class struggle. On the Chinese mainland, because the exploiting system and exploiting classes have been eliminated, and because the socialist system has been established, the hostile elements have lost the economic, political and social basis on which past exploiting classes depended for their existence. It is impossible for them to form a whole class, and they can only exist as the economic and political remnants of past exploiting classes. In the overall trend of development their number and strength are also becoming weaker and weaker. Therefore, while we can not slacken our vigilance and struggle against their disruptive activities under any circumstances, neither can we subjectively and arbitrarily exaggerate them. We should firmly believe that relying on the development of the social productive forces in our country, relying on the strength of the socialist system itself, and through unremitting, correct and effective struggles, we can surely eliminate thoroughly this kind of class struggle in the end.

Second, the social sphere in which these hostile elements carry out their activities is quite extensive. Some comrades misunderstand the fact that class struggle will continue to exist in China to a certain extent. They think that "to a certain extent" means limitation to a "certain sphere" such as the economic or political sphere. This kind of understanding is incorrect. When we say that class struggle will continue to exist to a certain extent, we mean that class struggle no longer plays a dominant role in China's entire social life, that it is no longer the main contradiction in society. We do not mean that class struggle is limited only to a certain social sphere. Many objective facts indicate that from the economic sphere to the political sphere and from the ideological and cultural sphere to other social spheres, hostile elements carry out sabotage activities of all forms. (Although their activities in one social sphere are sometimes more conspicuous than those in another social sphere.) [Parens as received] Therefore, we must heighten our vigilance and strengthen our struggle against these hostile elements in every social sphere.

Third, the activites and emergence of these hostile elements are quite complicated. Different from the exploiting classes that openly existed in the class society in the past, their existence and activities are often covert. They often disguise themselves, putting up a false front. Therefore, it is even more difficult and complicated for the people to expose them. At the same time, their emergence and origins in society are also quite complicated. Some of them come from families of workers, peasants, intellectuals and cadres. Leading a decadent life, they betray the people and the socialist cause. Therefore, it is necessary for us to raise our ability to identify them and to conduct analysis with a Marxist approach. In the process of struggling against these hostile elements, we must be good at seeing through appearances to get at the essence and at grasping the facts of their crimes instead of paying attention only to their appearances and social origins. Only by doing so can we accurately and effectively expose and strike at the enemies.

Fourth, these hostile elements have regularly made use of the shortcomings in our administrative system and the gaps caused by weak links as the basic channels and places for their activities and growth. This is a prominent feature reflecting the phenomenon of class struggle under socialist conditions, particularly during the elementary stage of development of socialism. Therefore, to strive to reform and improve the various administrative systems in China's economic, political, cultural and social spheres and overcome the existing shortcomings and weak links constitutes an important guarantee for the development of our socialist modernization program as well as an important condition in preventing the various types of hostile elements from undermining us.

Fifth, the sabotage activities of these hostile elements cannot be stopped within a short time. They will continue to exist in our country's society for a protracted period. At the same time, under certain conditions, they may grow. This is not only because the pernicious influences left behind by the exploitative systems and classes cannot be eradicated at one stroke, but also because we have not yet achieved our goal of reunifying our motherland and still live in a complicated international environment in which the capitalist forces and other forces hostile to China's socialist cause are seeking to corrupt us and undermine our social life. Our economy and culture are still backward and our young socialist system is still immature and imperfect in many ways, so that it is not yet possible to prevent in all cases the degeneration of some members in our society and our party or to block the emergence of a few exploiting and hostile elements. Therefore we must prepare ourselves mentally for a long-term struggle and see to it that the state of the people's democratic dictatorship exercises its function as a dictatorship.

The Marxist method of class analysis is the only scientific method for studying class relations and the various phenomena in class struggle. So long as the class struggle has not yet disappeared in China's social life, we must persistently observe, analyze and tackle all social contradictions and phenomena that are of class struggle nature with the class view and class analysis of Marxism. We must not ignore men's social and class nature and not use the so-called abstract "human" viewpoint to treat social facts. Otherwise, we will lose our vigilance in class struggle and commit mistakes of a historical nature.

At present, the struggle to strike at serious criminal activities in the economic sphere is being intensified throughout the country. This serious struggle waged by the broad masses against smugglers, embezzlers, speculators and new exploiters who steal state and collective property is an important manifestation of class struggle in the economic sphere under the new historical conditions of opening up to the outside world and domestically invigorating the economy. The criminal activities of these new exploiters have not only undermined our economic construction, but also upset social stability, debased the standards of social conduct, and organically corrupted the party, state and society as well as the people's minds and life.

If we do not strike at their criminal activities head-on and permit them to run their course, there is the danger that our economy will deviate from the socialist path and that we will not be able to ensure the correct implementation of the policy of opening to the outside world and taking flexible measures to invigorate our economy domestically as well as other existing policies and to ensure the smooth development of our socialist modernization program. Therefore, we must carry through to the end our struggle to strike at the serious criminal activities in the economic and other spheres.

The report of the 12th CPC National Congress pointed out: "In the new period of the development of our socialist cause, we must attend, both in ideology in action, to two aspects. On the one hand, we must persist in the policy of opening to the outside world as well as in our policies for domestically invigorating the economy and, on the other, we must resolutely strike at the grave criminal activities in the economic, political and cultural spheres that endanger socialism. It would be wrong to attend only to the latter aspect and be skeptical about the former, and it would be dangerous to stress the former aspect to the neglect of the latter."This is an extremely important guideline laid down by the party Central Committee after having earnestly summed up our basic experience in developing our modernization program since the 3rd Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. All our comrades must resolutely implement this guideline.

History always advances on the basis of its own dialectics. By scientifically understanding and handling the question of class struggle that still exists to a certain extent in China at the present stage, we can pave the way for the development of socialist material and spiritual civilization. Meanwhile, the highly developed socialist material and spiritual civilization will prepare conditions for the final eradication of the social phenomenon of class struggle in China. Our socialist system will definitely be able to advance continuously towards maturation and perfection in the course of this dialectical development.

AFP REPORTS 11 OCT FAILED HIJACK ATTEMPT

[Text] Beijing, Oct. 11 (AFP) -- A young Chinese, who tried to commandeer a bus filled with American tourists, demanded that he be taken to Xian airport to catch a plane to Taiwan, reliable sources said here today.

The sources said the man was quickly arrested when an interpreter alerted the police.

Soon after boarding the bus, he gave a note, written in Chinese, to an American tourist, requesting to be taken to the ancient imperial capital of Xian, one of China's main tourist centers, and thence for a plane to Taiwan.

Five young men were executed recently in Shanghai following a failed hijack attempt on a domestic airliner.

The five boarded the plane at Xian and also demanded to be taken to Taiwan, the island ruled by the ousted Kuomintang Nationalists.

REPORTS ON ECONOMIC SITUATION RELEASED

Industrial Output Value

OW092227 Beijing XINHUA in English 1248 GMT 9 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, October 9 (XINHUA) -- China's total industrial output value rose by 8.6 percent in the first three quarters of this year compared with the same period of last year, fulfilling the 1982 annual target of 76.8 percent, according to the State Statistical Bureau.

The total industrial output from January 1 to September 30 amounted to 409,200 million yuan in value.

State revenue exceeded expenditure in the first eight months of 1982. Currency recovery reached 3,638 million yuan during the period, 1,030 million yuan more than in the corresponding period of 1981. The market is brisk and prices remain stable. "The economic situation on the whole is better than expected," according to an announcement by the bureau.

The growth of heavy industry outpaced that of light industry in the nine-month period, the bureau says. The increase for heavy industrial output value was 9.8 percent and for light industrial output value, 7.5 percent.

The bureau attributed this to the policy of gearing heavy industry to serving the needs of light industry, the technical transformation of industrial enterprises and export. The expansion of capital construction also helped to boost heavy industry.

The rate of increase for rolled steel, power generating equipment and mining machinery exceeded ten percent in the first nine months of 1982. That for cement and plate glass urgently needed for state capital construction and housing projects was 14 and 21 percent, respectively.

The total amount of energy produced in the ninth-month period was equivalent to 485 million tons of standard coal, 6.2 percent over the same 1981 period.

China's light industry has made further advances after increasing at an average annual rate of 14 percent between 1979 and 1981. Output of such products as bicycles, sewing machines, cotton, woolen and silk textiles and beer continued to register big increases. Yet the increase in the production of wrist watches and black-and-white T.V. sets slowed down and the production of chemical fiber fabrics and radio sets was trimmed according to state plans.

Agricultural Output

[Text] Beijing, 11 Oct (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- According to analyzed data, overall development has been achieved in China's rural economy in recent years. The development of large-scale agriculture covering farms, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production and fishery has taken initial shape in China.

Statistics show that the total agricultural output value has increased from 145.8 billion yuan in 1978 to 171.9 billion yuan in 1981. Total agricultural output value in 1981 increased by 5.7 percent over 1980, of which output value of farm production accounted for 110.3 billion yuan and increased by 5.3 percent; forestry output value, 5.2 billion yuan, an increase of 4.4 percent; animal husbandry, 24.5 billion yuan, increasing by 6.1 percent; sideline production, 29.7 billion yuan, an increase of 6.9 percent; and the output value of fishery amounted to 2.18 billion yuan with an increase of 3.7 percent. The proportional output value of forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production and fishery as a part of agriculture as a whole rose from 32.2 percent in 1978 to 35.9 percent in 1981.

Some agroeconomic experts pointed out that the present new structure of China's agricultural economy can be termed a "bird-shaped structure," that is to say, farm production constitutes the body of the bird, while the undertakings of forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production and fishery form one of its wings and the industries run by communes and brigades makes up the other. Having analyzed the present policies of agricultural economy and momentum in rural economic development, specialists anticipate that large-scale agriculture will be smoothly developed and become perfect in China. Like a giant flying roc, it will soar on the wings of a cyclone, thus making new contributions to economic development in China.

Import, Export Value

[Report: "China Increases Import and Export Value in First Half of This Year"]

[Text] Beijing, 11 Oct (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- The ninth issue of INTERNATIONAL TRADE, which is edited by the International Trade Research Institute of the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade, reports that in the first half of this year, China's total import-export value was more than 36.7 billion yuan. This is an increase of 2.7 percent over the corresponding period last year and comprises an export value of more than 19.2 billion yuan and an import value of more than 17.4 billion yuan.

This figure was given by the Customs Administration. It includes the import and export values of various State Council departments, provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions, as well as of processing and assembly trades.

CHINA DAILY ON IMPORT RESTRICTIONS, 'OPEN DOOR'

["Based on Article by Shu Yao": "Imports Strictly Controlled To Protect National Industry"]

[Text] After assessing the effect on Chinese industry of the flood of foreign goods of all sorts that flowed through the "open door" of China's new economic policy, the government has decided on a variety of stringent administrative and economic measures to protect and support indigenous manufactures.

Government directives now explicitly stipulate that Chinese industrial importers should bring in only the most advanced appropriate and essential foreign machinery and technology. Strict controls have been placed on the importation of consumer durables. Meanwhile, Chinese factories are obligated to buy domestically-made industrial equipment whenever possible.

The adoption of measures to protect national industry does not mean any change in China's open-door policy. There are broad prospects for further cooperation between China and other countries in this respect.

Open Policy

Since 1978, China has introduced about 200 machines and other forms of technology from abroad, mostly for the exploitation and conservation of energy, the development of light industry, machine-building, electronics and ship-building. They have yielded good results in upgrading the sophistication of Chinese factories, increasing the variety and quality of products, expanding sales and accelerating the pace of construction.

In addition, during the same period, China has approved 40 joint venture enterprises, of which 26 have gone into operation. It has signed more than 500 contracts with foreign firms for compensation trade and leasing. Most of these economic activities are going on smoothly.

In the early days of the open-door policy, China unnecessarily imported sets of equipment and machines and parts that could have been made at home. Imported cars, TV sets, cassette recorders, wrist watches and other durable consumer goods reduced the potential sales of China's own electronics and other developing industries.

Thus the question of how to protect our national industry sharply confronts us.

Since the founding of the People's Republic, China has established an independent and comprehensive industrial system that produces almost everything from automobiles and planes to atom bombs, guided missiles and earth satellites, as well as all sorts of household goods. In 1981, China turned out 176,000 cars and other motor vehicles, 28.72 million wrist watches, 5,394,000 television sets, 1.52 million tape recorders, 623,000 cameras, 1,281,000 washing machines, and 55,600 refrigerators for home use.

New Decrees

In January 1981, the Chinese Government decreed that, in principle the following machines and equipment should not be imported from abroad: equipment that can be produced domestically; equipment that China can manufacture and that requires only foreign technology; equipment that can be made or assembled in China through importing a few key components or materials; and equipment that can be manufactured cooperatively with foreign firms through the introduction of expertise or technical co-operation.

Previously, when the import of a project, including both advisory personnel and capital goods, was approved by the state, the simultaneous purchase of a full set of equipment for it was sanctioned automatically. Now, the import of a project's technology is separated from that of its equipment. Even if the former is approved, a plan for the latter should be submitted to the state for independent approval, to ensure that only equipment that could not be made domestically will be brought in.

More decrees were released to impose restrictions on the import of items, such as motor vehicles, motor bicycles, television sets, from abroad.

The import of pornographic sound and video products has also been banned. The aim was to prevent corruption of the young, as well as to protect China's burgeoning electronics industry.

However, past policies based solely on administrative interference are no longer considered sufficient to protect domestic production. Economic measures, such as bank loans and taxation, are also being taken.

Taxation

China this year readjusted its customs import duties on certain commodities. The duty was raised on ordinary machinery, machine tools and other equipment that can be made in China. It was reduced on imports of some sophisticated machinery and equipment, parts and accessories for light and textile industries, and raw materials for the energy industry, as well as on rubber, timber and wood products, leather, pulp and paper -- items not yet produced in China or badly needed by it.

Customs duties on TV sets, radio-recorders, electronic computers and other consumer goods imported by individuals for private use have been raised substantially.

Bank loans on favourable terms have been issued to help national industry. Chinese shipyards, for instance, have received 250 million yuan in loans to build 234 vessels with a total tonnage of 2.5 million tons before the end of 1985, to expand China's mercantile fleet and reduce the purchase of vessels from abroad.

So the import of technology is intended to enhance the country's capacity for self-reliant action. China cannot import "modernization" in itself, but can achieve it only by developing its own national economy. The principle of self-reliance and the open policy can both be implemented without coming into conflict, and both remain basic to China's modernization.

EMPHASIS PLACED ON IMPORTING ADVANCED TECHNOLOGY

[Text] Beijing, October 11 (XINHUA) -- China is now putting greater emphasis on the importance of advanced technologies instead of seeking to equip all factories with complete sets of foreign machinery. This is one of the two significant changes that have taken place in China's import business since 1979, according to the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade. The other change is a larger proportion of the imported technologies and key equipment is now used for updating and transforming existing industrial enterprises. This is because while building new projects, China is revamping large numbers of its existing factories and mines to improve their economic performances.

China has imported in the past three years 158 technical items for the machine building, electronics, coal mining, power, chemical, textile, light and other industries.

They included technologies for the manufacture of 300,000-kilowatt and 600,000-kilowatt power generating units and 500,000-volt power transmission and transforming equipment, for the manufacture of continuous steel casting machines, combine harvesters, low-speed marine diesel engines, and testing technologies for coal cutting machines and coal scraper conveyors. These technologies, up to advanced world levels, have been introduced to meet the needs of China's industry.

Single technical items imported under state plans accounted 1.2 percent of the total imports of technologies and equipment in 1979 and the proportion rose to 28.6 percent in 1981.

The technologies and key equipment imported for the transformation of existing enterprises accounted for 36.7 percent of the total imports of technologies and equipment in 1981 as against a meagre 0.7 percent in 1979.

It was necessary for China to import complete sets of equipment in the early post-liberation period because its industrial foundation was still very weak, according to the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade. But the large-scale importation of complete sets of equipment in 1978 exceeded the country's capacity. Some of the import transactions were made without bringing into full use China's own machine building industry.

Decisions have therefore been made to import technologies that are suited to China's actual conditions, through buying technical licenses, co-production, consultancy and technical services provided by foreign firms or through other means. Such imports cost less, yield quick returns and achieve better economic results.

These technologies have helped raise the technical level of China's manufacturing industries and improve the quality and variety of products, according to the ministry.

CAPITAL CONSTRUCTION MANAGEMENT REPORTED IMPROVED

[Text] Shanghai, 8 Oct (XINHUA) -- China is making important reforms in its capital construction management and gradually implementing a system of economic responsibility for investment in an effort to create a new situation characterized by short construction time, good quality, smaller investment and good economic results.

Currently, the system of responsibility for investment implemented by China's capital construction department is primarily in the following three forms: one is the financial estimate responsibility system -- that is, to guarantee the completion of a project with funds estimated according to the initial design of the project. The second is the budget responsibility system -- that is, to guarantee the completion of a project with funds budgeted according to construction engineering blueprints and a certain coefficient. The third is to guarantee the completion of a project for civilian use with funds calculated according to per-square-meter building cost.

Several years ago, the first stage in construction of the Baoshan iron and steel complex in Shanghai was undertaken with uncontrolled funds. Since January 1981 this approach has been replaced by the financial estimate responsibility system. Our domestic investment for the Baoshan iron and steel complex amounts to 4,050 million yuan. The Ministry of Metallurgical Industry has asked the Baoshan complex to guarantee the completion of the project with 3,860 million yuan in order to save 190 million. The Baoshan iron and steel complex construction command, in cooperation with relevant design and engineering units and the construction bank, has worked out an investment financial estimate which conforms to reality and is binding on all parties. It has also charged the personnel concerned, including those at grassroots level, with the task, measures and duties to save funds.

Since 1981 the Ministry of Commerce has begun to implement, on a trial basis, the budget responsibility system to build 33 cold storage units, each with refrigerating capacity exceeding 5,000 tons. The Ministry of Commerce first signed agreements with the departments (or bureaus) of commerce of various provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions.

Then the departments (or bureaus) of commerce signed contracts with construction engineering and lower level units. To date, 13 cold storage units have been completed, with final engineering accounts smaller than budget by 5 percent, thus saving a total of 3.77 million yuan. The remaining 20 projects are close to completion. Their construction progress shows that most of them will leave some balance of construction funds.

The Tangshan municipal construction command has achieved delightful results in implementing the per-square-meter building cost responsibility system in the construction engineering company. From the second half of 1979 to the first half of 1982, Tangshan Municipality undertook the construction of housing projects with total floor space of 7.35 million square meters. Of those projects, a large portion, with total floor space of 5.9 million square meters, has been completed and 91,800 families have moved into the new housing. The per-square-meter building cost after the implementation of the responsibility system is 7 to 18 yuan lower than before the implementation of the responsibility system. In the past, it took 2 years to complete a housing project with a total floor space of 100,000 square meters. Now it takes only a little over a year.

There are other forms of responsibility system besides the above-mentioned three forms. To meet their own characteristics and demands, some departments and localities also implement the system of responsibility for guaranteeing construction time and engineering quality, in addition to the system of responsibility for investment. For instance, the Ministry of Coal Industry since 1981 has implemented a system of "three guarantees versus three guarantees" in building 37 medium-sized and small mines and shafts, which have reliable coal deposits and transport facilities. The system calls for the contractor to guarantee the completion of the project with an agreed amount of funds, guarantee construction time and engineering quality and that the project will attain its designed production capacity within a prescribed time. At the same time, it calls for the consigner to guarantee timely payment of funds, timely supply of materials and equipment and supply of labor force. The system of "three guarantees versus three guarantees" combines the contractor's "responsibility, rights and interests" with the consigner's "responsibility, rights and interests." Therefore, all staff members and workers are making careful calculations in financial management.

The result of investment has greatly improved. It is anticipated that the investment for mining a ton of coal at these 37 medium-sized and small mines and shafts will be lowered to 104 yuan from the past average of 113 yuan. The construction time will be shortened to 37 months from 95 months.

Since the beginning of 1979, Shanghai Municipality has universally organized engineering and construction units to sign contracts to determine time limits for projects and implement measures for rewarding those units that have shortened the period of construction and punishing those that must extend the time limit for any project. In a construction unit, it is necessary to implement a system with "fixed targets, responsibilities, rewards and punishments" aimed at fulfilling the construction task as well as the technical and economic norms. It is also essential to sign contracts at each level. A system must be carried out in each shift and group where workers are paid piecerate wages after they have fulfilled their original production targets so that each worker is held responsible for fulfilling a certain task. In building Shanghai's Xuejiabang cold storage project, with a refrigerating capacity of 12,000 tons, the Ministry of Commerce adopted the responsibility system at each level. It completed the entire project from the beginning to the end in one year and five months. The completed project was top-rated with a saving of 400,000 yuan in total investment. The unit in charge of construction was given a bonus. The department at the high level also approved a request filed by the construction unit to make use of the money saved to build residential quarters for the workers.

For many years, particularly during the chaotic decade, the scale of China's capital construction was excessively large due to the influence of "leftist" mistakes. Investments in the field of capital construction were also excessive. There is a saying that "investments are like bottomless holes, while construction work goes on and on." Economic returns were extremely poor. At present, capital construction units have implemented the economic responsibility system with the system of responsibility for investment as the main form, and have preliminarily changed the erroneous trend in the field of capital construction where "capital construction projects are developed before careful plans are made, and money is spent freely." The time needed to complete projects is being gradually shortened and economic results from investment are being gradually improved. There have emerged a number of construction projects characterized by limited investments, short construction periods and high quality.

Recently the State Economic Commission held a national symposium in Shanghai on shortening construction time and improving economic results in investment. At the symposium, the participants exchanged their experience in implementing the economic responsibility system with the economic responsibility system for investment as the main form. They reaffirmed that these responsibility systems represent a good way to create a new situation in improving economic results in investment. 18-YEAR COAL INDUSTRY DEVELOPMENT PLAN

[Excerpts] Beijing, 7 Oct (XINHUA) -- The 12th CPC National Congress has put forward the grand objective to quadruple the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production before the end of this century. How should the coal industry, as a primary energy industry, meet this demand?

Yu Hongen, vice minister of coal industry, answered this question at a meeting of office cadres of the Ministry of Coal Industry today.

He said: In order to make the coal industry meet the demand for quadrupling the gross annual industrial and agricultural output value, we should, on the one hand, make efforts to achieve technological progress and lower energy consumption. On the other hand, we should make a fairly great development of coal industry by building new mines and tapping the potential of old mines.

Yu Hongen said: Coal is China's primary energy source. At present it accounts for 72 percent of our energy structure. Because of our poor management, obsolete equipment and backward technology, our waste of energy is huge and our thermal energy utilization ratio is low. If we can raise the thermal energy utilization ratio of coal to 50 percent from the present ratio of 25 percent by the end of this century, 1 ton of coal will then yield the same effect as 2 tons of coal now. In this way, the utilization ratio of coal will be greatly enhanced.

Yu Hongen said: In the next 18 years, we should speed up the construction of five major open-cut coal mines in Yiminhe, Jungar, Huolinhe and Yuanbaoshan of Nei Monggol and Pingsuo of Shanxi. We should continue the construction of the Handan, Jindongnan, Jinzhong, Lianghuai, Yanteng, east Heilongjiang, west Henan, Weibei, Tiefa and Shenyang outskirts and Liupanshui bases for coal production. In addition, we should also build a number of major shafts.

Yu Hongen said: There are many favorable conditions for the coal industry to accomplish these planned projects. First, the party Central Committee and the State Council attach great importance to the coal industry. The 12th CPC National Congress has taken energy, including coal, as one of the strategic priorities in economic development. Second, China has an abundance of coal resources with confirmed coal deposits totalling some 640 billion tons. The deposits are of a great variety and are widely dispersed throughout the country. Third, as the result of construction in past 3 decades and more, our coal industry had laid a solid technological and material foundation. At present, we have had some 2,200 large and medium-sized coal mines with more than 4 million workers and staff members.

Yu Hongen added: We have formulated an 18-year development plan for the coal industry. The plan calls for the coal industry to accomplish changes in six aspects including technology, management and the economic system.

1. We should turn manual operations into mechanized operations as the main mode of operation at major coal mines in China.

2. We should fundamentally improve safety in coal production.

3. We should increase the variety of products instead of producing only raw coal.

4. We should develop comprehensive enterprises instead of unitary enterprises and form associations of the coal industry with the chemical electric power and other related industries in order to enliven the coal industry.

5. We should improve coal transportation.

6. We should combine economic measures with administrative measure to manage coal production, instead of relying on administrative measures alone. We should formulate rational economic policies and establish scientific management systems to arouse enthusiasm among localities and enterprises for running mines and bring into play the initiative of the workers in production.

MINISTER REVEALS LARGE RAIL CONSTRUCTION PLANS

[Text] Beijing, October 11 (XINHUA) -- "We envisage building a technically advanced, large-scale railway network suited to the conditions of China with a big population and large geographic area," Chen Puru, minister of railways, said at a recent meeting of ministry officials.

The annual volume of railway freight and passenger transport, Chen Puru added, is expected to be more than doubled in order to meet China's stated goal of quadrupling the gross annual insutrial and agricultural output value by the end of this century, set forth at the 12th national party congress.

The 64-year-old minister said the state has decided to allocate more funds beginning next year for construction and improvement of railways.

According to the minister, China will build a number of new railway trunk lines between now and 1990 in order to speed up the transportation of coal and to link up coastal harbors with interior regions to pave the way for the still faster economic development in the next decade.

China is speeding up the work of double-tracking trunk railway lines and expanding railway marshalling yards. More electric locomotives and diesel locomotives are scheduled to be introduced to replace steam locomotives on those lines which have been technically transformed.

At present, priority of railway construction should be given to those lines transporting coal from Shanxi Province and other coal mining centers, Minister Chen added. The country is transforming a number of existing railway trunk lines including the railway linking Beijing with Baotou in north China and with Shenyang in northeast China, the Shanghai-Hangzhou railway in east China, the Guizhou-Kunming railway in southwest China, the east-west Longhai railway and the north-south Beijing-Guangzhou railway.

The new railways being built or planned include the Xinxiang-Heze railway, Yangzhou-Shijiusuo railway, Datong-Qinghuangdao railway and Daye-Shahejie railway, in northern and central China, the minister said.

CHINA-RUN CATHOLIC SEMINARY OPENS IN SHANGHAI

OW120756 Beijing XINHUA in English 0729 GMT 12 Oct 82

[Text] Shanghai, October 12 (XINHUA) -- A theological seminary, the first of its kind to be run by the China Patriotic Catholic Association on the principle of national independence, was inaugurated here last Monday.

Situated half way up Sheshan Mountain in a Shanghai suburb, the seminary is quiet and secluded, surrounded by picturesque hills.

The first class of seminarists were 36 young people coming from Jiangsu, Zhejiang and Anhui Provinces, and the Shanghai Municipality, who are willing to enter the seminary with the approval of their families and who have also passed cultural and catechetical examinations.

The inauguration ceremony was presided over by Father Jin Luxian, director of the seminary.

Speaking at the inauguration, 91-year-old Zhang Jiashu, head of the Chinese Catholic Bishops College and bishop of the Shanghai Diocese, said that the establishment of the seminary was a result of the policy of independently running China's Catholic community. The former seminaries and convents were manipulated by foreign forces and served the interest of colonialism, he said. The establishment of a seminary which brooks no foreign domination was solely for the purpose of training clerical successors who are patriotic and who love their religion, he added.

Attending the inauguration were Yang Gaojian, vice-chairman of the China Patriotic Catholic Association and deputy director of the National Administrative Commission of the Chinese Catholic Church, and more than 200 bishops, fathers, brothers and sisters from the three provinces and Shanghai Municipality.

A special mass was offered here in the morning by Bishop Zhang Jiashu for the occasion with the more than 3,000 Catholics in attendance, including the 36 seminarists.

RENMIN RIBAO URGES STUDY OF CONGRESS DOCUMENTS

["Short" commentary: "We Must Make Big Efforts To Study in Depth"]

[Text] Many regions and units are now requesting to lead the study of the 12th party congress documents in depth on the basis of initially grasping their essence. These requests are made punctually and necessarily.

The 12th party congress documents, which scientifically summed up its historical experience, and in particular the historical achievements made in the past 6 years, have become guiding principles in its future work. The documents should be studied seriously and repeatedly, otherwise, it is difficult to understand them thoroughly due to their extensive and profound content. For example, have you understood well the historic service of the 3d plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee and the historic status of the 12th party congress? Have you really realized the strategic goal, focal points and steps as well as the four political guarantees set forth by the 12th party congress? Have you understood well the real meaning of building socialist spiritual civilization? How did you understand such problems in the past? And what about now? Probably you first understood the documents superficially, one-sidedly or even wrongly. But now you can realize the meaning deeply, thoroughly and correctly. Can you tell what the change arises from? Anyhow, we must think over the spirit of the documents from the surface to what lies behind so as to understand what they really are by linking theory with practice.

We often say that we should hold politically and ideologically to what the party Central Committee requires of us. How should we do so in deed? It is useless to speak without taking action. When the heart is afire, some sparks will fly out in action. Only when we study carefully the documents and thoroughly understand and master the substantial essence of the spirit of the 12th party congress, and only when we enhance our thinking and understanding to the level of the spirit, will it be possible to enable ourselves politically and ideologically to keep with what the party Central Committee requires of us.

A great change should be made in our study methods. We must make big efforts to study in depth and get rid of the habit of being content with superficial understanding. We must improve our study to a new level and cast off old thinking in our mentality. Thus we will be able to get well prepared mentally for creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

ARTICLE ON EQUALITY OF ALL PARTY MEMBERS

[Article by Gan Weihan [3927 3262 3352]: "All Party Members Are Equal Before Party Discipline"]

[Text The new party constitution clearly stipulates that we should "implement the principle of all party members being equal before party discipline." This is one of our party's oldest regulations. All party members should observe party discipline and no one is allowed to violate it. Anyone who violates party discipline will be held responsible for the offense and disciplinary measures will be taken against him. No one is allowed to interfere with these measures or to enable the offender to go scot-free. Adherence to and implementation of this principle is very important for the implementation of the spirit of the 12th congress and the new party constitution and the rectification of party work style and discipline.

Our party has always adhered to this principle and has thus given rise to a fine tradition. Many leaders and high-ranking officials of the party have taken the lead in observing party discipline. The broad ranks of party members have consciously remained within the bounds of party discipline. Party organizations at all levels have been impartial and incorruptible in safeguarding and enforcing party discipline. Mao Zedong, Zhou Enlai, Liu Shaoqi and other leading comrades of the party consciously obeyed the discipline of the organization while at the same time persisting in their struggle and adhering to their correct opinions. By so doing, they set examples for the whole party. In fighting against Zhang Guotao's activities of splitting the party and the Red Army, Commander in Chief Zhu, Marshal Ye, Chief of General Staff Peng and other leading comrades displayed their firm party spirit and high sense of discipline. Whether on battlefields or in prison, many excellent party members have strictly observed party discipline for the party's cause and in doing so have not hesitated to shed their blood or to die. "If our sense of discipline is heightened, the revolution will succeed everywhere." This vividly sums up the experience of our party's and amry's united struggle and victorious fight against the enemy.

Our party has always taken disciplinary measures without exception against any party member who violates discipline, whether he is a leader, a high-ranking cadre, a person who has rendered outstanding service or a common party member. Thus, it has enforced and maintained the strictness of party discipline. One of the important reasons why our party was able to persistently carry out such a prolonged and arduous revolutionary war and finally conquered the enemy and won victory was because of its strict and impartial discipline. As Comrade Deng Xiaoping recently pointed out: Without discipline it is impossible to be of one heart and one mind. In the past we relied on our discipline in carrying out the revolution. Of course, this discipline must be consciously observed. This is the best practice that we have established since the founding of the CPC.

Though in our party's history there have occured quite a few incidents of violation of party discipline, the overwhelming majority of our party members and cadres have maintained the tradition of strictly observing party discipline. During the 3 years of economic difficulties, the reason why our party was able to smoothly carry out the readjustment policies and tide over the difficulties was because the whole party was of one mind and discipline was strictly enforced. This is very convincing evidence. However, the 10 years of turmoil was a completely different case. At that time, Lin Biao and the "gang of four" counter-revolutionary cliques wantonly violated and trampled on party discipline out of their desire to usurp party power. They persecuted and imprisoned and killed or nearly killed many people, simply disregarding party discipline. This caused serious losses.

After its 3d plenary session, the 11th CPC Central Committee adopted some vigorous measures to rectify party work style and enforce party discipline. It formulated and published the "Guiding Principles of Inter-Party Political Life" and issued a series of directives to strictly enforce party discipline. Leading comrades at all levels personally gave party lectures to educate party members in party discipline. This brought about a remarkable improvement in our party work style and the sense of party discipline was remarkably heightened. The principle of all party members being equal before party discipline has been restored and adhered to. However, as Comrade Deng Xiaoping has pointed out: "Bad old practices die hard;" therefore there still are quite a few problems in this respect.

In observing discipline, some comrades, especially leading comrades, consider themselves to be "special party members," and "exclude" themselves from among those who have to observe party discipline. To them, it seems that only other people are dutybound to observe discipline, but they themselves are not. They very clearly know the party's line, principles, policies and decisions, but they think that they can carry out these at their own will according to their needs. If they think it desirable to carry out some policies or decisions, they will carry out these policies or decisions, otherwise, they will not and will even adopt an attitude of passively opposing or overtly agreeing but covertly opposing these policies and decisions. Some of them clearly know that exploiting their power of office for personal ends is a violation of the party's constitution and the "Guiding Principles," but are still building houses for themselves that are much better than the prescribed standard or are pursuing special treatment, for their children. Others have attended improper banquets, and even accepted presents and bribes in violation of law and discipline, knowing full well that party discipline does not allow attending improper banquets or accepting presents or bribes. Still others not only violate discipline themselves but also support and shield their children's activities that violate the law and discipline and allow their children to go scot-free after they commit offences. These comrades pursue special treatment because they think they have the capital to demand special treatment, thus, they are shackled by their wrong idea. They think that their seniority, great achievements and high ranks makes them immune from the punishment of the regulations and constitution of the party.

In enforcing party discipline, some comrades do not treat party members as being equal or act impartially in the interests of the public in investigating the cases and punishing party members who have violated discipline. On the contrary, their way of handling the cases varies as the seniority and ranks of the offenders vary. Because of "relationships," they indulge some offenders, and refrain from punishing offenders, saying "just once is not bad; if the offense is repeated, the offender will be punished." Thus, they turn big problems into small ones and small problems into no problem at all. As a result, they not only fail to enforce party discipline, but also injure the party's prestige; they not only fail to put an end to the unhealthy trend, but actually encourage it.

The key to adhering to the principle of every party member being equal before party discipline lies in preventing and overcoming the idea of pursuing privileges. The "Guiding Principles" stipulate: "Within the party, no one is allowed to be a special party member who is free from the restriction of party discipline and state law or to override party organizations. A party member is never allowed to exploit his power of office to pursue personal interests." The party's comrades, especially high-ranking cadres, must have a high awareness, cleanse their minds, prevent and overcome the idea of pursuing privileges and take the lead in observing and enforcing party discipline. The more senior one is, the longer one has received the party's education; the higher one's rank is, the greater the responsibility one shoulders; thus, the more serious the result of one's violation of party discipline will be and the greater the harm brought about by the violation will be. Therefore, we should be more exacting on them.

To overcome the idea of pursuing privileges, we should begin with education and arouse people's consciousness. At the same time we should also punish according to regulations those who disregard and seriously violate party discipline. We should act as Comrade Chen Yun said: "We should stress truth and not save face."

While adhering to the principle of every party member being equal before party discipline, we should also pay attention to concretely analyzing the cases of offenses that are within the scope of violation of party discipline and handle different cases in different ways. The party's policy on leniency and severity in meting out punishment always requires us to implement the principle of handling cases in different ways according to the actual difference of the cases. However, leniency does not mean a leniency without limit and severity does not mean advocating punishment. For example, if two party members commit similar mistakes, is it just to mete out the same disciplinary punishment to them without making a concrete analysis of their respective cases? This is not necessarily just. Here, we must make a comprehensive and concrete analysis of the facts, details and consequences of their mistakes, of their attitude in admitting their mistakes and their general performance in the past. Was this the first time he committed a mistake or has he committed mistakes many times? Has he conscientiously carried out self-criticism and admitted and corrected his mistake or has he refused to admit his mistake and clung to his wrong way? Has his performance always been good or bad? We should ask these and other questions. We must handle the cases justly according to their differences and in accordance with regulations, the constitution and relevant policies of the party. On the contrary, if we implement the principle of all party members being equal before party discipline in a simplified manner, pay attention only to the similarity of the cases, overlook making a concrete analysis of their differences in other aspects and handle cases in a uniform manner, we will give rise to unjustness and inequality. Adherence to the principle of all party members being equal before party discipline and the adherence to making concrete analysis of concrete cases and handling them in different ways according to their differences complement rather than contradict one another.

We should adhere to and implement the principle of all party members being equal before party discipline and satisfactorily rectify party work style and enforce party discipline in order to ensure the implementation of the spirit of the 12th party congress.

[Text] Improving leadership style, the PLA General Logistics Department organized investigation teams to inspect all the company-level PLA units and posts on the frontline of the coastal and naval border defense line in order to obtain firsthand information and help solve grassroots practical problems.

To understand and solve practical problems in the logistics, security and daily life of the PLA units stationed on the frontline of the coastal and naval border defense line, the party committee of the PLA General Logistics Department early this year set up 10 joint investigation teams consisting of some 230 leading cadres from the logistics departments of major departments concerned of the PLA to inspect company-level units and posts on the frontline of the coastal and naval border defense line. In 6 months or more, comrades of the investigation teams overcame difficulties to visit all the units and posts on the frontline and held direct meetings with the fighters in order to understand their life and feelings. Problems which could be solved within the purview of policies, rules and regulations and within the limit of the investigation teams' powers were solved on the spot. As for those which could not be solved on the spot, the investigation teams tried to create conditions for solving them as soon as possible. In the past 6 months or so, the investigation teams have solved more than 200 practical problems for the coastal and naval border defense grassroots units.

The CPC Central Committee's Military Commission and the State Council have attached great importance to the investigation teams set up by the PLA General Logistics Department. Departments concerned have already appropriated special funds for solving practical problems facing the coastal and naval border defense units.

The circular points out: One extremely important feature of the 12th CPC National Congress is to treat as a strategic principle the task of building a socialist spiritual civilization with communist ideology as its core. The congress clearly pointed out: "Socialist spiritual civilization is an important characteristic of socialism" and "without this spiritual civilization it would be impossible to build socialism."

To thoroughly promote the autumn patriotic health movement, we should continue to eliminate filth and unsanitary areas. Stressing this point, the circular says: While concentrating our efforts on studying and publicizing the 12th CPC National Congress' guidelines, we should further implement the guidelines formulated at the Harbin on-the-spot meeting on urban sanitation and Shanxi's Jincheng on-the-spot meeting on rural sanitation. We should first improve the sanitation of urban and sightseeing areas and then extend to rural areas.

The circular says: Public health departments and medical colleges should use all types of propaganda tools frequently and extensively to conduct health propaganda and education, popularize scientific knowledge on health and raise the people's consciousness in observing hygiene, civility, courtesy and moral discipline.

ANHUI'S ZHOU ZIJIAN INSPECTS FLOOD DAMAGE

[Excerpts] Zhou Zijian, acting first secretary of the Anhui Provincial CPC Committee and governor of Anhui, and (Wang Yuzhao), member of the standing committee of the provincial party committee paid a comfort visit to the masses in the flood-stricken counties of Yingshang, Funan and Lingquan in Fuyang Prefecture from 2 to 5 October, in order to propagate and implement the guidelines laid down by the 12th CPC National Congress. They encouraged the masses to become self-reliant, to expand avenues of production and to increase production to save themselves. In addition, they called on them not to remain passive, but to take immediate action to do a good job in autumn sowing and to overcome difficulties caused by natural calamities by showing the spirit displayed in their antiflood struggle.

Days of drizzling rains have caused floodwaters in many easily flooded areas along the Huai He and Ying He in Fuyang Prefecture to recede slowly and the flat land to be saturated with water, adversely affecting autumn sowing. Under these circumstances, some cadres and people in the flood-stricken areas became passive and feared difficulties.

To cope with this problem, Comrade Zhao Zijian told the responsible leaders of the Fuyang prefectural party committee that it was wrong to adopt a passive wait-and-see attitude.

He urged them to take immediate action according to the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress and do their utmost to do a good job in autumn sowing with the courage they displayed in combating the flood.

During their inspecton visit to Yingshang County, Zhou Zijian and the other leading comrades visited the victims who were temporarily staying in makeshift shelters, inquired about their problems and needs and provided them with quick and responsive solutions.

During his visit to Linquan County, Comrade Zhou Zujian told members of the county CPC committee to carry out the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress in light of reality and to exert efforts to create a new situation in agricultural production.

SHANDONG HOLDS COTTON PROCUREMENT CONFERENCE

[Text] According to our sources, the provincial people's government held a telephone conference on 3 October on cotton procurement work, urging all localities to actually strengthen the leadership in line with the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress and successfully accomplish the 1982 cotton procurement task. Speaking at the conference were Li Zhen, secretary of the provincial CPC committee and deputy governor of the province, and Liu Zhongqian, deputy provincial governor.

The conference pointed out: This year our province's cotton production was gratifying and cotton procurement has developed at a relatively fast pace. By the end of September, the province procured 3.67 million dan of ginned cotton, an increase of 150 percent over the corresponding 1981 period. However, some localities have slackened their efforts in cotton procurement owing to their inadequate understanding of the new and arduous situation in this year's cotton procurement. Some localities have failed in pricing policies. Some have failed to expeditiously transport the procured cotton to other places, resulting in limiting and stopping cotton procurement.

The conference noted: This year, the province's cotton procurement is estimated at over 18 million dan, an increase of 5 million dan over the real procured figure last year. Along with the increase of the households instituting the system of fixing output quotas based on households and the system of peasant households assuming full responsibility for task completion, it is estimated that the number of cotton-marketing households will increase by scores of times over 1980 and, therefore, the procurement task is arduous.

The conference urged all localities to actually strengthen leadership and administration over cotton marketing work. Some persons should be organized to go down to the grass-roots units to learn about the marketing situation of every production team. All cotton that can be marketed by production teams should be marketed by them. If the cotton cannot be marketed by production teams, it should, whenever possible, be marketed by group or by integrated households. It is necessary to popularize the method of marketing cotton in delimited areas and assigned places, at the appointed time and in a balanced manner. Meanwhile, the masses requirements on cotton marketing should be satisfied by every possible means. It is not permissible to restrict and reject procurement.

The conference also pointed out: The cotton procurement policies should be strictly implemented. While examining the quality of cotton, the state standard should be insisted on and the policy of higher prices for better quality should be implemented.

The state additional pricing policy should also be instituted. The cotton accounts should be settled all at once and at the end, based on the average annual price and with the production team as the basic unit. We should persist in the policy of the state monopoly for purchase and marketing of cotton. Cotton, cotton yarn and cotton velvet should never be put on the market at any time.

In addition, the conference made arrangements for autumn farming and urged efforts to fulfill the autumn farming task in guaranteed quality and quantity and to lay a good foundation for next year's good harvest in summer grains.

Efforts must be made to solve one or two tricky problems. One or two comprehensive and concentrated check-ups must be conducted to examine, implement and carry out the covenant of civilization and native rules and popular regulations. This is a good method for conducting self-education on the masses as well as for regularizing and systematizing the five stresses and four beauties activities. During the period from October to New Year's Day and the spring festival, two or three large-scale activities must be carried out to cater to the needs of the people, such as performing good deeds, showing cares and concerns, learning from Lei Feng and fostering a new style. GUANGZHOU PLA'S WANG MENG EXPLAINS DOCUMENTS

[Report: "Wang Meng Publicizes Party Congress Documents to Guangzhou PLA Units in Light of His Own Experiences"]

[Text] On the afternoon of 4 October, Wang Meng, a member of the CPC Central Committee and political commissar of the Guangzhou PLA units, explained the documents of the 12th CPC Congress in light of his own experiences at an enlarged meeting of the CPC committee of the units directly under the Guangzhou PLA command.

Comrade Wang Meng pointed out that the 12th CPC Congress was the congress of the greatest significance since the party's 7th congress. To study the documents of the 12th CPC Congress, he asserted, is a matter with an important bearing on our army's orientation toward modernization and regularization. If we lag behind in our political studies in the face of this historical turning point, we will not be able to keep abreast of the situation ideologically, and will thus deviate from the correct direction laid down by the 12th CPC Congress in our work. Every comrade must attach primary importance to the study and implementation of the documents of the 12th CPC Congress.

When stressing the point that communism is our great banner and explaining the relationship between the realization of communism and the work of each comrade, Comrade Wang Meng said that the red thread which runs through the congress documents is communist ideology. Ever since the first day we joined the party, we Communist Party members have taken communism as our ideal, and have made up our minds to fight all our life for the cause of communism.

Our everyday work is the practice of communism. Although the tasks for every stage are different, all of them have an important bearing on the cause of communism. Every revolutionary should at all times use communist ideology as his guide, and work in a down-to-earth manner for the realization of the lofty goal of communism.

Comrade Wang Meng pointed out that the fundamental turn for the better in party style is the key to realizing within 5 years the three fundamental improvements in the financial and economic situation, the general mood of society and the style of the party, goals which were put forward by the party's central authorities. As our party is formed from many organizations and many party members, whether the fundamental turn for the better in the party style can be attained depends primarily on how well each of us performs. If we just claim in words to strive for the three fundamental improvements but go against the party's requirements in deeds, maintain a lot of old shortcomings, and act in a manner inconsistent with our promises, the three fundamental improvements will not be possible. If our party members, in particular our leading cadres, place strict demands on themselves in accordance with the party constitution and the "guiding principle," then the fundamental turn for the better in the party style will be achieved, and this will in turn bring alone a fundamental turn for the better in the general mood of society as a whole.

Comrade Wang Meng also talked about how to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization construction. The whole country consists of hundreds of thousands of units, he said. If each unit can create a new situation of its own, then there is hope for a new situation throughout the country. He also said, as our units directly under the Guangzhou PLA command are of a high technical standard, have numerous specialized branches and are highly decentralized, our comrades must conscientiously study and implement the documents of the 12th CPC congress in light of actual circumstances, and devote every effort to creating a new situation in the work of their own units.

GUANGZHOU PLA LEADERS DISCUSS CIVILIZATION

HK090241 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2350 GMT 8 Oct 82

[Text] In recent days, leading comrades of the Guangzhou PLA Units CPC Committee have seriously studied and discussed the passages in the 12th party congress report concerning the building of spiritual civilization. They have carried out analysis in close connection with the current misinterpretations of certain people regarding socialist spiritual civilization. They unanimously held: We must oppose leftism and also guard against rightism in building socialist spiritual civilization.

The comrades held: At present we must pay attention to three issues when talking about spiritual civilization:

1. Avoid applying leftist methods to carry out class analysis of spiritual civilization. Socialist and capitalist spiritual civilization are fundamentally different in general nature, and it is necessary to make a Marxist class analysis of them. However, this certainly does not mean that every specific content of spiritual civilization has class nature. We must certainly not misapply class viewpoint and the method of class analysis and regard even automation in production as possessing class nature. Instead, we must criticially inherit the fruits of the bourgeoisie in the history of human thought and in material civilization.

2. Avoid applying leftist methods to view the role of spiritual civilization. Socialist spiritual civilization naturally has a tremendous reaction on material civilization. However, this certainly does not mean that poor is better than rich and that material civilization is unnecessary in building spiritual civilization.

3. Avoid applying leftist methods to view science and culture. The view that culture has no connection with the enhancement of people's ideological awareness is extremely wrong.

During the discussion the comrades also noted: Socialist spiritual civilization can only be developed by relying on spontaneous, unwearying and arduous work by the whole party, the whole army and the people of the whole country. It cannot develop naturally from the basis provided by the development of material civilization. It is also incorrect to take a rightist view of spiritual civilization and negate its role.

GUANGDONG URGES TIGHTER CONTROL OVER DRAMA WORK

HK081043 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2350 GMT 7 Oct 82

[Text] The provincial Culture Bureau recently put forth a proposal for strengthening control over drama work. The provincial CPC committee Propaganda Department has approved this proposal and demanded that propaganda departments of CPC committees at all levels implement this in accordance with local conditions. The proposal pointed out that, since the beginning of this year, our province's drama production has been promising and productions of modern drama are increasing. The general situation is good. However, confusion and profiteering have risen in certain localities and among some drama troupes. This has caused numerous problems. The proposal pointed out that if we do not promptly solve the confusions in drama performances and the profiteering, serious consequences are bound to appear. In order to emphasize the role of drama in building socialist spiritual civilization, it is important to encourage production and seriously concentrate strength to promote modern drama and work hard to direct and perform new drama. At the same time, it is necessary to strengthen management over the performance of traditional plays. The proposal has also issued specific regulations on strengthening drama management.

GUANGDONG'S REN ZHONGYI INSPECTS EMPORIUM

[Text] Provincial CPC committee First Secretary Ren Zhongyi inspected the Nanfang building emporium in Guangzhou on 5 October. He also held a forum with personnel of the emporium to discuss how to further enliven commercial work.

Comrade Ren Zhongyi said: The whole party must now create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. You must do busines still better and enliven work still more, to further creace a new situation. The present liveliness is far from sufficient.

After observing the business and commodities on each floor of the emporium, Comrade Ren Zhongyi talked with responsible comrades of the emporium. After listening to their reports, he said: You should study this point; can the profit created by each staff member for the state be increased to 10,000 yuan? You should tell them all of this goal. They will then understand it and feel it an honor to create 10,000 yuan profit for the state each year.

Speaking on the service attitude of the sales personnel, Comrade Ren Zhongyi said: Foreign countries have a saying that the customer is king and the customer is always right. This shows that, in order to make money, the capitalists attach great importance to the views of customers. As our commerce serves the people, we should pay all the more attention to customers' views. Comrade Ren Zhongyi said: Business is prosperous in Nanfang building, and the service attitude is good. Most of the sales personnel welcome customers with a smile. This is very good. Comrade Ren Zhongyi also pointed out certain deficiencies he had noticed.

HENAN'S LIU JIE SPEAKS AT CADRES STUDY CLASS

HK071230 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 6 Oct 82

In his speech, Comrade Liu Jie requested that everyone carefully read the texts of the 12th congress documents. He said that the 12th party congress made a profound exposition on the road to building Chinese-style socialism. He said we are sure to create a new situation in socialist modernization if we conscientiously carry out the line, policies and principles of the 12th congress. He added that we must earnestly study how to combine the study of the 12th congress documents with the concrete conditions in our province so as to correctly implement these documents and create a new situation in all fields of Henan's socialist modernization drive. To this end, we must first conscientiously study and comprehend the spirit and essence of these documents and analyze the concrete conditions in our province. We must correct our guiding ideology. If we do not make great efforts in this respect, but instead handle concrete problems by jumping right into them we will certainly act in a blind way without correct guidance. Liu Jie pointed out that it is necessary to unify our understanding on the basis of the 12th congress spirit. It is most important to keep in step with the CPC Central Committee and raise our consciousness and steadfastness in implementing the 12th congress resolutions.

Liu Jie pointed out in his speech that in the next 5 years, we must strive to achieve three fundamental changes in our work. First, there must be a change in the party's work style. It is necessary to build our party in accordance with the new party constitution adopted by the 12th party congress. This new constitution is a criterion of action and fundamental law for the whole party. Party organizations and cadres must abide by it unconditionally. We must build party organizations at various levels in our province in strict accordance with the new party constitution and promote cooperation and succession between old and young cadres in the leading bodies.

Liu Jie said that if we act in strict accordance with the requirements of the new party constitution and carry out resolute struggles against all words and action that run counter to them, no matter how serious the problems may be within our party, they can all be solved.

Second, while the study of the new party constitution is also aimed at making ideological preparations for the coming party rectification, at present, it is necessary to greatly strengthen party spirit, eradicate factionalism and strengthen unity. In the winter, the streamlining of organizations will begin. We must, in light of the 12th congress spirit, promote cooperation and succession between the old and new cadres. Finally, Comrade Liu Jie required that participants combine the study with their work on the basis of studying the documents and unifying understanding, and study and work out concrete plans for implementing the 12th congress spirit and creating a new situation in light of the realities in their respective districts, units and departments.

HENAN MEETING DISCUSSES RURAL DISASTER RELIEF

[Summary] The Henan provincial government held a telephone conference on 8 October on disaster relief through production, demanding that the province firmly implement the principle of relying on the masses and the strength of the collective and regarding self-salvation through production as the main measure and the necessary state relief as supplementary, and do a still better job in disaster relief through production.

During the National Day period, provincial CPC committee secretary and governor, Dai Suli, visited disaster-hit communes and brigades in Yanshi, Yichuan and Song Counties to see the masses and listen to reports. His views on disaster relief work were conveyed during the telephone conference.

"This year most parts of the province have suffered drought followed by floods. The disasters have been rather serious in some places. In the face of the serious disasters, the party committees and government at all levels have done a lot of work, made timely arrangements for the daily life of the afflicted masses and launched repair work on projects destroyed by floods. Social order in the disaster areas is stable, the masses' mental outlook is very good, and self-salvation through production has victoriously got under way. There is plenty of drive for striving for a bumper wheat harvest next year.

"However it is also necessary to realize that there are 8 months to go to next year's wheat harvest. That is a rather long time. The burdens of the prefectural and municipal CPC committees and government remain very heavy. It is also necessary to realize that the places hit by floods this year were areas that did relatively well in grain production in the past and where the masses provided large amounts of commodity grain and made relatively great contributions."

The telephone conference demanded that the province take the following measures: 1) resolutely implement the principle of relying on the masses and the strength of the collective and regarding self-salvation through production as the main measure and the necessary state relief as supplementary; 2) do a good job in sowing the wheat crop and strive to expand the sown area; 3) after sowing the wheat, concentrate efforts on studying the house-building problem in the disaster areas; 4) it is necessary to devise ways of solving the masses' food and clothing problems in the disaster areas; 5) strengthen leadership over work in the disaster areas and send work teams there to grasp the work.

Liu Zhanrong, commander of Hunan Military District, presided.

Mao Zhiyong, first secretary of the provincial CPC committee and political commissar of Hunan Military District, delivered the opening speech. After greeting the representatives, he stressed: "We must continue to strengthen military militia building. This is the strategic task put forward by the Central Committee in light of the militia's status and role in building and defending the four modernizations and in opposing a further war of aggression. We must realize that our socialist modernization drive is being carried out when the world is in great turmoil and our national security is still seriously threatened. Hence we must by no means relax vigilance. We must strengthen national defense construction on the basis of vigorously developing economic construction."

Lu Wenxin, a deputy to the 12th party congress and political commissar of Hunan Military District, then spoke on the spirit of the congress documents.

PRESIDENT CHIANG ISSUES NATIONAL DAY MESSAGE

[Text] Taipei, Oct. 9 (CNA) -- President Chiang Ching-kuo, on the eve of the Double Tenth National Day, called on the whole people to join in the movement for freedom and against tyranny launched by the compatriots on the Chinese mainland.

The president said in a congratulatory message on the National Day of the Republic of China: "This is time at which the life of freedom, democracy and happiness can be restored to our people and a new China of peace and equitable wealth can be established".

Full text of the president's message is as follows:

The glory of 1911 revolution and the brilliance of the double tenth shines always in the hearts and eyes of every Chinese. October 10, 1911, was the beginning of a new era for the Chinese nation. It was also the great birthday of the Republic of China. It will be forever the day of celebration, joy and cheers for our compatriots at home and abroad.

The Republic of China is constructed on Dr. Sun Yat-sen's three principles of the people (nationalism, democracy and social welfare) and is being developed in accordance with these three principles. During the last 70 years of bitter struggle, our martyrs have sacrificed their lives and our comrades have shed their blood. They have had one aim: To overcome all obstacles in order to carry out the three principles throughout the nation and ensure the great harmony of the people. The history of the last 70 years has shown that only the three principles of the people can make China rich and strong and assure the peace of the world. Although the communist insurrection has yet to be quelled, the experience of the last dozens of years has proved that communism will surely be thrown onto the ash heap of history. As long as our compatriots rely on themselves and move forward with courage, the 1980's is sure to be the era of the reunification of China under the banner of the three principles of the people.

In his inaugural statement as provisional president on the first day of the Republic of China, Dr. Sun Yat-sen said: "All revolutionaries must count on their earnest and pure spirit to overcome the hardships they encounter. Even if the hardships to come are far greater than those we have known we shall still consolidate the foundation of the Republic of China while maintaining this spirit and moving ahead without fail." In his remarks at the first weekly memorial service in honor of our national founding father in 1951, the late President Chiang Kai-shek said: "From beginning to end, we are convined that no matter how the world situation may change, there is no doubt whatsoever final victory will be ours because justice and righteousness are always on our side. In particular, this is true because our three principles of the people can defeat any adversary". With the foresight and inspiration of these two great leaders, not even the most formidable difficulties and changes can stop us from moving ahead with earnestness and purity of spirit toward the goal of the three principles of the people.

Reunification of China under the banner of the three principles of the people is the unanimous intention of all Chinese at home and abroad. It is our duty of the times for the 1980's. Now that the movement for freedom and against tyranny launched by our compatriots on the Chinese mainland is surging high, we must translate this desire into positive action. We must call on the whole people to join in this movement. We must cement our solidarity with our strong will and rally all our forces at home and abroad with optimism and confidence so as to project our formidable and overwhelming anti-communist movement deep into the mainland, destroy the communist regime and eradicate the communist system at one stroke. This is time at which the life of freedom, democracy and happiness can be restored to our people and a new China of peace and equitable wealth can be established.

Let us rally under the national flag of blue sky, white sun and red earth to continue our great undertaking of anti-communism and national recovery -- with one heart and one mind, from beginning to end. Let us also cheer for the foundation of the Republic of China in our land:

Long live the three principles of the people!

Long live the Republic of China!

NONPARTY FIGURES ISSUE POLITICAL STATEMENT

OW101421 Taipei TZU LI WAN PAO in Chinese 28 Sep 82 p 2

[Text] Political figures without party affiliation, at a formal meeting today, issued a statement on state affairs entitled "Save Taiwan by Democracy and Unity." This statement called for the formulation of fundamental laws, lifting martial law, reorganizing Parliament, removing the ban on parties and newspapers and the immediate adoption of general regulations governing self-rule at the provincial and county levels.

The "Municipal Administration Symposium," jointly sponsored by public representatives without party affiliation of Taipei City and Taipei County, was held at noon today at the Kuangfu Hall in Taipei City Hall. The national affairs statement was adopted after discussion by the personages attending the meeting. The following is the text of the statement:

After more than 30 years, the democratic movement on Taiwan, thanks to the unceasing sacrifices and struggles of nonparty forerunners and the internal and external pressures on Taiwan's political situation in recent years, is now approaching the moment of a decisive breakthrough. To hasten the arrival of this crucial moment and usher in a new period, we, people without party affiliations, put forward our common "political stand" for consideration by all fellow countrymen.

1. Taiwan's future should be determined jointly by Taiwan's 18 million people.

2. It is necessary in the spirit of constitutional government and in the light of the present situation to draw up the state's fundamental laws, abolish the provisional articles, lift martial law, reorganize Parliament and remove the ban on parties and newspapers.

3. The regulations governing self-rule at the provincial and county levels and the law on self-government of municipalities directly under the central government should be immediately adopted in order to institute local self-government.

4. Party and government should be strictly separated. Political parties should withdraw from the armed forces, schools, election units, public undertakings, personnel units and press examination units. All political parties should publicly announce their assets and a distinction should be made between the national treasury and party finances.

5. Release political prisoners and put an end to the legal economic and social discrimination now practiced against released political prisoners and their families. Do away with the blacklist of overseas Chinese and enhance real unity among the compatriots at home and abroad.

6. Carry out the ideals of the principle of the people's livelihood through the following efforts:

Formulate a progressive labor standard law, recognize labor's right to collective bargaining with management and implement universal medical services and unemployment insurance; abolish land taxes, ensure the unlimited purchase of rice at guaranteed prices and implement a plan of agricultural insurance; provide subsidies for fishery, animal husbandry, forestry, mining and other occupations in order to improve the environment and protect the people's safety and livelihood; build houses for citizens with long-term and low-interest loans; establish a free economic system and prevent monopoly by tycoons, and abolish all forms of economic privilege and the guarantee sound development of small and medium enterprises.

The above is the common stand of the nonparty people. We call on the compatriots at home and abroad to work together for its realization.

The symposium was sponsored by Legislative Yuan members Fei Hsi-ping, Kang Ning-shiang, Huang Tien-fu and Cheng Yu-chen; Control Yuan members Yu Ching and Lin Chun-tzu; National Assembly members Chou Ching-yu, Chen Ching-chin and Wang Chao-chuan; Taiwan Provincial Assembly member Chen Chin-te; and Taipei City Council members Kang Shui-mu, Lin Wen-lang, Hsu Ming-te, Wang Kun-ho, Chen Sheng-hung, Lin Cheng-chieh, Chen Shui-pien and Hsieh Chang-ting.

RENMIN RIBAO DISCUSSES U.S.-SOVIET RELATIONS

["Newsletter From America" by reporter Yuan Xianlu [5913 0341 4389]: "U.S.-Soviet Relations as Seen From the Shultz-Gromyko Meeting"]

[Text] There is much discussion among the U.S. public about the present state and trends of U.S.-Soviet relations with emphasis laid on the Shultz-Gromyko talks held on two occasions.

The two talks between Shultz and Gromyko lasted for 7 and 1/2 hours. It was revealed that their talks involved various aspects of the international situation and that the two sides held differing views on all issues. Their only "unanimous" view was that they hoped the Iran-Iraq war would end as early as possible, but both sides obviously had their own plans as to how to settle the problems. As for the disarmament talks between the two sides, they only "reviewed" the situation of the preceding stage and did nothing toward breaking the deadlock. The summit meeting between the two countries, discussed heatedly by both sides a few months ago, was not mentioned at all. Therefore, the U.S. press generally considered that, as demonstrated by the Shultz-Gromyko meeting, acute contradictions still exist between the United States and Soviet Union, and their relations are unlikely to improve in the foreseeable future.

However, public opinion in the United States differs in respect of the Reagan administration's policy toward the Soviet Union and the present intention and strategy of the Soviet Union.

When Shultz and Gromyko held their first talk on 28 September, TASS of the Soviet Union published an article by Zamyatin saying that among all previous postwar U.S. Governments, the Reagan administration was the one which implemented the most "bellicose and reactionary" policies. Over the past month, the Soviet propaganda machine repeatedly attacked the Reagan administration's policy toward the Soviet Union, threatening that the Soviet Union would no longer be willing to have contact with the Reagan administration. The Soviet military leaders time and again warned that in the present severe crisis of the international situation, the security of the Soviet Union was in danger, and so forth. After his first talk with Shultz, in his speech delivered to the UN on 1 October, Gromyko vigorously attacked the United States. Some people of insight in the United States maintained that the above-mentioned actions taken by the Soviet Union showed that Moscow had realized it would not get anything out of the policy of "detente" in the face of the Reagan administration's hard-line policy toward the Soviet Union. Therefore, Moscow resolved to "freeze" U.S.-Soviet relations until a change of government in the United States.

At a press conference held on the night of the first Shultz-Gromyko meeting, President Reagan said that the Soviet Union fully understood the stand of the present U.S. Government. He added that over the past 20 months since his government assumed power, the Soviet Union, which had wantonly carried out expansionist activities in various parts of the world, had never succeeded in expanding its territory by even an inch. He maintained that the Shultz-Gromyko meeting was "serious" and covered "a wide-range of topics." Therefore, the United States and the Soviet Union had not become estranged, nor were they ignoring each other. Some people in the United States support the President's views. They believe that after assuming power, Reagan announced that he would use strength to contain the Soviet expansion, and as a result, the Soviet Union has been helpless and inert in the face of many major international events.

Even more Americans find it hard to agree with the two above-quoted views. To them, what these two different views have in common is that they underestimate the main opponent of the United States and are overly positive about the Reagan administration's policy toward the Soviet Union.

In spite of the fact that presently the Soviet Union is facing domestic economic difficulties and has been put in a tight spot since its occupation of Afghanistan, and that it has not been so aggressive over the past year or so as it was previously, does this mean that the Soviet Union has abandoned its foreign policy of expansion? The U.S. NEWS AND WORLD REPORT said: "There is no indication that the protracted war (the invasion of Afghanistan) or the injuries and deaths of personnel have compelled the Kremlin to consider the honorable proposal of withdrawal." A number of newspapers also pointed out that although the Soviet Union has refrained from taking the undisguised action of dispatching troops directly, it was still carrying out new expansionist offensives in certain areas of the Third World. After Reagan assumed power, did not U.S. official quarters repeatedly issue similar warnings?

Some American people point out that, among the various methods used to pursue its expansionist policy, one important method is to drive a wedge between the United States and European countries. Rostow, director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, said in a speech in September: "The primary strategic objective of Soviet expansionist policy is to achieve world dominance through separating Western Europe from the United States and Canada." In this area, the Soviet Union has made some progress over the past year and more. Hasn't Moscow's peace offensive, which takes Western Europe as its main target, once put the United States in a very embarrassing position? Hasn't the gap in U.S.-European relations become wider?

As for the tough policies toward the Soviet Union advocated constantly by Reagan since he took power, some American people hold that the current government hasn't in fact, effected these policies in its actual activities. Moreover, in forcing its views on Western Europe, the Reagan administration has already given great help to the Soviet Union units attempt to split up U.S.-European relations. Sands, a specialist in the Russian Research Institute of Columbia University, said: The measures Reagan adopted against the gas pipeline "had done to NATO what the Soviet Union has not succeeded in doing over the past years." It is even more obvious that some unwise policies the United States adopted toward the Third World have provided the Soviet Union with opportunities that can be exploited in their future expansion.

Then, why did the Soviet Union repeatedly indicate that it was not willing to have contact with the Reagan administration? According to many Americans, this is not Moscow's real intention, because the Soviet Union is good at engaging in double-dealing and playing whichever tricks are to its advantage. It is difficult to imagine that the Soviet Union would abandon the tactics of negotiations and allow the Reagan administration to realize its arms expansion policy and deploy medium-range missiles in central Europe. It is merely a kind of tactic by the Soviet Union to verbally oppose coming into contact with the United States. A leading member of the Soviet Union-Eastern Europe research project at Johns Hopkins University said: "They do not want to let the current U.S. Government appear peace-loving before the Europeans."

Thus, it can be seen that acute contradictions between the United States and the Soviet Union do not exclude negotiations based on their respective purposes. Though the talks between Shultz and Gromyko were routine activities in the period of a UN General Assembly, the relationship between the two superpowers could still be reflected in the talks.

U.S., USSR REACTION TO POLISH UNION LAW NOTED

["U.S., USSR Take Opposite Views on New Polish Trade Unions Law" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, October 10 (XINHUA) — Immediately after the Polish parliament passed a new law on trade unions, the United States announced that it would impose sanctions on Poland, while the Soviet Union charged the United States for interfering in Polish internal affairs.

In a national broadcast from California on October 9, U.S. President Ronald Reagan said that the action taken by the Polish parliament "is a matter of profound concern" to the U.S. He declared that he would seek to suspend Poland's "most favored nation tariff status" in bilateral trade "as quickly as possible". "We are consulting urgently with our allies on steps we might take jointly," he said.

However, the Soviet TASS news agency made a quick and strong reaction to Reagan's statement. It charged the United States for pursuing "a policy to interfere in the internal affairs of a sovereign country" and taking another "discriminative step" against Poland. It accused the United States of "blackmailing" the Polish Government. TASS alleged that the White House hoped that by so doing it might aggravate the Polish economy so as to bring about a change in Poland's domestic policy that would be acceptable to the United States.

Some West European countries yesterday voiced their opposition to the law on trade unions passed by the Polish parliament. West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher said the recent action taken by Poland was a grave violation of the Helsinki agreements. The French Foreign Ministry expressed its "total reprobation" of the Polish action. The British Foreign Office announced that the British Government regarded the matter as "a further obstacle to the restoration of normal relations" between Britain and Poland.

WORLD'S ECONOMIC PROBLEMS DEBATED AT UNGA

[Text] United Nations, October 12 (XINHUA) -- The current world economic problem was one of the most heatedly debated issues during the past two weeks of the current session of the U.N. General Assembly.

Mexican President Lopez Portillo said that for the poor countries, steadily decreasing income due to the plunge in raw material prices on the one hand, and higher interest rates and shorter terms of payment on the other, constituted "the two blades of a pair of scissors that threaten to slash the momentum achieved in some countries and to cut off the possibilities for progress in the rest."

Many other speakers also pointed out that the brunt of the crisis had fallen on the developing countries. Referring to the seriousness of the situation, Venezuela Foreign Minister Jose Alberto Zambrano Velasco said that the total debt of the developing countries would be more than "the incredible amount" of 600 billion U.S. dollars in 1982, an intolerable burden making them increasingly insolvent.

Yugoslav Foreign Minister Lazar Mojsov said that the greatest responsibility was borne by the most developed countries, whose restrictive economic and monetary policies had deepened recession, increased unemployment, and hampered economic growth in developing countries.

Pakistani Foreign Minister Sahabzada Yaqub Khan stressed that a world economy could only be rebuilt on a sound and permanent foundation of economic efficiency and justice with the full participation of developing countries in international decision-making.

Many Third World nations including Burma, Pakistan, Turkey, Morocco, Somalia, Zambia and Panama made it clear that the way out was to launch global negotiations, improve North-South relations and establish a new international economic order based on equity and justice.

MATERIALS ON U.S. CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS

XINHUA Report

OW090100 Beijing XINHUA in English 1622 GMT 8 Oct 82

[Text] Washington, October 8 (XINHUA) -- With the mid-term congressional election less than a month away, the United States' two major parties, the Republicans and the Democrats, have geared up their campaigns to woo voters who regard the country's economy as the dominating issue.

At stake in the Nov. 2 election are a third of the 100 seats in the Senate and all of the 435 seats in the House of Representatives of the present 97th congress as well as 36 of the country's 50 state governorships.

The U.S. economy is still sunk in a deep recession. Observers say the outcome of the election will be decided by how voters view President Reagan's economic performance during his 22 months in office. It will be a public test on Reaganomics -- the President's conservative economic policies at a time when a recovery has failed to come about contrary to Reagan's predictions, they note.

In the past 13 months, the U.S. industrial production registered drops in 11, though inflation eased to some extent in the past year. In the June to August period this year, the nation's industrial plants were running at below 70 percent of capacity. There have been more bankruptcies and business failures in the past nine months than at any time since the Great Depression of the 1930's. Industrial inventories have increased as sales sharply declined, especially in the automobile, steel and machinery industries.

In these circumstances, recent public opinion polls indicated that uneasiness over the economy has increased. Political analysts say that the Republicans are bound to lose some of their congressional seats, however they might still be able to maintain their majority in the Senate, presently held by a 54-46 margin. As the party that controls the White House usually loses seats in mid-term elections, the Democrats could also make some gains in the House and add to their current 241 majority.

Confronted with the wranglings of heated campaigns, the public has noted that while the Republicans' prescription for the economic ills failed to work as anticipated, the Democrats have not presented an acceptable alternative either. Economic uncertainties will make it a hard choice for most voters in the coming election. It is predicted that only about 56 million, or one third of the total of the eligible voters will cast their ballots. That, if proven right would be the lowest turnout since 1942.

RENMIN RIBAO 28 Sep Article

HK300720 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 28 Sep 82 p 7

[News Analysis by Zhang Dezhen [1728 1795 4176]: "Curtain Raised for U.S. Mid-Term Elections"]

[Text] The United States holds mid-term elections from September to early November and the curtain on this has been raised. In some places, the election campaign has already been carried out.

The mid-term election is a congressional election held between two general elections. According to the U.S. Constitution, Congress is formed by the Senate and the House of Representatives, and all congressmen and senators must be directly elected by the electorate.

With 2 senators elected from each state, there are 100 senators altogether. They are elected for a tenure of 6 years and 1/3 of them are reelected every 2 years. Congressmen are elected according to each state's population and there are currently 435 representatives. They are elected for a tenure of 2 years and all of them must be reelected after their term of office. In the mid-term elections this year, 33 senators and all congressmen are up for reelection to the new 98th congress. Also, governors in 36 states are up for reelection.

As a rule, the congressional election is a fierce struggle between the two big political parties of the capitalists for control of the Congress. In the general elections of 1980, the Republicans defeated the Democrats in the Senate and became the majority party for the first time in 26 years, whereas the Democrats maintained control of the House of Representatives. This year's mid-term election will redefine the relative strength and realignment of the two parties in Congress, thus producing a great impact on the U.S. political situation in the future. Furthermore, this election is actually a "public ballot" for the Reagan administration, which has been in office for almost 2 years, and "President Reagan is an invisible candidate." Therefore, this election is a test for both President Reagan and the Republicans in power.

At present, both the U.S. Government and the American public hold that the economic problem is "the only issue that people would pay attention to" in the election debate. This estimate is not without basis. Although the powerholders in the United States still have different views on the diplomatic policy issue, the Reagan administration, since taking office and after several rounds of debate, has had to give up some ideas raised during the election campaign in the face of harsh reality, and has come to the same "main trend of relative moderation and unanimity as between the two parties in past governments." (comment in CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR). As a result, debate on the issue of diplomatic policy has eased.

Economic problems, however, are a headache for the whole country. Facts have shown that after Reagan came to power, his "economic recovery plan" has neither slowed down the U.S. economic recession nor alleviated the swift ascending of budget deficits. On the contrary, complaints are heard everywhere in the country and the people are discontent with the high unemployment rate of 9.8 percent, the financial deficit of over than $100 billion and continuous high interest rates. Recently the U.S. media were filled with reports of the electorate's "depression" and "disappointment" over Reagan's economic policy. Public polls also indicate that the prestige of Reagan and the Republicans is coming down slightly.

One article in THE WASHINGTON POST says: "Republican candidates will conduct this autumn's election with the worthless stuff of Reagan's economic doctrine." THE INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE also says: "The struggle for the seats in the House of Representatives is the best test of the President's economic plans."

The Democrats, who suffered a serious setback in the last election, have not yet regained their vitality. However, the Republicans' current predicament provides a good chance for the Democrats to stage a comeback. Reportedly, the Democrats, in their election strategy worked out recently, have treated unemployment as the prime issue in an attempt to launch a concentrated attack on Reagan's economic policy. With the method of refuting someone with his own argument, they copy the slogan which Reagan used to curry favor from the electorate in the last election. "Are you better off than you were 2 years ago?" The Democrats, taking advantage of the workers' and blacks' dissatisfaction with Reagan's decision to cut welfare payments, are expanding the contradiction and are doing their utmost to win over the electorate.

Nevertheless, the Democrats should not be too optimistic about their future. According to analyses carried out by the U.S. media and various public opinion organizations, although the Republicans are in an inferior position, this autumn's mid-term election will not bring any conspicuous changes in any realignment of the two parties in Congress.

Currently, the Republicans hold 54 seats in the Senate, the Democrats hold 45 and the nonparty faction holds 1. It is estimated that after the mid-term election, the Republicans will continue to maintain their position as a majority party in the Senate. Of all 435 seats in the House of Representatives, the Democrats now hold 241, the Republicans 192 and 2 positions are vacant. The Democrats might get more seats in the House of Representatives after the election, about 15 seats. Therefore, the situation will remain the same that the Republicans and the Democrats will control the Senate and the House of Representatives, respectively.

According to analyses of the U.S. press, the main reason why people make such estimates is because despite their fierce criticism of the Reagan administration's economic policy, Democrats are at a loss as to what to do in the face of the economic difficulties and are unable to raise any effective economic measures, thus losing support from the electorate.

Meanwhile, due to internal conflict and disintegration within the Democrats, it is difficult for the Democrats to pose a serious threat to the Republicans. The present economic situation is still bad, but the economic recession has already reached bottom as far as the public is concerned. People were somewhat inspired by the recent boom in the stock market and the slow drop in interest rates. At a time when no better methods can be found to overcome economic difficulties, some people said they would give "more time" to the Republicans. Futhermore, election campaign funds are another reason. It was disclosed that the funds raised by the Democrats for the election campaign is less than 1/10 of that raised by the Republicans. The election campaign is something which consumes money in the United States and nothing can be done without sufficient funds.

With the overall development of the mid-term election, various political forces are beginning a fierce rivalry in the United States, and the United States will experience a not very peaceful political situation in the autumn of this year.

DPA Report

LD080938 Hamburg DPA in German 0842 GMT 11 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, 11 Oct (DPA) -- In its new talks with the Soviet Union, China regards a partial reduction of the friction in relations as being possible but does not expect any change in Moscow's hegemonistic policy. Peng Zhen, vice chairman of the National People's Congress, said Monday in Beijing during talks with Federal President Karl Carstens that attempts are being made to "ease somewhat" tension in relations on the government level. These efforts could lead to "certain results." China knows however that Moscow does not want to renounce its hegemonistic strivings, Peng Zhen said, according to the German delegation.

Referring to Leonid Brezhnev's most recent statement on Soviet-Chinese relations, Peng Zhen said that China has been hearing these friendly noises from Moscow more frequently recently.

Commenting on the international situation Peng Zhen said that the danger to world peace comes exclusively from the two superpowers, but primarily from the Soviet Union. Moscow is in particular turning its attention to Europe and the FRG, Peng Zhen said. He spoke in favor of strengthening NATO and the European Community. He described the United States as also being a hegemonistic power and expressed concern over U.S. deliveries of weapons to Taiwan.

In the talks Federal President Carstens paid tribute to China's policy, which is aimed at maintaining world peace. The FRG and China share similar views on many questions. Carstens spoke in favor of close ties between the FRG and the United States. Differences of opinion between Bonn and Washington are problems between friends and can be settled.

[Text] Beijing, Oct. 11 (AFP) -- China today said that detente could be reached in its relations with the Soviet Union, as talks get under way here on normalisation of contacts between the two Communist giants.

But the Chinese optimism, expressed by a top official to visiting West German President Karl Carstens, was accompanied by a reaffirmation that Soviet "hegemonism" constituted the greatest threat to world peace.

Chinese Politburo member Peng Zhen described the Soviet Union as a "tiger in search of a good meal", with the primary threat to Western Europe and then China, West German spokesman Wolfgang Behrends said.

USSR SAID TO FEAR WORSENING RELATIONS WITH FRG

[Text] Moscow, October 5 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet press recently indicated that Moscow is afraid that its relations with West Germany will be come more complicated, with the coming to power of a new West German Government headed by new Chancellor Helmut Kohl.

In the past few days, the Soviet news media stressed that the coalition government formed by the Christian Democratic Union, the Christian Social Union and the Free Democratic Party is a "conservative government". Its policy is "turning to the right" and closer to U.S. President Reagan's philosophy.

What makes Moscow more unhappy is that the Kohl government has made clear its support for NATO's plan to deploy U.S. medium-range missiles in West Germany by the end of 1983.

But the Soviet press believes that the new West German Government will continue to observe the treaties signed with the East and develop economic and trade relations with the Soviet Union. Time will tell to what extent the Kohl government would turn to the right, the Soviet press said.

SOVIET PURCHASE OF U.S. GRAIN REPORTED

[Report: "Soviet Union Will Continue To Buy Large Quantities of Grain From United States"]

[Text] It was reported from Washington that John R. Block, U.S. secretary of agriculture, said recently that the Soviet Union purchased 750,000 tons of maize from the United States on 28 September and that this shipment of grain will be delivered to the Soviet Union from October to December. This was the first Soviet purchase of U.S. grain in the new sales year (starting on 1 October).

According to the U.S.-Soviet agreement on grain sales, the Soviet Union will import at least 6 million tons of grain from the United States in the new sales year.

It has been reported that, in the first half of this year, Soviet imports of U.S. farm products amounted to $1.6 billion, a drastic increase of more than 100 percent over the same period last year ($790 million). The farm products imported from the United States included $790 million worth of wheat, $629 million worth of maize, $171 million worth of soya bean and $22 million worth of sunflower oil.

Due to the continuous poor agricultural harvest, the Soviet purchase of grain from the United States is expected to be at a record level and will very probably exceed that of last year when it imported 14 million tons of grain. From the last 10-day period of September to next year, the Soviet Union will purchase 44 million tons of grain from the United States, Canada, Argentina and Australia.

[Speech by Xi Zhongxun, member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the CPC, secretary of the Secretariat of the party Central Committee and vice chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress of the PRC, at banquet arranged at the People's Palace of Culture on 8 October for the delegation of the PRC's National People's Congress -- read by announcer]

[Text] Esteemed Comrade Pak Song-chol; Esteemed Comrade Hwang Chang-yop; Esteemed Comrade Ho Chong-suk; Dear Comrades:

The delegation of the Chinese National People's Congress [NPC] is wholeheartedly pleased to share this delightful occasion together with old comrades, while visiting, with much delight and deep fraternal feelings, Korea -- a brotherly neighbor -- at the invitation of the Standing Committee of the Supreme People's Assembly [SPA] of the DPRK.

The Standing Committee of the SPA of the DPRK arranged today such a grand banquet to welcome us. Comrade Pak Song-chol just made a warm-hearted speech, expressing the sincere feelings of the Korean people -- feelings between comradely and fraternal comrades-in-arms -- toward the Chinese people. We are deeply impressed by this.

On behalf of the Standing Committee of the NPC of China and all comrades of our delegation, I extend hearty gratitude and lofty respect to the Standing Committee of the SPA of the DPRK which invited our delegation to visit Korea and is according it warm hospitality.

I and comrades of our delegation have long wished to visit Korea. Now, we are very pleased because our wish is fulfilled. (?Five or 6) years ago, a delegation of the DPRK's SPA headed by Vice Chairman Comrade Ho Chong-suk visited our country and made our relations closer.

In particular, the great leader of the Korean people and a close friend of the Chinese people Comrade Kim Il-song paid a historic official state visit to our country after the 12th congress of our party and achieved a satisfactory success [Wonmanhan Songgwa].

During the visit of President Kim Il-song to China, the leaders of the two countries cordially met with each other and had profound exchanges of views, thereby developing relations between the two countries to a new stage.

President Kim Il-song highly estimated the achievements of the Chinese people and the 12th congress of the CPC and gave great support and encouragement to the Chinese people's cause of revolution and construction.

The further development of the friendship and unity between the Chinese and Korean peoples will have a great influence not only on the cause of socialist construction in our two countries but also on the defense of peace of the Asian and world peoples and the strengthening and development of the friendship and cooperation among the countries and peoples of the Third World.

We regard it as very meaningful and glorious that we have visited Korea at this moment.

The Korean people are industrious and courageous and are a great people with glorious revolutionary traditions. We rejoice over the fact that under the wise leadership of the respected and beloved great leader President Kim Il-song and the KWP, you achieved great victories in the struggles against the Japanese imperialists and the U.S. imperialists by waging dauntless struggles. After vanquishing the aggressors, you also surmounted mountains of difficulties, with surprising will. Through your industrious work, you erected a prosperous and developing socialist country which is independent in politics, self-reliant in economy and self-supporting in national defense.

Today, inspired by the slogans urging creation of the speed of the 1980's with the spirit of the era of great upswing of Chollima, holding high the banner of the three revolutions -- ideological, technological and cultural -- the Korean people are again creating the upswing of new construction to attain the second 7-year plan ahead of schedule and to triumphantly realize the grand prospective targets put forth by the Sixth KWP Congress.

The heroic spirit of great prowess displayed by the Korean people in the struggle against foreign aggression and in peaceful construction is a model from which we should learn well. All the successes made by them give boundless joy and great inspiration to the Chinese people.

The Chinese people wholeheartedly wish the fraternal Korean people new, greater successes in their revolution and construction and the DPRK further prosperity.

The Chinese people are deeply interested in the Korean people's cause of the independent and peaceful reunification of the country and have consistently supported the constant efforts exerted by the KWP and the Korean Government for the country's reunification.

The United States has interfered in the internal affairs of Korea, keeping its troops in South Korea for several decades in the past under all excuses and pretexts. This is arousing the resolute opposition of the Korean people and the peoples of many countries of the world because it not only gravely obstructs the cause of Korean reunification but also aggravates tensions in the Korean Peninsula and Northeast Asia.

President Kim Il-song set forth the three principles and five-point policy and the reunification proposal for founding the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo to realize the independent and peaceful reunification of Korea. These proposals indicate correct ways for Korean reunification, being very reasonable and consistent with the fundamental interests and desire of the Korean people.

The Chinese Government and people resolutely support the propositions of President Kim Il-song.

The United States should withdraw its troops from South Korea and renounce its interference in the internal affairs of Korea and its two Koreas plot.

We are convinced that the day will surely come when compatriots in the North and South of Korea will sit together through the constant efforts of the Korean people under the correct leadership of the party and government of Korea [Choson Tonggwa Chongbu].

The friendship between the two parties, two countries and two peoples of China and Korea is indestructible because it has been sealed in blood in a protracted struggle and has pulled through rigorous tests of history.

The Chinese people support China-Korea friendship and will make all efforts to pass it on generation after generation.

Whatever may happen in the world in the future, the Chinese people will, as in the past, so in the future too, struggle shoulder-to-shoulder together with the Korean people.

In conclusion, I propose to drink a toast to the great friendship and militant unity between the peoples of China and Korea, to the good health and long life of the Comrade President Kim Il-song, the great leader of the Korean people and a close friend of the Chinese people, to the good health of the dear leader of the Korean People Comrade Secretary Kim Chong-il, to the good health of Comrade Pak Song-chol, to the good health of Comrade Hwang Chang-yop, to the good health of Comrade Ho Chong-suk, and to the good health of Korean comrades present here.

JAPAN TO TAKE MEASURES ON ECONOMIC DIFFICULTIES

[Text] Tokyo, October 8 (XINHUA) -- The Japanese Cabinet in a session this morning decided to take measures to overcome the grave economic difficulties.

Finance Minister Michio Watanabe told reporters this afternoon that these measures include increasing investment in public services, building more houses, helping depressed industries, improving the relationship between supply and demand, and widening employment opportunities.

Different views exist in both the government and financial circles on how to assess the present domestic economic situation and ways to solve economic problems. Some hold that "the Japanese economy has slumped to the lowest point in the past 26 years." They stand for issuance of more government bonds, increase of investments in public services and reduction of taxes. Others hold that "the economic situation is comparatively good," "there is no economic crisis" and "the financial unbalance is normal." They prefer reduction of financial expenses and increase of taxes so as to make up the financial deficits and keep a low-speed growth rate.

The Japanese press terms the decision made at today's cabinet session as "a compromise" between the different views. It doubts whether such a decision will work.

RENMIN RIBAO EDITORIAL ON CAPITAL CONSTRUCTION

[Editorial: "Attain Better Results in Investment in Capital Construction"]

[Text] The length of the construction cycle has a direct bearing on bringing the returns on investment into play. According to rough estimates, shortening the construction time for projects throughout the country by 1 year would save several billion yuan in capital construction management costs. If the profits and taxes created as a result of going into production ahead of schedule are added, the economic returns would be even greater. Therefore, the important task on the capital construction front is to shorten the construction time by every possible means.

Admittedly carrying out the four modernizations depends on the amount of investment the state has available for capital construction. At the same time, it also depends on how effectively the funds are utilized. Under the condition of there being no change in the total amount of investment, the better the utilization, the greater will be the returns and the faster will be the rate of economic development. However, not all comrades understand this very clearly. The phenomenon of paying attention only to projects and appearances but not to economic returns still exists in varying degrees. Especially in the employment of investment, there is no concept of economy, turnover, time or recovery. Moreover, this problem is not limited to individual units. Comrade Hu Yaobang in his report to the 12th party congress pointed out the necessity of shifting all economic work to the path centered on raising economic returns. This point is particularly important on the capital construction front. The capital construction front shoulders the task of large-scale construction. Should there be the slightest negligence in thinking, the slightest mistake in planning or the slightest slackening in management, the construction of the state would suffer serious losses. We must make a change in mentality and really set our sights on raising the returns on investment.

During the period of the First 5-Year Plan in our country, the construction time as well as returns on investment of capital construction were both relatively good. The average time for the construction of a 600,000-ton-capacity coal mine was 29 months. The construction of an enterprise the scale of the Gansu silver nonferrous metals company also only took 3 years. At present, in such vital trades as industry and communications, the construction time for a large or medium-size project on a similar scale is double that of the First 5-Year Plan period. It should be said that things which have been done before or have been done by other projects can also be done as long as people use their heads, discover means, offer suggestions and carry out measures of reform.

Not long ago the State Economic Commission held a symposium to sum up and exchange experiences on shortening construction time and raising the returns on investment. Shortening construction time involves a wide range of factors and requires concerted efforts from various aspects. From the macroscopic aspect, there must be correct policies and measures. For example, the scale of construction must be appropriate, the orientation of investment and distribution of industry must be rational and the construction plans must be realistic and practical. From the microscopic aspect, judging from present conditions, it is necessary to conscientiously grasp the following links.

Make a success of the advance preparations for construction projects. In the future, regardless of the projects using foreign investment or the projects using funds inside the country, it is necessary to change the situation of capital construction not being carried out in accordance with procedure, and there must no longer be such things as conducting surveys along with preparing designs and carrying out construction. In the past we were often eager for quick success and begrudged spending money on preparations. Consequently we wasted a great deal of money. In the future all projects which must be carried out in the next 5 years must be based on the technical evaluation of the previous 5 years, and feasibility studies, surveys and designs should be made before actual construction starts.

We must not decide on a project or start a project while still making evaluations. As for backbone projects, we must make preparations even earlier. We must list a schedule of when surveys have been completed and when to produce designs, and we must have special people responsible for the work until it is completed. Only in this way can we avoid the mistake of making a frantic last-minute effort or hastily starting a project, cast off the passive situation and really succeed in shortening the construction time and raising the return on investment.

Gradually promote and perfect the economic responsibility system with investment contracts as the principal content. This is a highly effective method for shortening the construction time and raising returns. In the last several years, for the sake of changing the phenomenon of unrestrained wasting of money and "eating out of a big pot," many districts and departments have instituted various forms of investment contract.

The Ministry of Commerce has 13 cold storage projects under construction. By instituting the method of contracts at two levels between the ministry and the provincial and municipal departments and bureaus of commerce and between the departments and bureaus of commerce and the construction units, it has saved 5 percent in investment and also greatly shortened construction time.

The Ministry of Coal Industry has carried out investment contracts, and construction time and quality contracts on a trial basis for 37 small and medium-size coal mines. It estimated that the average investment for each ton of coal could be reduced from 113 yuan several years ago to 104 yuan and average construction time could be shortened from 95 months to 38 months. Many districts such as Changzhou, Xian and Tangshan have also entered into contracts for the building of civilian houses based on blocks or on square meters. They have all succeeded in shortening construction time, improving quality and saving on investment. Naturally, the contract methods instituted at present are still not altogether perfect, but they have already played a very useful role in saving on investment and speeding up the progress of the projects. In the future we must further perfect and energetically popularize them. Regardless of large or small projects and regardless of new construction, extension or rebuilding, we must actively create conditions and integrate the respective characteristics of the investment contracts instituted.

Strengthen the basic work of capital construction management. This is also an important link in shortening the construction time and raising returns. At present this aspect of work is fairly weak. The effective things of the past swept away during the 10 years of turmoil have still not been completely restored. Certain standards, regulations and quotas currently in effect still cannot keep abreast of the changing conditions and urgently need to be revised and supplemented. This work is indispensable for guaranteeing the smooth progress of capital construction. It is the basis for calculating the amount of investment, construction time and material depletion as well as the basis for strengthening planned management, survey and design management and construction management, checking and accepting completed projects and examining economic results. Also we must make proper arrangements to synchronize the construction of the main project and its related projects. Otherwise, despite the fact that the main project is well ahead and being rapidly carried out, if the related projects and lagging behind, the whole project will still be delayed and be unable to be put into production.

The 12th party congress has put forward a formidable construction goal for the next 20 years. The capital construction departments shoulder a very arduous task. We must fully arouse the socialist enthusiasm of the broad masses of workers, carry out meticulous and thoroughgoing work, and conscientiously and earnestly use the best economic returns to create a new situation in capital construction.

BAN YUE TAN STRESSES MODERNIZATION SPIRIT

[Text] Beijing, 10 Oct (XINHUA) -- Issue No 19 of BAN YUE TAN published today carries a commentator's article: "Rise With Spirit and Forge Ahead." The full text of the article reads as follows:

The 12th CPC National Congress has formulated a great program for modernizing the motherland and has called on the whole party to strive to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. Presently, the broad masses of party members, cadres and people in cities, towns and villages throughout the country are diligently studying the documents, holding lively discussion and giving considerable thought to them.

What should the attitude and style of every Communist Party member, leading cadres and citizen be in order to accomplish the great historical task of creating a new situation and building our country into a modern socialist power? Comrade Hu Yaobang summarized this question in a brief passage in his report, delivered at the 12th CPC National Congress, that is, rise with spirit and forge ahead indomitably and indefatigably.

To rise with spirit means to fill oneself with a positive and enterprising spirit to create a new situation, the spirit to dedicate oneself to the great cause of communism. During the difficult years of the revolutionary war, we relied on such revolutionary spirit in overcoming obstacles one after another and liberating the motherland, thus ushering in a magnificant dawn after a long dark night. During the years of socialist revolution and construction, we too relied on the spirit to resist the blockade and pressure of imperialism and hegemonism and get rid of various interferences and damages, winning great successes in socialist construction. From now on, we shall still have to rely on the spirit to accomplish the great historical task. Every individual must maintain excellent spirit in studying diligently, working untiringly and performing meritorious deeds for the great cause.

To forge ahead means that, as pioneers of a new journey, we must dare to search for new roads, carry out innovations and create a new situation. Ours is a big country with a billion people, including 800 million peasants. To turn the country into a modern socialist power with a high level of civilization and democracy is indeed one of the "most gigantic creative undertakings in human history." Many problems involved in it were not, and could not have been, raised or solved by Marxists in the past. In view of the long and difficult journey, we must rise with spirit and forge ahead. While advancing in our undertaking, it is imperative to adhere to the various principles and policies formulated by the 12th CPC National Congress and resolutely oppose both the "leftist" tendency of trying to revert to the erroneous theories and policies which prevailed during and before the "great Cultural Revolution" and the rightist tendency of bourgeois liberalization as reflected in distrust or rejection of the four fundamental principles. In the new great undertaking we must be good at studying, learning new things, solving new problems and accumulating new experiences. Every comrade must display great enthusiasm and creativity in doing his job and make new contributions to our common cause.

Indomitable spirit is a required communist characteristic and an important condition for ensuring continuous victories in the cause of socialism and communism. In making every advance in the cause of socialism and communism, we will encounter difficulties of all sorts and other inevitable setbacks. Therefore, we must be imbued with an indomitable and daring spirit, never be shaken by difficulties and frustrated by setbacks, and exert every effort to overcome difficulties. We must also draw lessons from setbacks and steadfastly and confidently march towards our targeted goal. We have only one conviction in our mind, that is, the cause of communism -- the most gigantic undertaking of mankind -- will definitely triumph. The practice of struggle has already proven that, owing to the indomitable spirit, our party has withstood all severe tests and made advances in both revolution and construction.

Indefatigability is a revolutionary spirit required by communist world outlook. As the universe moves ceaselessly, revolution and construction develop endlessly. We must keep on learning and working as long as we live, never display arrogance and struggle indefatigably. The prosperity of our socialist cause, country and all its nationalities depends, not on temporal enthusiasm, but on protracted and unremitting efforts by the whole people.

In all, the correct attitude for Marxists in the face of difficulties, the revolutionary style for communists striving to create a new situation, is to rise with spirit and forge ahead indomitably and indefatigably. With this correct attitude and revolutionary style there are great hopes for our cause.

As we are guided by the banner of the 12th CPC National Congress and led by the new party Central Committee, the gigantic construction plan formulated by the 12th congress will definitely become a brilliant reality.

LEADING CADRES MUST INVESTIGATE GRASSROOTS

["Short" commentary: "Leading Cadres Must Go to the Grassroots To Carry Out Investigations"]

[Text] The 12th CPC Congress has issued a call: Create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. What kind of attitude should leading organs and cadres have in accepting this great historical task? The methods of the PLA General Logistics Department deserve recommendation. It seems that there is a necessity to make this slogan a great call: In order to attain the four modernizations, leading cadres must go to the grassroots levels to carry out investigations.

It shows the fine spirit of our party that leading cadres go deep to the grassroots levels to make investigations and solve problems practically. The new conditions and problems that emerge in the course of the four modernizations call for study and solution. Provided that leading cadres leave their offices and go to the grassroots levels to make investigations, they can obtain a vast amount of firsthand information and make correct judgments and decisions. Sitting in the office the whole day long, without making any investigations or study but relying on reports and drawing hollow plans, they either dispute over endless trifles or make impractical or even wrong decisions. This is a conspicuous manifestation of an improper party work style and it is incompatible with the new circumstances of creating a new situation.

Making investigation provides knowledge that is very concrete, complex and meticulous. It is also a basic art for leading organs and cadres. At present, through the simplication and reorganization of leading organs, our work style is continuously improving and the work of investigation should be rapidly launched. We must try to change the fact of leading cadres not taking the lead in going to the grass roots levels under the excuse of busy work and the fact of working personnel not willing to go to the grassroot levels. In making investigations we must persist in going to the grassroot levels, be one with the masses and together discuss the methods for solving problems. We must propose the method of making investigations and solving the problems at the same time, while immediately implementing those matters that can be decided on the spot and putting forward plans for those matters that need to be considered carefully. The improper work style of neither nodding nor shaking, in other words shirking responsibility to the top and lower levels, must be prevented. We must also stop the phenomenon of being "imperial envoys," seeking personal privileges and having many attendants crowding around.

Comrade Chen Yun pointed out: "In formulating policies, leading organs must use more than 90 percent of the time in making investigations, and only less than 10 percent of the time in the final discussion and decision." The whole party, particularly leading party cadres must rouse their enthusiasm, make arduous efforts, earnestly do a good job in investigation, solve problems in a down-to-earth manner and make a contribution in creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

HALF OF LEADING CADRES TRAINED IN PAST 3 YEARS

[Text] Beijing, October 12 (XINHUA) -- More than 200,000 leading cadres above county level have received training over the past three years, according to a report in GUANGMING DAILY. The figure accounts for over 50 percent of the total cadres on the job above county level. Most of them are middle-aged and young men chosen from among the party organizations at all levels, a significant percentage of them are also technicians in various fields of work.

Over two years ago, the Communist Party of China set the goal of making the ranks of cadres more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent. Since then, more than 8,100 party schools and professional cadre training schools have been reopened and established. In addition, more than 130 institutions of higher learning have offered professional training courses for emerging party leaders.

In the future, educational background and academic records will play an important part in promoting cadres, according to party General Secretary Hu Yaobang.

According to the GUANGMING DAILY report, 62 percent of the directors and vice-directors of the economic commissions of various provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions and 64 percent of leading cadres of enterprises above county level have received training in enterprise management.

In the agricultural system, 62,000 leading cadres have gone through training of one kind or another. The party secretaries and county heads of the more than 2,000 counties have completed their training program.

LEADING PLA CADRES STUDY CPC CONGRESS DOCUMENTS

[Text] Beijing, 9 Oct (XINHUA) -- Leading cadres at or above division level and propaganda and theorist cadres attending a training class run by the PLA General Staff Department have studied the documents of the 12th party congress and concentrated on grasping their essence in four aspects.

The training class has stressed that they should concentrate their main energies on grasping the essence of these documents. This is what they have done:

1. In connection with their study of the basic theory of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, they have deepened their understanding of the essence of the 12th party congress' documents. While repeatedly reading the congress documents, they, with major questions in mind, have studied relevant works by Marx, Lenin and Comrade Mao Zedong, as well as some important documents formulated since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, including the relevant theses by leading comrades of the party Central Committee, thus understanding such questions and finding answers to them, theoretically and practically.

2. In connection with a review of the history of the party, they have understood the historical role and great significance of the 12th party congress. While studying these documents they have compared the 12th party congress with the 7th and 8th party congresses. By so doing, they have deepened their understanding of the two theses that the 12th party congress "is the most important meeting since the 7th party congress" and that this congress "will go down in the party's history as one which creates a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization." Comrades said: The 7th party congress summed up the experiences gained in the tortuous development of the democratic revolution in the previous 20 years and more, raised the whole party's understanding of the laws governing the democratic revolution and formulated a program and line for founding a new democratic China, thus laying a foundation for the victory of the democratic revolution.

The 12th party congress summed up the experiences gained in the tortuous development of the socialist revolution and construction over the past 20-odd years and put forward a program and line for bringing about a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization in our country. This shows that our party now has a far more profound understanding of the laws governing socialist construction and much rich experience in this regard and that our party is more mature.

3. In connection with summing up practical experiences since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, they have, in view of the victory won in bringing order out of chaos, understood the correctness of the line, principles and policies laid down by the 12th party congress. In accordance with the seven main indicators of historic change and what they have seen and heard, they have freely discussed the excellent situation on the country's various fronts. Particularly in light of the actual conditions in the PLA General Staff Department, they have analyzed the gratifying changes and progress made since Comrade Deng Xiaoping presided over the work of the Military Commission. Thus, they have ever firmer faith in the correct leadership of the party Central Committee and are full of confidence in the bright future of the party and the state. They said: The party's lines, principles and polices laid down since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee are suited to our country's conditions, accord with the common aspirations of the people and have incomparable might. The 12th party congress full affirmed, enriched and developed the party's lines, principles and policies laid down since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. As long as we make efforts to turn them into conscious action by the masses, our party and state will certainly become more prosperous.

4. In connection with making an analysis of their personal ideological conditions and of those in their own units, they have achieved unity in action on the basis of the guidelines laid down by the 12th party congress. While studying the documents of the 12th party congress according to actual conditions, they have used the guidelines of the congress as a weapon to solve their questions in ideology and understanding. By having a comprehensive, correct understanding of the situation and proceeding from a clear understanding of the country's conditions, they have further deepened their grasp of the party's present principles and policies, thus firmly believing that the party Central Committee is capable of having complicated situations well in hand and leading socialist modernization to victory and that the four modernizations are bound to be successful.

RENMIN RIBAO ON LITERATURE, ART CREATIVITY

HK080935 Beijing REMIN RIBAO in Chinese 6 Oct 82 p 5

[Commentator's article: "Create a New Situation of Vigorous and Flourishing Literature and Art"]

[Text] Following the victorious conclusion of the 12th CPC National Congress, which is of great historic significance, the whole party and the people of various nationalities of the country, under the resolute leadership of the party's Central Committee, are uniting together and fighting for the realization of the programs and goals formulated by the 12th CPC Congress and the creation of a new situation in socialist construction for modernization. Full of high spirit, the literature and art personnel in the country are determined to dedicate their wisdom and strength to the construction of socialist spiritual civilization with the communist ideology as its core.

In his report to the 12th CPC Congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang encouraged us by quoting some remarks made by Lenin, saying: "Lenin once said that creative and vigorous socialism was made by people themselves. Undoubtedly, without passionate labor enthusiasm of the broad masses, without the creative initiative of thousands upon thousands of production units and without the vigorous fighting of various areas and departments, the prosperous development of socialist construction would be impossible." These vivid and inspiring words strikingly reveal where the crux lies in undertaking the great cause.

In order to create a completely new situation in the construction of socialist modernization, it is necessary to evoke people's enthusiasm in fighting for the communist cause as well as their fervent labor passion and creative initiative. This is extremely important to the literature and art personnel who are undertaking the lofty mission of building socialist spiritual civilization. The literature and art cause is a creative one and it is absolutely impossible to create a new situation of flourishing socialist literature and art without enthusiasm, labor passion and creative initiative.

Since the smashing of the "gang of four" and particularly since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the vast number of literature and art personnel have emancipated themselves from the spiritual shackles of the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counter-revolutionary cliques and have raised their enthusiasm in creating literary and art works for socialism. In recent years, "letting a hundred flowers blossom" has flourished in the fields of literature, drama, film, fine arts, music, dance, folk art and photography. Some excellent works have been produced and a number of talented people have emerged. This remarkable achievement is the main trend of our socialist literature and art. While great achievements have been scored on the literary and art front, there have appeared some unhealthy and wrong ideas and works, as well as the tendency of bourgeois liberalism. Under the leadership of the CPC Central Committee, this right deviation, just like the "leftist" one, has been criticized and is being rectified. The situation on the literary and art front is excellent and inspiring.

The 12th CPC Congress restated the task which has been solemnly raised by the party many times: While building a high degree of material civilization, we must do our utmost to build a high degree of socialist spiritual civilization. Literature and art is an important component part of the construction of spiritual construction. Excellent literary and art works must, through vivid and moving artistic images, subtly educate and imperceptibly mold the broad masses. Our literature and art must not only provide people with noble spiritual enjoyment, but must also play its specific role of propagating advanced ideology and transforming social members into laborers with ideals, morality, culture and discipline. Therefore, we must understand fully that literature and art take up a glorious and difficult task in the construction of socialist spiritual civilization.

In order to create a new situation of vigorous and flourishing literature and art, it is necessary for the literature and art personnel to raise their awareness of social responsibilities, and actively create excellent works reflecting the conspicuous spirit of the era, so as to supply the best spiritual food to the people. Encouraged by the 12th CPC Congress, our party and the people all over the country have realized their goal more clearly and have raised their confidence as well. Clear understanding and unanimity of ideology certainly provides room for us to bring into full play our initiative and enthusiasm and also creates conditions for bold action.

In order to create a new situation of vigorous and flourishing literature and art, we must first of all study hard. More recently, the CPC Central Committee called on us to treat as the prime issue the study of the 12th CPC Congress documents, which, the main ones in particular, are the summation of historical experience as well as the essence of collective wisdom. Only through study can we attain ideological unanimity within the party and guarantee the implementation of the policies and tasks put forward by the 12th CPC Congress. As far as the literature and art personnel are concerned, only by studying well the 12th CPC Congress documents and by truly mastering the weapons for building spiritual civilization, can they have a clear guiding idea in their literary and art creation. In recent years, one or two literature and art personnel have neglected the study of the basic theory of Marxism. Obviously various defects as shown in a handful of people's works are closely associated with their lack of theoretical knowledge and their low Marxist understanding. In order to create a new situation of vigorous and flourishing literature and art, we must first of all lay stress on study and bring about a new development and uplifting of ideological understanding.

In order to create a new situation of vigorous and flourishing literature and art, we must also properly resolve the problem of going deep into life. With the overall upsurge of socialist construction for modernization, deep changes will inevitably take place in social life. Heroes and models who fight for and dedicate their lives to revolutionary ideals will continuously emerge in real life. "Heroes and talents are but within one stride." If writers and artists fail to go deep into the real life which is changing at every moment, how can they understand and reflect "new people and the new world?" If they fail to go deep into the mainstream of life and throb with the pulse of our era, how can they seize those people and deeds shining with communist ideology? Only by deeply understanding the real life which is favorably developing and changing, can we genuinely reflect our great era and extol the new people with communist ideology.

We sincerely hope that the vast number of literature and art personnel, inspired by the 12th CPC Congress spirit, will unite more closely, brace themselves up, pool their wisdom and efforts, and make their contributions to the creation of a new situation of vigorous and flourishing literature and art.

CHEN YUN COMMENTS ON 10 OCT RADIO DRAMA

[Text] Beijing, 9 Oct (XINHUA) -- According to a 9 October GUANGBO JIEMU BAO [RADIO SCHEDULE NEWS] report: Comrade Chen Yun met with Liu Baoyi, playwright-director of the radio drama "Sincerity and Insincerity," [zhen yu jia 4176 5280 0250] at Zhongnanhai on 20 September and commented on the drama.

The radio drama "Sincerity and Insincerity" was created in accordance with Comrade Chen Yun's suggestion on adapting the tanci [storytelling in various southern dialects to the accompaniment of stringed instruments] "true feelings and hypocrisy" to other types of drama. It depicts the two opposite attitudes assumed by twin sisters Dong Qingqing and Dong Peipei towards Yu Gang who injured both his eyes while protecting state property. It thus creates a sharp contrast between the true, the good and the beautiful, and the sham, the ugly and the evil. It exposes and criticizes Elder Sister Qingqing's ugly soul, intent on nothing but profit, and praises Younger Sister Peipei's lofty sentiments. Comrade Chen Yun regards this drama as a success.

He said: The adaption of the tanci "true feelings and hypocrisy" to radio drama in the common spoken language can make it spread far and wide and educate more youths. With the flavor of the present era and immediate significance, it is a good work suitable for the education of youth.

Then Comrade Chen Yun pointed out the shortcoming of the drama. He suggested that several passages on Dong Qingqing's unhealthy tendencies be added to the radio drama. He said that the exposure of negative and erroneous things could play the role of positive education.

In accordance with Comrade Chen Yun's opinion, the Central People's Broadcasting Station has revised the radio drama "Sincerity and Insincerity." The revised version will be premiered on the air on 10 October.

CPC DISCIPLINE COMMISSION ISSUES CIRCULAR

[Text] Beijing, 11 Oct (XINHUA) -- The CPC Central Commission for Discipline Inspection recently issued a circular calling on party organizations at all levels and all party members to take immediate action to stop the unhealthy tendency in construction and distribution of houses.

The circular says: Inspired by the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress, new progress is being made in all fields of work throughout the country. As a whole, the party style is also turning for the better.

However, unhealthy tendencies among party members and cadres in some places are still very serious. A conspicuous example is the continuing unhealthy tendency in construction and distribution of houses. The Beijing Municipal CPC Committee's Discipline Inspection Committee has recently issued a "Circular on the Five Cases of Disciplinary Violation in Handling House Construction and Distribution." This shows that the committee has paid great attention to such problems and taken a firm attitude. It discovered several typical cases and immediately handled them in a serious manner. This helps put an end to the unhealthy tendency. Now, a summary of the Beijing discipline inspection committee's circular is hereby distributed. Party committees and discipline inspection committees everywhere must take decisive and effective measures to firmly stop the unhealthy tendency in housing construction and distribution by absorbing Beijing's experience and taking into consideration their own respective practical conditions. Discipline inspection committees at all levels must pay the greatest attention to investigating and handling such cases and in particular to solving the problems in such localities and units where the unhealthy tendency is especially serious. They should also immediately report to the higher level how they have solved such problems. The discipline inspection committees under the provincial, municipal and autonomous regional CPC committees should make a final report to the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection by the end of this year. Meanwhile, party organizations and members in Beijing are expected to persist in their struggle against unhealthy tendencies, under the leadership of the Beijing Municipal CPC Committee, so that the capital of Beijing may play an exemplary role in building socialist spiritual civilization and in attaining a decisive turn for the better in party style.

The circular points out: The masses of the people are urgently demanding a solution to housing problems as the national economy is developing and the people's livelihood is gradually improving. The state supports and encourages all these methods: gradually repairing and constructing houses by the state, local authorities, collectives and individuals, according to their respective financial capabilities, construction by the people themselves, construction by the people with government assistance, or construction by collectives for distribution among, or for rent and sale to, the people. All these methods should be continued. Fair and reasonable distribution of houses concerns the people's immediate interests and, therefore, should be strictly adhered to. Some party members and cadres, indeed, have housing problems. These must be gradually and reasonably solved, within the framework of the state's financial policy and related systems and regulations. Currently, some party members and cadres are abusing their powers, stealing properties of the state or collectives at will, building private houses on public land and with public labor, or playing tricks and cheating all people concerned to occupy more spaces or forcibly occupy new houses in the course of housing distribution. Such unhealthy practices and law and discipline violations in total disregard of the masses' welfare and the party's image are incompatible with the required quality of communists. These have evoked the masses' extreme resentment, seriously impaired the party's prestige and caused immense harm.

The circular says: To prevent and correct the unhealthy tendency in housing construction and distribution, the party Central Committee has issued "Some Regulations About Treatment of Senior Cadres in Their Daily Life;" the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection has twice issued circulars, one in August 1981 and another in August this year; and the State Council approved and circulated, in January this year, the minutes of the second nationwide meeting on housing construction in the countryside. Clear-cut and specific regulations have thus been repeatedly issued. However, many party organizations did not attach sufficient importance to them. Some leading organs, weak and ineffective, failed to strictly implement the related regulations, make thorough investigations, handle investigation results, and sternly and effectively stop such evil practices. Some leading cadres did not keep to the principle and dared not wage a struggle against this evil practice. Not impeccable themselves, some party members and cadres, by example, encouraged the evil practices. Continuance of this condition cannot be tolerated anymore.

The circular points out: The party constitution passed by the 12th CPC National Congress stipulates that party members should "be the first to bear hardships and the last to enjoy comforts, work selflessly for the public interest, and absolutely never use public office for personal gain or benefit themselves at the expense of the public; that party cadres at all levels must observe and uphold the rules and regulations of the party and the state, and combat all acts of abusing power and seeking personal gain." If a party member or a cadre fails to act according to the party constitution, it should be examined whether he or she is qualified to be a Communist Party member and whether he or she can be a leading cadre anymore. Consequently, party organizations should deal with them accordingly.

The circular says: The 12th CPC National Congress has decided to effect a fundamental turn for the better in the style of the party within the next 5 years. This task should be started right now. The serious unhealthy tendency reflected in housing construction and distribution should be firmly handled. All cases of evil practice should be corrected and dealt with as soon as they are discovered. All party organizations must teach party members to strictly observe the party constitution. Regarding those who have committed mistakes in the course of housing construction and distribution, they must return what they have taken or pay compensation for it and they must be punished as they should be, depending on the nature of the cases they are involved in. They must never be indulged or accommodated. All leading cadres have the responsibility to stop such unhealthy tendencies. If they fail to combat or handle any known irregularities, they will be charged with dereliction of duty. If they shield and abet these irregularities, they will be punished for violation of the party constitution. To answer the call of the 12th congress, all party organizations and members must get mobilized to wage a resolute struggle in maintaining the party discipline.

WANG BINGQIAN ADDRESSES FINANCIAL WORK MEETING

[Text] Beijing, 9 Oct (XINHUA) -- Speaking at the current national financial work conference, Finance Minister Wang Bingqian said: To bring about a fundamental turn for the better in the financial situation in the coming 5 years and accomplish the financial task in the new periods put forward by the 12th CPC National Congress, it is necessary to focus all financial work on the attainment of better economic results and achieve progress in opening up a new situation as quickly as possible.

Wang Bingqian said: To quadruple the annual industrial and agricultural output value in 20 years and gradually raise the people's livelihood to a comparatively well-off level require unremitting efforts by all trades and professions. Take the financial department for instance. We must coordinate with departments concerned, try our best to gradually solve the essential problem of a shortage of funds to promote construction in all fields, energy and transportation in particular. He pointed out: In financial work, we have reached a fairly good starting point. Thanks to efforts over the past more than 30 years, we have accumulated considerable assets, with some 500 billion yuan of fixed assets and 300 billion yuan of circulating funds. There is great potential for increasing revenue and cutting expenditure in all fields. Chances for tapping potential are everywhere. The problem facing us is how to turn potential into real strength. At present the party Central Committee and party committees in all localities have attached great importance to financial work and all trades and professions have paid keen attention to raising their economic results. As long as we do our work with added vigor, we will be able to solve the shortage of funds and attain the strategic objective set down by the 12th CPC National Congress.

Wang Bingqian said: The attainment of a fundamental turn for the better in the financial situation will be marked by a steady basic balance in finance and credit and subsequent total balance after making continuous efforts for some time.

Meanwhile, it is also necessary to gradually increase financial reserves in order to accumulate strength for future economic undertakings. He said: To achieve a balance between finance and credit, we should start from developing production and raising the economic results and pay attention to the method for creating, accumulating and using wealth, thereby increasing revenues and saving expenditures to ensure the construction of key projects urgently needed by the state and continue to improve the people's livelihood.

A balance can remain stable and strong only when it is based on the steady development of the economy. To achieve this it is necessary to bring about a tremendous change in financial work, a change which will make it possible for financial work to center on better economic results, to concentrate on the promotion of production and effective management, to stress beneficial results and to combat waste. In addition, financial departments should coordinate with other departments concerned in raising enterprises' income rate, the turnover rate of circulating funds and the recouping rate of investment in capital construction. Ideas, such as requesting funds from financial departments at every turn and living on the state by "sharing food from the same big pot" must be opposed. We should focus on tapping potential and do everything we can to request less or even no funds for our work; whenever we request funds for given work, we must do it well. It is necessary to rationally allocate funds, strengthen management, make overall planning for state funds for various purposes and use them where they are most needed.

Wang Bingqian stressed that it is necessary to raise our financial work to a new level in order to fulfill our financial tasks for the new period. He said: Many new situations and problems have occurred and fresh experiences have been gained in the economic life of our state. In further readjustment, restructuring, reorganization and updating of the national economy, we shall continue to encounter new situations and problems and gain fresh experiences. For example, there are now problems in reforming the economic system, further readjusting the economic structure, technically transforming existing enterprises, updating industrial products and producing a new generation of such products, as well as the question of how to use foreign funds more effectively and of new problems occurring in the supply and marketing of commodities in the domestic market. All such problems are closely related to the distribution of financial revenues and the taxation system. This call for us to systematically study theories on finance and economics and the party's financial and economic policies, to deepen our study of various practical problems and to come up with correct solutions to such problems and measures to systematically handle them. We cannot make any progress if we do not study and work hard. Under the leadership of the party Central Committee and the State Council, we must study hard, ponder problems carefully, have courage to carry out reforms and do practical work, and be good at managing money matters in oreer to bring about a new situation in financial work as soon as possible.

WEN WEI PO REPORTS ON PRC-USSR TALKS, RELATIONS

Peng Zhen Cited

[Dispatch from Cheng Hsiang [4453 5046]: "Peng Zhen Speaks on Sino-Soviet Relations"]

[Text] Beijing, 11 Oct -- Today, NPC Vice Chairman Peng Zhen told West German President Karl Carstens that China is attempting to improve relations with the Soviet Union and efforts in this respect should be able [yinggai keyi: 2019 6115 0668 0110] to achieve some success. Peng Zhen said this to the West German guest at a time when China and the Soviet Union are holding talks to normalize their relations. Negotiations between the vice ministers of China and the Soviet Union already began last week, but so far neither side has disclosed anything about the talks. Therefore, what Peng Zhen said has attracted the attention of diplomats here.

According to reports, Peng Zhen told Carstens that China and the Soviet Union have held another round of talks of partially easing relations between the two countries. China believes that the tense relations at present can be eased but does not believe the Soviet Union will change its hegemonist policy.

Peng Zhen said: Lately, Brezhnev has repeatedly put on a conciliatory pose. However, to China, concrete actions are more important. According to reports, Peng Zhen also said: The Sino-Soviet border is several thousand kilometers long and the Soviet Union could launch an aggression at any time. However, China does not fear this because the Soviet army of 1 million soldiers deployed on its border is not capable of defeating China. He also reiterated that China has neither the intention of invading the Soviet Union nor the strength to attack it.

Regarding the international situation, Peng Zhen said: While the two superpowers -- the Soviet Union and the United States -- are both contending for world domination, which constitutes a serious threat to world peace, the major threat is made by the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union is like a tiger covetous of delicious food and is gazing at Western Europe and West Germany. Therefore, a strong NATO and EEC are very important for peace in Europe.

Peng Zhen expressed: The United States is also a hegemonist country. It stubbornly persists in arms sales to Taiwan. This has caused China to be concerned about relations between the two countries. China hopes to resolve the Taiwan issue by peaceful means. Therefore, China is willing to wait patiently but this is entirely China's internal affair.

Carstens expressed his appreciation for China's efforts to safeguard world peace. He said China's words and deeds are aimed at the goal of world peace. China and West Germany share many common views. West Germany attaches great importance to China's position in the Third World. He also talked about FRG-U.S. and FRG-Soviet relations. He stressed that contradictions between West Germany and the United States appear to be differences between friends and will not be difficult to resolve.

[Editorial: "The Future of Sino-Soviet Relations Is Under Exploration"]

[Excerpts] The arrival of Mr Leonid Ilichev in Beijing has touched off some conjecture on Sino-Soviet relations.

Mr Ilichev, a Soviet expert in Chinese affairs, was once chief representative in the negotiations on the Sino-Soviet border dispute. During his current visit as a government representative, he is to have exploratory consultations for seeking possible negotiations between the two sides. Such an important figure will consult on so important a problem. This undoubtedly gave rise to attention from around the world.

The border talks between China and the Soviet Union were abruptly broken off after the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. This shows China's clear-cut and persistent stand on combating hegemonism. The Afghanistan issue is not settled yet and things have changed little. The United States has resumed its wheat sales to the Soviet Union. West European countries are working in cooperation with the Soviet Union to exploit natural gas in Siberia. The Soviet Union has time and again asked China to have talks for improving bilateral relations. Under such circumstances, it is understandable that China and the Soviet Union should resume their diplomatic contacts.

Sino-U.S. relations were once at a low ebb as a result of the U.S. arms sales to Taiwan. Then the Soviet Foreign Ministry in the middle of February appealed to resume border talks with China. In March Brezhnev made a speech on this subject in Tashkent. In September he again made a similar speech in Baku. In his speeches, Brezhnev seemed to be impatient in seeking improvements in Sino-Soviet relations. But this was still empty talk as his actions were still as slow as before. For this reason, China admonished that it would judge people by their deeds, not their words, and will wait and see.

Hence, changes in Sino-Soviet relations are not expected. During its recent talks with the United States, China did not denounce the Soviet Union for its hegemonism and territorial expansionism. This does not mean that China will no longer oppose the hegemonism that the Soviet Union is pursuing. It demonstrates, rather, that China will not depart from its independent principles in her diplomatic policy and so will not stand on the side of the United States to combat the Soviet Union. However, China's policy toward the Soviet Union was mentioned during the recent Sino-Japanese and Sino-British summit talks. This shows that China will strictly abide by its independent principles in its relations with the Soviet Union and the United States. China will not only oppose the Soviet Union and the United States in their policy of hegemonism but will also seek peaceful coexistence with them.

In the past few months China has in fact deliberately broadened its contacts with the Soviet Union. This can be seen from the visit to the Soviet Union by Yu Hongliang, head of the Soviet Union and East European Affairs Department under the Chinese Foreign Ministry, the inspection visit to the Soviet Union by Chinese economic experts and the expansion of bilateral trade and fishery cooperation.

It must be noted that principal Chinese leaders recently have made many remarks on Sino-Soviet relations. China's policy toward the Soviet Union and the future of Sino-Soviet relations were penetratingly elaborated in Hu Yaobang's report at the 12th CPC Congress and in the talks between Deng Xiaoping, Zhao Ziyang and Suzuki. It can be anticipated that Sino-Soviet relations can be gradually improved and the relationship at the state level can be properly normalized, provided the Soviet Union will no longer persist in hegemonism and make new advances. The arrival of Mr Ilichev is a new start in the improvement process.

China needs a peaceful and stable environment in the world while it works to achieve the four modernizations. However, China will not change its principles for combating hegemonist territorial expansion and maintaining world peace. Hence, the deeds of the Soviet Union constitute the key link deciding whether Sino-Soviet relations can be improved or not.

8 Oct Editorial

[Editorial: "New Trend in U.S.-Soviet Relations"]

[Text] Events affect one another in international relations. When Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Leonid Ilichev came to Beijing to hold talks with China's Vice Foreign Minister Qian Qichen on the border issue, Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey A. Gromyko and U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz took advantage of the UN General Assembly to meet in Washington.

The Sino-Soviet exploratory talks are reported to have made some headway, which indicates that both parties have worked out an agenda. However, they have not discussed substantive issues. As for the U.S.-Soviet talks, they have obviously failed to reach an agreement.

Talks between Gromyko and Shultz have been held on many occasions, covering an extremely wide range of issues which include, among other things, the Lebanese crisis and the Iran-Iraq war in the Middle East, turmoils in Central and South America, and civil rights in Poland as well as the nuclear arms limitation talks and the summit meeting on bilateral relations. Obviously it is not easy to solve these burning international issues, which are of long standing and involve various aspects.

At most, the talks will be able to promote mutual understanding.

When U.S. President Ronald Reagan put forward his new proposal on the Middle East issue, the Soviet Union ridiculed it by saying that the United States has an axe to grind. Now the Polish issue has provided the United States with an excuse to attack the Soviet Union and Central and South America has become another region for a new offensive by the Soviet Union. As for the nuclear arms limitation talks, they have been resumed in Geneva but they will likely turn into another long-drawn-out diplomatic struggle. It seems that both the United States and the Soviet Union are assuming a "detente" posture but they lack proper sincerity because their starting point is on the contention of a position of strength.

While U.S. and Soviet foreign ministers were holding talks, the Soviet LITERATURNAYA GAZETA carried an article by Leonid Zamyatin, chief of the International Information Department of the CPSU. The article put forth the question of "relaxing the tension and opposing the relaxation of tension" and concluded by saying that "the policy of the Reagan administration, which has been in power for 20 months, seems to be more reactionary than that of any of the Washington regimes of the past and that it is imbued with militarism." This article, which has been published in coordination with the talks, has rebuked the Reagan administration, but it also reflects the pessimistic appraisal of the Soviet Union on the possibility of "relaxing the tension."

It is exactly because of this pessimistic estimation that news that the Soviet Union is formulating a plan to wage a blitzkrieg against Europe has spread to the outside. When the war starts, they would speedily destroy NATO's nuclear weapons and occupy Western Europe. Of course, this does not mean that war is imminent, but it clearly exposes that the Soviet Union has war and not detente in mind.

What is the U.S. policy toward the Soviet Union? Not long ago Reagan boasted: Since we arrived in this place (he meant the 20 months in which his government had been in power), they have not even gained an inch of territory, and this may be due to a genuine mutual understanding." The meaning of Reagan's statement indicates that the strong policy which he has adopted against the Soviet Union is working and is to be continued.

At a time when the Soviet-U.S. relationship is relatively stable, the United States on the one hand strengthens its military might and strategic arrangements in Western Europe, and on the other hand, it vigorously strengthens its struggle against the Soviet Union in the economic and technological fields. Recently, the United States has continuously exposed the scandals of the Soviet Union stealing information from Western technology. In addition, the United States has installed a new electronic telephone network in West Germany to intercept thousands of private telephone calls in West Germany so as to collect information on the Soviet Union's laying of the natural gas pipeline and to announce its sanction against the West European firms which sell advanced technology to the Soviet Union. Meanwhile, the foreign ministers of the NATO countries held a meeting in Val David [Canada] at the beginning of this month to decide to tighten their control over the economic relationship between themselves and the Soviet Union. All this obviously reflects the new trends in the U.S.-Soviet struggle.

The U.S.-Soviet relationship is not as tense as when Soviet Union first started to invade Afghanistan, but it is impossible to have a new breakthrough. This makes people doubt that the U.S.-Soviet meeting can be held as scheduled and that the meeting will achieve the results which should be achieved.

PRC TO MAKE IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT ON HONG KONG

[Text] There would be no less freedom in Hong Kong after China regains control than there is now, a senior Chinese official was quoted yesterday as saying. The official also said ultimate control of Hong Kong would rest with Beijing, although some British "experts" could be asked to help administer it.

The Beijing government will make an important announcement on the future of Hong Kong "within the next three days", according to officials in Guangzhou. An American businessman who returned from the provincial capital yesterday said the officials told him the announcement would express China's intention to resume sovereignty over the whole of Hong Kong in 1997, including its administration.

The proposal of getting some British "experts" to run parts or all of the territory under a form of management contract was greeted with cautious reservations from some Hong Kong community leaders. Some said it would not serve the purpose of maintaining the prosperity of the territory to employ a handful of British administrators, if the present political system was completely changed. But others considered that it would indicate that China would allow the British Government to run the territory on its behalf for a certain period before taking complete control of Hong Kong.

THE FINANCIAL TIMES, quoting an unnamed Chinese official as telling a delegation that: "With sovereignty in Chinese hands you think it is not possible to maintain Hong Kong's prosperity and stability." "This is a matter of opinion...I believe with the management of the Chinese Government there would be no less freedom than there is now in Hong Kong."

But Western sources said he also indicated certain freedoms would not be permitted when Hong Kong came under Chinese control. When pressed he would only say: "You can imagine what freedoms will not be allowed." The sources quoted the official as saying Hong Kong people "will enjoy due and lawful freedom under Chinese management. We will also try to absorb the advantages of your (British) management. "Some people say sovereignty belongs to China and management to Britain. That is not complete," he added.

Secret talks on Hong Kong's future started in Beijing after British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's visit to China last month. China has expressed anger at Mrs Thatcher's defence of 19th century treaties which gave Britain possession. She said they remained valid and could not be abrogated unilaterally, although they could be altered by mutual agreement.

China, however, regards them as null and void because they were forced by Britain on the crumbling Chinese empire.

Another senior Chinese official said last week China attached greater importance to regaining sovereignty than to maintaining Hong Kong's stability and prosperity.

Asked whether Britain could continue to play a role in running the territory if it ceded sovereignty, he replied: "I don't think that will be possible."

Western diplomats and businessmen believe that if China took sole charge of Hong Kong, it would result in a dramatic fall in the standard of living of the territory, and a huge outflow of foreign investment.

Most expect Britain and China to reach a compromise solution, and believe Beijing's intransigent stance represents a bargaining position rather than its final offer.

China has not said exactly when it plans to regain sovereignty, or what this would mean in practice.

The secretary-general of Chinese Manufacturers' Association J.P. Lee said the reported remarks could be one of the positions and adopted by the Chinese Government, writes David Wong. But he did not think that getting a few British experts to manage Hong Kong would change the whole situation. "The core of the issue lies with sorting out an agreement acceptable not only to British and Chinese Governments, but also the interests of Hong Kong's people," he said.

Mr Lee however refused to comment on the report, saying that there had been too much speculation over the past few weeks, and further comments would create unnecessary fears here.

A spokesman for the Hong Kong Belongers' Association, Sze Chusian, said this was just another political balloon to test Hong Kong people's reaction. "Both sides are creating a sort of political atmosphere while the talks are going on. I think an agreement will be hammered out finally if both governments have a genuine desire to stick to what they have stressed on maintaining the prosperity and stability of the territory." Though he believed that China would finally take over sovereignty of Hong Kong, he said it could be wise to have British officials to help administer the territory over a transitional period.

But the Reform Club's chairman, Brook Bernacchi, stressed the importance of an independent Hong Kong dollar and legal system, recognised by international investors, for maintaining the prosperity of the territory. He said it would not serve much purpose just to employ a handful of British administrators to run the territory, without these two crucial ingredients. Mr Bernacchi said the British legal system was well understood in international financial circles, while that of China was still developing. Therefore, he said, Hong Kong must maintain its present legal system or investors would lose confidence here. Nevertheless, he agreed that the proposal could still be regarded as a step in the direction of a formula put forward to both the Chinese and British Governments by the Reform Club early this year.

The club's formula proposed that China should maintain the status quo of Hong Kong and a continuing administration under the British system for a period agreed by both governments. A new agreement would then be sorted out after the expiry of the period.

WANG BINGNAN ON ROLE OF THIRD WORLD COUNTRIES

[Article by Wang Bingnan [3769 3521 0589] "The Third World Is in the Ascendant and Full of Promise"]

[Text] In his report to the 12th CPC Congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang emphatically pointed out the three bases of our nation's foreign policy. These are: strengthening our unity and cooperation with the Third World countries, opposing hegemony, and safeguarding world peace. When talking about the role of the Third World countries in the current international affairs and the relationship between our country and the Third World countries, he also emphatically pointed out that "the emergence of the Third World countries on the international arena after the war is a major event of primary importance in our times." Once again, he definitely reiterated that "socialist China belongs to the Third World," and that "China will resolutely stand side by side with other Third World countries in the struggle against imperialism, hegemony and colonialism, and take this struggle as its holy international obligation."

These words in Comrade Hu Yaobang's report show our nation's persistent policy and stand in foreign affairs.

The vast number of Third World countries throughout Asia, Africa and Latin America account for about two-thirds of the total population and area of the world, and 78 percent of the member nations of the United Nations. Having undergone similar miserable experiences in history, most of them have suffered from aggression, suppression and exploitation by imperialism and colonialism. At the end of World War II there were only 29 independent nations throughout Asia, Africa and Latin America, and most of the other nations still remained colonies or semicolonies. After the war, the struggle for national liberation was on the upsurge throughout Asia, Africa and Latin America. As the colonialist system was demolished, the number of independent states increased to 126. Nowadays, the Third World countries have become the main force in the struggle against imperialism, hegemony and colonialism in the world, as well as a decisive political force in the international arena. Socialist China which has a population of 1 billion and which firmly stands on the side of the Third World has added to the force and the influence of the Third World.

In reviewing the postwar history in retrospect, we can clearly see that the joint struggle against imperialism and hegemony among the Third World countries is rising to an unprecedented height, and is unremittingly developing in both scale and depth.

The Afro-Asian conference convened in Bandung in 1955, in which 29 African and Asian countries participated, was a milestone in the history of the Third World people's anti-imperialist struggle. Holding high the banner of opposing imperialism and strengthening unity, the Bandung Conference pushed the national liberation movement of Asia and Africa to a new upsurge. In the early 60's, the nonalignment policy gained ground. It upheld the anti-imperialist and antihegemonist stand and the principle of not entering into alliance with the big nations or military groups. It has played a dominant role in the Third World countries and in the people's struggle to maintain national independence, develop the national economy and defend world peace, and its influence on international affairs is also growing daily.

Similar to the struggle of the Latin American countries against the maritime hegemony of the superpowers, the oil exporting countries and other raw material producing countries also struggle to own and exercise permanent sovereignty over their own natural resources. The struggle of all developing countries to establish a new international economic order is a great challenge to hegemonism. This greatly changes the situation in which the superpowers can arbitrarily manipulate the world situation.

As a matter of fact, Third World countries have vast territories, large populations and rich natural resources and they encompass strategic points in the world. All this constitutes a powerful means which can be used in their struggle against hegemonism. Taking Africa as an example, people always call Africa a "treasure chest" in the world. African diamond reserves account for almost 100 percent of the world reserves and its reserves of gold account for over two thirds. The reserves of niobium, tantalum, lithium, cobalt and chromium in Africa make up over 90 percent. The 53 most important mineral resources to date in the world have been all discovered in Africa. Viewed from the Third World as a whole, according to 1981 statistics, it has 63.8 percent of the world petroleum reserves, 42.3 percent of the output and 87 percent of the exports. The Third World also holds 30 percent of the world mineral output. Fuel and important raw materials needed by many developed countries heavily depend on the Third World. In addition, many strategic points in the world, such as the Suez Canal, the Strait of Malacca, the Strait of Hormuz, the course around the Cape of Good Hope, the Panama Canal and the Strait of Magellan, are situated in the Third World. In the past, rich resources in Third World countries were wilfully plundered by imperialists and their strategic points were contended by imperialists struggling for world hegemony. Today, Third World countries are no longer willing to resign themselves to exploitation and control by imperialists and hegemonists. They have begun to use their resources as weapons to break the imperialist monopoly and unremittingly fight for their economic liberation and for the establishment of a new international economic order.

The North-South summit held in Cancun, Mexico in late October last year which 22 countries attended was a prominent example of the developing countries' demand for changing the old international economic order after achieving political independence. At the same time, in order to free themselves from control and plunder by the superpowers and rapidly change their poverty, Third World countries are strengthening their cooperation and taking the road of collective self-reliance. That is the so-called "South-South cooperation" often mentioned to date. In Latin America, countries in the Latin American economic system have signed the "Panama statement," and they have drawn up a common strategy for negotiating with the United States. In Africa, economic cooperation organizations, such as the "Economic Community of Western Africa" and the "Economic Community of Central African Countries", have been set up. In Asia, the five countries of the "Association of Southeast Asian Nations", after consultation and coordination, have strengthened their cooperation in energy exploitation and transportation. In February this year, more than 40 developing countries attended the "New Delhi consultation" (South-South conference) held in India. This meeting was of active significance and had extensive influence in promoting South-South cooperation and in stimulating the holding of the global talks in the sphere of the United Nations. In short, Third World countries demand the breaking of the existing unequal international economic relationships and the building of a new international economic order and they also demand economic independence and development. This is the continuation of their movement for political independence and an irresistable historic trend. We warmly support every active step taken by Third World countries in this area. On this year's New Year Day, when receiving the Algerian financial minister, Comrade Deng Xiaoping highly evaluated South-South cooperation. He said: South-South cooperation is a new way of putting things and is a very good expression. The South-South relationship represents a very important issue in international relations. He asked wittily: Who invented this wording? He should be honored with a medal.

The strength of the Third World has grown and Third World countries have had a greater say over the past few years. A change has been brought to the situation in which the United Nations served only as a voting machine manipulated by certain big powers.

In the last election for the UN secretary general, the Third World countries nominated their own candidates and, after repeated trials of strength, succeeded in breaking superpower monopoly and elected Javier Perez de Cuellar the new secretary general. China firmly sided with the Third World countries in this struggle by exercising the veto on 16 occasions in succession. This has won general appreciation and support from Third World countries.

Over more than 30 years after World War II, through their own experience, the people in Third World countries have come to realize a truth: In order to safeguard national independence and state sovereignty, to develop national economies and to seek world peace, they must wage resolute struggle against the superpowers. First, they took on a trial of strength with the United States for a fairly long time and came to realize clearly the aggressive nature of this superpower. Afterward, from a series of aggressive and expansionist activities of Soviet hegemonists, especially when Soviet troops were dispatched directly to occupy Afghanistan and the Soviets supported the naked aggression against Kampuchea by Vietnamese regional hegemonists, they saw clearly the Soviet Union in its true colors and the danger this superpower is bringing to the world. More and more Third World countries have realized that the superpowers which practice hegemonism constitute a serious threat to the people of the world and that the intense rivalry between them is the main source of instability and turmoil in the world. The Third World countries stand in the forefront of the struggle against hegemonism. The people of Afghanistan and Kampuchea, defying violence and brute force, are persisting in their heroic struggle against aggression by the Soviet Union and Vietnam respectively. The people of the Arab countries are fighting against Israeli expansionism which is aided and abetted by the United States. The African people are fighting against the racism and expansionism of South Africa. All these struggles have dealt a heavy blow to the hegemonism of the superpowers and the expansionist policy of regional hegemonism under their connivance and support, and have made major contributions to the defence of world peace.

The growing strength of the Third World countries has attracted the universal attention of the countries in Western Europe and Oceania. An increasing number of these countries advocate dialogue with Third World countries, and are making efforts to establish ties of cooperation with them. The tendency of these countries desiring to establish ties with Third World countries has exerted an important influence over the international situation.

The Chinese Government and people have unswervingly pursued the peaceful diplomatic policy formulated by the late Chairman Mao and Premier Zhou, and have always cherished unity and cooperation with other Third World countries. China's relations of unity and cooperation with other Third World countries have further developed with the advent of the 1980's. From January to July this year, 11 state or government leaders from Third World countries paid visits to China. Friendly contacts and exchange visits between the Chinese people and people of other Third World countries have also increased. There are nearly 50 organizations for friendship with China in Third World countries. Many leaders and friends from Third World countries who have visited China say that China is a very sincere and the most reliable friend of the Third World countries. All this vividly shows that China has scored abundant achievements in carrying out its foreign policy of strengthening unity and cooperation with other Third World countries. Moreover, just as Comrade Hu Yaobang has said: "Along with the development of our economic construction, we will steadily expand our friendly cooperation with other countries and peoples of the Third World."

Of course, twists and turns are unavoidable for the Third World countries on their road of advance. Due to the differences in their development and some contradictions left over by history, some Third World countries are not getting along well with each other or have even fought against each other. As a result, both sides have suffered serious losses in the fighting and the hegemonists have benefited.

However, in the final analysis, since the Third World countries had common sufferings in the past and are faced with common problems and tasks today, there are more factors of unity between them than those of dissension and discord. In the course of historical development, the Third World countries represent newly emerging forces in the international arena. There are demanding changes in the world and their strength is just in the ascendant. They are full of promise. Although there will be difficulties and twists and turns ahead for the Third World countries in the course of their advance, they will surely gain strength and advance from victory to victory so long as they work incessantly for unity, strive to become stronger by their own efforts and unite with the people of all countries in the world in the struggle against hegemonism.

PRC, WORLD BANK HOLD DISCUSSIONS ON LOANS

[Economics and Finance column]

[Text] Munir Benjenk, vice president of external relations of the World Bank, announced yesterday that the bank and China were working on 20 projects that would turn to loans in the next 2 years.

Benjenk told a press conference in Beijing that the two sides had been engaged in discussions on a great variety of projects, many of them coming to fruition this year and next.

"China and the World Bank have got quite a long way ahead in their cooperation. We have passed the take-off state in our lending relationship with China and have a larger programme now in course," he said.

The World Bank has been active in China since 1980 when China took a seat at the bank. Since then, the bank has committed loans worth $260 million to China. Of this $20 million has been allocated to education while another $60 million has gone to aid agriculture in the North China Plain.

Benjenk revealed that loans in the near future would cover agriculture, agricultural research, a second education project, two projects connected with petroleum production, a port project and coal projects.

Lending to China is still at a low level for such a huge country. By comparison with China's $260 million, India borrows nearly $2,000 million a year from the World Bank. There will be a big increase in the years ahead, but he declined to give any predictions as to how much the amount would be.

On top of its lending programme, the World Bank has a very busy training programme for Chinese personnel through the Economic Development Institute of the World Bank. The bank had organized special courses in Shanghai and elsewhere in China, he said.

China had been successful in maintaining a very reasonable standard of living for its people and its standard of living, state of health and literacy was higher than other developing countries at the same level of income.

China has taken an active part in the World Bank and it has joined other countries in determining the World Bank policies for the next few years.

Benjenk said he would continue his discussions with the Chinese Government on how the bank should see the world economy and how the two sides viewed the prospects for securing financing for the World Bank and its affiliates.

Benjenk arrived in China on Sunday and will fly home on October 13.

PRC, U.S. END ROUND OF TEXTILE NEGOTIATIONS

[Text] Washington, October 6 (XINHUA) -- The second round of negotiations for a Sino-U.S. textile agreement ended here today.

The negotiations, which started on September 27, have brought about no final agreement, but each side has come to know more about the other's position. It will help the two sides decide on a realistic starting point for the next round of talks.

The agreement, which will expire by the end of this year, was signed in 1980. The agreement, reached in the light of the basic principle of the Sino-U.S. trade agreement, constitutes an important measure taken to develop trade between the two countries on the basis of equality and mutual benefit.

Sources said that the U.S. side acknowledged during the talks that China is not a major textile supplier for the U.S. and is therefore entitled to the treatment applied to non-major textile suppliers. However, while stressing the difficulties facing the U.S. textile and garment industry, the U.S. side insisted on reducing China's textile sales in the U.S. market.

The Chinese negotiators replied that because of China's adverse balance of trade with the U.S., the Americans should accord China such treatment as given to a non-major textile supplier in the limit of varieties, levels and growth of its textile trade.

Despite the differences, both sides expressed their desire to try to reach an agreement as soon as possible. The Chinese side said that it would not be difficult to achieve an agreement if the U.S. readjusts its basic position from a practical point of view. China also hoped that the following round of talks would be arranged through diplomatic channels.

REAGAN DISCUSSES U.S. ECONOMIC SITUATION

[Text] Washington, October 13 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan addressed the nation tonight on the state of the U.S. economy, arguing that his economic recovery program is working despite worsening unemployment in the country.

The speech, described as a "progress report" on the economy, came in the wake of the turmoil of recent days caused by the unemployment rate of 10.1 percent in September, the highest since 1940, and just three weeks before the November 2 mid-term election. The economy is believed to be the number one issue in the election campaign. The President's address was regarded by an AP report as "an appeal to the public to vote Republican."

Giving a review of the economic situation in his address carried live by the NBC and CBS television networks, Reagan said: "Interest rates are down by 40 percent" and "inflation is down 59 percent." But he admitted, "the dark cloud of unemployment hangs over the lives of 11 million of our friends, neighbors and family."

"America today faces serious problems that were long years in the making," he said. "The pounding economic hangover America is suffering from didn't come about overnight and there is no single, instant cure."

He said that "unemployment is the problem uppermost on many people's minds" and that getting Americans back to work is an "urgent priority" for his administration.

He urged that unemployment cannot be solved "without solving the things that caused it -- the out-of-control government spending, the sky-rocketing inflation and interest rates that led to unemployment in the first place."

He called for "congressional cooperation" with his economic program and made specific requests to Congress which adjourned on October 2 for the election campaign and will reopen on November 29.

REAGAN, MEXICAN PRESIDENT-ELECT HOLD TALKS

[Text] Washington, October 8 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan today held talks with Mexican President-elect Miguel de la Madrid in a cross-the-border meeting, first in Tijuana, Mexico, and then in San Diego, the United States, it was learned here.

This was the first meeting between the two leaders. The Mexican President-elect will take office on December 1. His country is engaged in an all-out battle to cope with financial problems.

The two leaders reportedly discussed Mexico's financial situation. Mexico needs to raise about 8.3 billion dollars over the next year to cover the gap between its income and interest payments on foreign debts.

They also discussed policy differences of the two countries over Central America as well as bilateral relations including trade, immigration and fisheries.

A senior U.S. administration official said that the United States gives a "very high priority" to "creating a relationship of cooperation" with Mexico and "great progress" has been made in U.S.-Mexico relationship in the past 18 months.

The United States helped engineer a 1.85-billion dollar multinational support package, half of which was contributed by the United States. It provided a one-billion dollar credit to Mexico for the purchase of U.S. agricultural products. The United States also agreed to pay one billion dollars in advance for the purchase of Mexico's oil.

AFP: DENG XIAOPING ON SINO-SOVIET RELATIONS

[By Elisabeth Chang]

[Text] Beijing, Oct. 13 (AFP) -- China intends to raise the range of subjects of discord, which have bedeviled Sino-Soviet relations in the last two decades, during discussions currently going on here between the Soviet Union and China, Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping said today.

Mr Deng, the man who has dominated China since Mao, was speaking to visiting West German President Karl Carstens, a source (?close to) Mr Carstens said.

The source said Mr Deng had recalled [word indistinct] China had agreed to renew Sino-Soviet dialogue, frozen by Beijing three years ago when Soviet troops entered Afghanistan, but had simultaneously proclaimed its opposition to three elements of Soviet foreign policy.

Discussions between the two Communist giants [words indistinct] going since last week and Mr Deng has reiterated Chinese irritation at the mass of Soviet troops on their common border, Moscow's support for Vietnam's intervention in Cambodia and the Soviet presence in Afghanistan.

Mr Deng nevertheless indicated that while [words indistinct] Soviet [words indistinct] it still regarded it both normal and necessary to open a dialogue with the Soviet Union, the German source said.

Soviet Deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs Leonid Ilichev and his Chinese counterpart Qian Qichen started talks last week on Sino-Soviet relations, which have been strained since the early 1960's. The discussions marked a return to dialogue after a three-year break when China broke off relations in protest at [word indistinct] intervention in Afghanistan.

The West German source said that during the 50 minute talks with Mr Carstens, Mr Deng had not given any indication on how the discussions with Mr Ilichev were going. The talks have been wrapped in great secrecy and it is not even known how long they will last.

However, Mr Deng did say that all the outstanding questions in Sino-Soviet relations should be raised.

This appears to contradict the Soviet wish not to discuss matters touching on third countries -- clearly intended to avoid tackling the problem of Vietnam or Afghanistan.

China has publicly stated since before discussions started that Soviet involvement in Vietnam and Afghanistan and the Soviet presence on its borders represented a threat to security. The Soviet Union keeps about one million soldiers along its common border with China and in Outer Mongolia.

On Monday another Chinese leader, Politburo member Peng Zhen, told Mr Carstens that a reduction in tension between China and the Soviet Union was possible but said the disagreements between the two states were deep.

KOREAN REUNIFICATION SUPPORTED BY UN SPEAKERS

[Text] United Nations, October 12 (XINHUA) -- Speakers from the Third World countries at the current U.N. General Assembly session expressed their support for the People's Democratic Republic of Korea in its efforts to reunify the Korean Peninsula.

Apollo Milton Obote, minister of state for foreign affairs of Uganda, said the division of Korea "is an injustice committed against the Korean people through foreign intervention.

"That injustice must be remedied through an early and peaceful reunification of the Korean Peninsula, free from any external interference," he noted.

Zimbabwean Foreign Minister Witness M. Mangwende said that the massive foreign military build-up in South Korea "continues unabated and poses grave danger to international peace and security."

He called for the immediate withdrawal of foreign forces from the South, to create an atmosphere conducive to mutual trust between the artificially divided people of the peninsula.

"President Kim Il-song's proposal for a confederation system offers more realistic prospects for a settlement in the troubled area," he declared.

Joaquim Alberto Chissano, foreign minister of Mozambique, expressed his country's support for the People's Democratic Republic of Korea in its efforts for peaceful reunification. "Their proposals of direct negotiation between North and South with a view to the creation of confederated republic constitute a positive contribution to the unification process," he stated.

Sitthi Sawetsila, minister for foreign affairs of Thailand, said his country urges that a dialogue be agreed upon between the North and the South to consider effective ways of reducing tension and strengthening peace in the Korean Peninsula.

'Abd al-Halim Khaddam, deputy prime minister and foreign minister of Syria, said the problem of the unification of Korea "is still unsolved, despite new initiative and proposals by the Government of the People's Democratic Republic of Korea."

"We support the unification of Korea on the just and practical bases suggested by the Pyongyang government," he declared.

Rene Rojas Galdames, minister for external relations of Chile, noted that inter-Korean negotiations "are the only practical way of resolving through peaceful means and without foreign intervention, a problem that has been dragging on for almost 40 years."

NPC'S XI ZHONGXUN ADDRESSES HAMHUNG BANQUET

SK130741 Pyongyang Domestic Service in Korea 2200 GMT 10 Oct 82

[Speech by Xi Zhongxun, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee, secretary of the Secretariat of the party Central Committee, vice chairman of the Chinese National People's Congress and leader of the visiting NPC delegation, at banquet arranged by the South Hamgyong Provincial People's Committee on 10 October -- read by announcer]

[Text] Respected Comrade Hwang Chang-yop and dear comrades: Members of the delegation of the PRC National People's Congress, who are visiting your beautiful country at the invitation of the Standing Committee of the DPRK Supreme People's Assembly, are very happy to have an opportunity to tour South Hamgyong Province and Hamhung.

The citizens of Hamhung have heartily welcomed us as brothers. The South Hamgyong Provincial People's Committee has warmly invited us to this banquet. Thus, we are once again closely appreciating the feeling of deep friendship cherished by the Korean people toward us. On behalf of members of the delegation of the PRC National People's Congress, I sincerely extend thanks and warm fraternal greetings to cadre comrades of party and government agencies and residents in South Hamgyong Province and Hamhung.

We are visiting Hamhung on the auspicious 34th anniversary of the founding of the KWP. Availing ourselves of this occasion and with great joy, we extend the warmest congratulatory greetings to the glorious KWP, all KWP members and the fraternal Korean people.

No sooner had we arrived than we were very favorable impressed by Hamhung, a renowned industrial city in Korea. There are many plants and tall residents in the city. The entire city is overflowing with a lively, prosperous spirit. Today, we visited the Hungnam fertilizer industrial complex, the Soho fishery station and the Yongsong machine industrial complex. We were warmly welcomed by responsible functionaries and employees of these enterprises.

Upholding Comrade Kim Il-song's teachings and displaying the spirit of self-reliance, these enterprises, especially the Yongsong machine industrial complex have achieved great successes in production and construction. During our visit to these enterprises, we learned many things from the Korean working class and were deeply impressed by it. We sincerely express thanks for this.

The new appearance of Hamhung demonstrates the rapid development of socialist construction in Korea and shows the spiritual trait of the industrious and courageous Korean people. This proves the correctness of the leadership of Comrade Kim Il-song, the great leader of the Korean people and the KWP.

The Chinese people are sincerely moved by and rejoice over all the successes the Korean people have achieved by materializing the principle of independence, self-reliance and self-defense. As fraternal comrades-in-arms, we sincerely wish the citizens of Hamhung greater miracles in their struggle to implement the magnificent tasks given by the Sixth KWP Congress by raising high the banner of the three revolutions -- ideological, technical and culture.

Hamhung is a city linked with the Chinese people by the bond of friendship. In 1958 Comrade Zhou Enlai visited Hamhung and received a warm and hearty welcome from the people of South Hamyong Province and Hamhung. To commemorate Comrade Zhou Enlai's visit to the city, the citizens of Hamhung have built a statue of him for a monument at the place where he spoke during his visit. All those Chinese comrades who have visited Premier Zhou Enlai's monument have been moved by the sincere feelings of the Korean people who love Premier Zhou Enlai and value China-Korea friendship.

The establishment of friendly-city relationship between Shanghai and Hamhung in June [year not specified] further tightened the friendly relations between the peoples of the two countries. Availing ourselves of this occasion, we warmly celebrate the development of the friendly relations between these two cities.

What we should specially note in the annals of China-Korea friendship is the recent official state visit to China by Comrade Kim Il-song, the great leader of the Korean people, a significant historic event.

President Kim Il-song's recent visit to China greatly increased even more the joy of the Chinese people because it coincided with the event in which the Chinese people enthusiastically celebrated the successful conclusion of the 12th CPC Congress. President Kim Il-song highly appreciated the successes attained by the Chinese people and the 12th CPC Congress and greatly supported and encouraged the Chinese people in revolution and construction.

The recent visit to China by President Kim Il-song greatly contributed to further strengthening and developing the friendship and unity between the peoples of our two countries and will profoundly influence the development of the revolution and construction in our two countries and peace in Asia and the world. All the Chinese people greatly rejoice over President Comrade Kim Il-song's successful visit to China.

Today, the Chinese people are sincerely studying the documents of the 12th CPC Congress. They are firmly determined to comprehensively develop a new aspect in socialist modernization and construction by implementing the decision of this meeting through practical activities.

The Chinese people have always received fraternal support from the Korean party and people in their revolution and construction. We are very grateful for this. The Chinese people have consistently supported the Korean people's cause for revolution and construction. Just as they did in the past, the Chinese people will resolutely support the struggle of the Korean people to force the U.S. forces to withdraw from South Korea, to smash the maneuvers to fabricate two Koreas and achieve the fatherland's independent and peaceful reunification at the earliest possible date.

The friendship between the peoples of our two countries has been established and developed through mutual support and assistance. No matter what may occur in the world in the future, the Chinese people will always firmly side with the Korean people and will struggle shoulder-to-shoulder, firmly uniting with them.

Concluding my speech, I propose a toast to the continuous consolidation and development of the revolutionary friendship and unity sealed in blood between the peoples of China and Korea, to the good health and long life of President Comrade Kim Il-song, the great leader of the Korean people and a close friend of Chinese people; to the good health of Comrade Kim Chong-il, the dear leader of the Korean people; to the prosperity and development of South Hamgyong Province and Hamhung; and to the good health of respected Comrade Hwang Chang-yop and of all comrades present here.

Foreign Ministry Protests

BK131244 Beijing in Cambodian to Kampuchea 1030 GMT 13 Oct 82

[Text] The Chinese Foreign Ministry sent a note 13 October to the Vietnamese Embassy in China once again strongly protesting Vietnam's armed provocations during the Chinese and Vietnamese National Days. The note recounted the facts that for 42 days, from 27 August to 7 October, according to available documents, the Vietnamese authorities carried out 109 armed provocations along the border. As a result, a total of 3 Chinese inhabitants and border defense combatants were killed and 11 others were wounded by Vietnamese forces.

The note stressed that the above-mentioned incidents clearly showed that the Vietnamese side's so-called proposal on the cessation of hostile activities during the National Day celebrations of the two countries and its so-called declaration of unilateral cease-fire were sheer deceptions. They were merely and simply engineered to mislead local and international opinion and to cover up Vietnam's act of ceaselessly and intentionally creating a tense situation in the Sino-Vietnamese border region.

The note once again demanded that the Vietnamese side put an end to its acts of armed provocation and aggression and stop pursuing an anti-Chinese policy

Prince Sihanouk made his statement to the General Assembly, demanding the complete withdrawal of Vietnamese occupation troops from his homeland. The General Assembly is ready to express its support for accepting the credentials of the delegation from Democratic Kampuchea.

This situation signifies the wide acknowledgement of the just and triumphant battles of the Kampuchean people against the Vietnamese invasion three years ago. It attests to the prestige of Democratic Kampuchea, which has been greatly enhanced by formation of the coalition government headed by Prince Sihanouk.

True Representative

This mocks and strongly refutes the calumny of the Vietnamese authorities that the Democratic Kampuchean Government is a "government in exile." It has actually liberated and solidly held large zones not only near the Thai frontier, but also in several regions of the southwest and northeast of the country. All its members live and fight in the interior of the Kampuchean national territory, side by side with the heroic Kampuchean fighters. Only this government is the true representative of the Kampuchean people. Encouraging news has also come from the supreme commission of its National Army that the resistance forces expanded their activities during the rainy season from last May to October, wiping out more Vietnamese troops.

A heavy blow to the Vietnamese invaders and their backers in Moscow is the prince's rejection of Vietnam's deceitful proposal for a so-called "international conference to consider the security, the peace and neutrality of Southeast Asia." Obviously, such a conference would not seek to end the widely-condemned occupation of Kampuchea by Vietnam itself. An "international conference" called by a country that has repeatedly disobeyed UN resolutions on Kampuchea would, needless to say, never help bring about a true settlement of the issue.

This maneuvre by the Vietnamese is intended only as a swindle that would constitute de facto international recognition of the puppet regime of Heng Samrin that the invaders installed. In other words, Vietnam wants only to get what it has failed to get on the battlefield or in the United Nations.

The prince's speech in the General Assembly pointed out that settlement of the Kampuchean issue, a menace to the peace and stability in the Southeast Asia, can be possible only after the Vietnamese have totally pulled out of Kampuchea in conformity with UN resolutions. Under the circumstance that the invaders are using chemical weapons, especially toxic gas, against resistance fighters and villagers, and the circumstance that, behind the camouflage of "partial retreat," many fresh troops have been sent to reinforce the occupation forces, the prince expressed the Kampuchean people's resolute determination to continue to assert their national sovereignty through armed struggle. For the Kampuchean people, any suggestion of political compromise is illusory and unacceptable.

Only Options

Now the Vietnamese invaders are preparing military operations on a large scale in Kampuchea with the advent of another dry season. When the prince solemnly declared that to take up arms was the Kampuchean people's only option, the only option for the world is to make joint effort to bring heavier pressure upon the Vietnamese authorities to get out of Kampuchea completely.

AFGHAN GUERRILLAS SAID TO BOLSTER OPERATIONS

OW120924 Beijung XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1140 GMT 8 Oct 82

[XINHUA correspondent Lu Limin's report: "The Soviet Army Has Been Bogged Down on the Afghan Battlefield" -- exclusively for HEILONGJIANG RIBAO -- XINHUA headline]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 5 Oct (XINHUA) -- At the 37th UN General Assembly session recently, representatives of many countries strongly denounced the Soviet Union for its acts of aggression in Afghanistan and called for Soviet troop withdrawal from that country. Meanwhile, the Soviet Union has found the going on the Afghan battlefield tougher and tougher.

Lately, the Afghan guerrillas have strengthened their military operations in Takhar, Balkh, Herat, Qandahar, Nangarhar and other provinces. They repeatedly attacked the enemy's communication lines, military bases and airports there and inflicted heavy losses on the Soviet Army and the Karmal government troops. The Soviet Union is finding it more difficult to get by in Afghanistan, although it has thrown a tremendous military force into battle there.

There are 12 Soviet divisions in Afghanistan, including a number of crack airborne and armored divisions, equipped with more than 400 helicopter gunships. With their modern weapons and equipment, they thought at first that they would be able to quickly gain control of the whole of Afghanistan and turn that country into a springboard of expansion toward the Persian Gulf and the Indian Ocean. As of now, however, the Soviet Union has not succeeded in fulfilling its strategic plan. The war has been going on in Afghanistan for nearly 3 years. The Soviet troops control only a number of urban centers, strategic points and main communication lines, while the vast rural and mountainous areas are still under the control of the Afghan freedom fighters.

In a bid to free itself from the passive position in which it has found itself since the beginning of this year, the Soviet Army has launched large-scale offensive operations against the guerrillas on many occasions, but none of these offensives has succeeded. What caught people's attention was the battle of the Panjsher Valley. The valley, some 160 kilometers long and 90 kilometers from the capital of Kabul, is the guerrillas' main base. In late May of this year, Soviet troops and the troops of the Afghan Government, a total strength of 18,000 men, launched their sixth offensive operation against the valley. They were supported and covered by warplanes and tanks. The guerrillas, however, successfully evaded the brunt of the attack and later made use of the terrain to attack the enemy. According to reports, Soviet troops and the Afghan Government forces "suffered tremendous losses in this most vigorous offensive." In mid-July, the enemy's main force was compelled to withdraw from the valley.

In the past 3 years, the Soviet Army has sustained more than 15,000 casualties and lost 100 warplanes as well as large quantities of other arms and equipment. To maintain its military presence in Afghanistan, the Soviet Union has spent $3 to $4 million there each day.

Although caught in a dilemma, the Soviet Union will not easily give up Afghanistan. It has been reported that the Soviet aggressor troops and the Afghan Government forces recently renewed their attack on the guerrillas, thereby lifting the curtain of their "autumn offensive." Facts show that regardless of whatever cruel means the Soviet troops there may resort to, the Afghan people, who traditionally resist aggression, will never be subjugated. They will finally surmount the difficulties on their road of advance and win fresh victories, one after another.

FRENCH COMMUNIST PARTY DELEGATION ARRIVES 14 OCT

[Text] Beijing, October 14 (XINHUA) -- A French Communist Party Central Committee delegation led by General Secretary Georges Marchais arrived here this morning for a two-week visit to China as guests of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China.

They were met at the airport by Qiao Shi, alternate member of the Secretariat and head of the International Liaison Department of the C.P.C. Central Committee, Qian Liren, deputy head, and Feng Xuan, advisor, of the department; and French Ambassador to China Charles Malo.

In a press statement on his arrival, Georges Marchais said it is of tremendous significance that the French C.P. delegation has come to China to study the efforts of a billion people in building a new socialist society.

He said the French Communists are aware of the diverse experiences of people around the world in building socialism. The French Communists, he said, try to understand accurately their contributions to the building of socialism.

The French Communists, he said, are building socialism with French characteristics in the light of the actual conditions in France and the aspirations and needs of the French people.

Marchais said his delegation attaches great importance to its talks with the principal leaders of the Chinese Communist Party.

"Just as among other communist and workers' parties, the positions of our two parties are different on many issues," he said. "That is why we'll exchange views in a frank and friendly manner about our analyses and views on all major issues."

Marchais said he is convinced that the delegation's visit and talks in China will help deepen mutual understanding between the two parties and promote their cooperation on the basis of working together to achieve their common objectives.

The French C.P. delegation is the first of its kind to come to China since the two parties suspended their relations in 1965. It is also another delegation to China sent by a major communist party in West Europe following the Italian and Spanish C.P. delegations. Georges Marchais is the first general secretary of the French Communist Party to visit this country.

It is learned that George Marchais will hold talks with Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the C.P.C. Central Committee, and exchange views with him on the positions, political lines and policies of the two parties as well as on major international issues of mutual interest.

Deng Xiaoping and Zhao Ziyang are scheduled to meet the delegation separately.

The two parties are expected to resume and expand their relations, as a result of the visit, on the basis of independence, complete equality, mutual respect and non-interference in each other's internal affairs.

The delegation will also visit Xian, the Gezhouba water control project in central China's Hubei Province, Shanghai and Suzhou, a garden city in east China's Jiangsu Province.

Greeted by Hu Yaobang

[Text] Beijing, October 14 (XINHUA) -- General Secretary Hu Yaobang of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee told visiting French Communist Party Secretary General Georges Marchais here today that the Chinese Party Central Committee is glad to be able to have a full exchange of views with the French C.P. Central Committee delegation.

Welcoming Marchais and the delegation he is leading at the Diaoyutai guesthouse, Hu Yaobang said: "We consider it normal phenomenon for two parties to disagree on certain issues. This is because our two parties are in different environs and have diverse experiences and histories. But, disagreement does not prevent the two parties from exchanging views in a comradely manner and cooperating with each other."

Holding Marchais' hands, Hu Yaobang said: "All the comrades of the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau of our party Central Committee asked me to convey their regards to you and all the other members of the French Communist Party delegation. We hope you'll feel at home and have a pleasant stay here."

Marchais said: "We are all very happy to be in Beijing. The French Communists, both of my generation and the younger one, and the French laborers drew inspirations from China's Long March, the democratic revolution and the victory won in 1949."

"The relations between the French and Chinese parties," he said, "are at an important juncture. The abnormality in the past will be rectified. It is entirely possible for the French and Chinese parties to cooperate in forging new relations."

FURTHER MATERIALS ON FRG PRESIDENT'S VISIT

AFP: Discussions With Zhao

OW121954 Hong Kong AFP in English 1814 GMT 12 Oct 82

[Excerpt] Beijing, Oct 12 (AFP) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang told visiting West German President Karl Carstens today that China's economic re-adjustment had forced Beijing to temporarily reduce imports from the West, a West German diplomatic source said here. China's economic austerity policies for the past 3 years have reduced the trade deficit via-a-vis the United States, Japan and West Germany and increased the trade surplus Beijing enjoys with the rest of the Western European countries.

Mr Zhao told the West German president that China's restrictions on imports, primarily technology, from the West was a temporary phenomenon that would disappear when the Chinese economy had regained a firmer footing, the diplomatic source said. The Chinese premier predicted that China's rate of economic growth this year would reach four or five percent and the budget deficit would remain near last year's figure.

China's official budget deficit in 1981 was 2,551 million yuan (1,308 million dollars), compared with an official estimate of about 3,000 million yuan (1,538 million dollars) for this year.

Mr Carstens arrived in Beijing on Sunday for an official one week visit to commemorate the 10th anniversary of thenormalization of relations between the two countries.

The West German head of state tomorrow is scheduled to meet Vice Chairman Deng Xiaoping, currently the strongest man in China, and Chinese Communist Party Secretary General Hu Yaobang.

Addresses Beijing University

[Text] Beijing, October 13 (XINHUA) -- Karl Carstens, president of the Federal Republic of Germany (FRG), this morning made a speech at Beijing University in which he gave an account of the history and present state of the European Economic Community (EEC).

The president said that Western Europe established the European Coal and Steel Community in 1952 and the European Economic Community in 1957. Although the arrangement occasionally suffered setbacks, its development strengthened the close economic cooperation among its member states and promotes their political cooperation, he said.

"We now have a European Parliament through direct election and a European Court. The European Commission functions as the European cabinet. The Council of Ministers, made up of ministers from the community's member states, is an organ which has decisive voice. European law is regarded as paramount to those of member states. These principles and the powerful position of the European Court are the most solid factors that decide the stability of our community," he said.

Carstens pointed out that a center has been formed as a result of the growing integration of the Western European countries. This center plays a stabilizing role for the participating European countries as well as for the areas around it, and to all other areas.

Such a stabilizing role, the president said, is based on a number of factors, the most important of which being the fact that the European Economic Community has resolutely promoted beneficial economic development and that Europe keeps its military balance within NATO with the objective of defending and maintaining peace.

The reestablishment of the European industrial potential, together with the gradual reduction of trade barriers that have always existed among the members states of the community, has led to the positive economic development, which in turn created a broad common market composed of a population of 270 million. This has not only brought about an unexpectedly vigorous economic development to Western Europe but has also made it possible for the community to strengthen its economic cooperation with non-member states -- the Third World countries in particular.

The president pointed out that at present there are economic difficulties everywhere, mainly due to the worldwide economic recession, but he said he is confident that the joint endeavor by member states of the European Community will more effectively weather these difficulties collectively than individually.

President Carstens said: "I once taught in the University of Cologne for many years, so I feel at home when I am at Beijing University, several thousand kilometers far from the University of Cologne."

Carstens said exchanges in the spiritual and scientific spheres can play the role of a bridge. He said: "Now there are about 1,500 Chinese students and scientists altogether in the Federal Republic of Germany, while 450 F.R.G. citizens are studying or engaging in scientific research in China. We are gratified at this situation." "I think they are all builders of bridges," he added.

He said that "the People's Republic of China is an important partner to the Federal Republic of Germany.

The two countries had discussions on world political issues and tried to expand economic cooperation and exchanges, especially in the fields of culture, technology, and science. He said "We hope that we are able to expand cooperation between our two countries more successfully in future. I also hope that more important contributions will be made by our universities and the scientific circle in cooperation."

His speech drew warm applause from the more than 800 students and faculty.

Preceeding President Carstens' speech, Zhang Longxiang, president of Beijing University, extended his warm welcome to President Carstens and other distinguished F.R.G. guests on behalf of all the faculty and students of the university.

He said "the faculty and students of our university are very familiar with many outstanding German thinkers, philosophers, writers, musicians and scientists. Their contributions are very important to the wealth of the civilization of mankind."

Zhang Longxiang said "the president's speech will surely promote exchanges and cooperation between universities of the two countries."

Present on the occasion were Zhang Wenjin, vice-minister of foreign affairs, Huang Xinbai, vice-minister of education, the president's entourage, and Guenther Schoedel, ambassador of the F.R.G. to China.

In his reply, Peng Zhen extended his congratulations upon the successful visit of the president to China. He said that the president's visit has made valuable contributions to the promotion of the friendship between the two peoples and to the development of the relations between the two countries.

"We both sides also held beneficial talks on international issues of common interest and on the further development of the relations between our two countries," the vice-chairman said.

RENMIN RIBAO ON CHANGE IN EGYPTIAN POLICIES

["Newsletter From Egypt" by RENMIN RIBAO reporter Lin Jianming [2651 4109 2494]: "Commemoration of Victory"]

[Text] At 1000 on 6 October, drums were beaten and music was played in front of the Monument of the Unknown Heroes in Cairo. Accompanied by high-ranking army officials and members of the Cabinet, President Muhammad H. Mubarak respectfully presented a wreath to the martyrs of the October war. This scene cannot but make people recall the past and the change that Egypt has undergone in the past year. On this day 9 years ago, brave Egyptian troops victoriously crossed the Suez Canal, trampled on the Bar-Lev line of defense and destroyed the myth of Israel's invincibility. This day 1 year ago, former President Mohammed Anwar as-Sadat was assassinated. This is an unforgettable date.

When the nation was thus put into a crisis, Mubarak was assigned the heavy task of taking the top leading post of the country. Though the path was rough and bumpy and full of obstacles, Egypt has been steadily forging ahead under the guidance of the spirit of the October war.

The Egyptian press and some Arab newspapers have fully approved President Mubarak's achievements over the past year since he became president. Within the scope of domestic affairs, President Mubarak has fulfilled two important tasks. First, he has adopted appropriate policies to achieve a basic stability in Egypt's domestic situation. President Mubarak has stressed democratic dialogue and striven to win the cooperation of the opposition parties. While suppressing and banning the religious extremist organizations, he at the same time strengthened ideological and religious education among the youth. This has achieved very satisfactory results. Although the religious extremist organizations supported by foreign countries still constitute a major threat to the stability of the situation, and although the People's Assembly has decided to extend the period of the enforcement of the Emergency Act, viewed as a whole, the political situation in Egypt is still fairly stable. Some Egyptian commentators have pointed out that the key lies in President Mubarak's ability to solve complicated economic problems in a relatively short period of time and to help the low income stratum of people overcome difficulties in their lives. The second task he has fulfilled is that on 25 April, Egypt overcame various kinds of obstructions and resistance on Israel's part, recovered its territory in the Sinai and fulfilled the great task of the reunification of the country.

During the past year, Egyptian foreign policy has undergone a remarkable change. Diplomatic and press cricles there have both pointed out that the basic content of President Mubarak's foreign policy is his emphasis on Egypt being a part of the Arab world. Since the war in Lebanon broke out, Egypt has reviewed its previous foreign policies. On 3 October, President Mubarak strongly denounced Israel's expansionist policy at a meeting of the Egyptian People's Assembly and said that the Israeli authorities' implementation of this policy could bring about "serious results." On the 20th of last month, Egypt urgently recalled its ambassador from Israel. It has been reported by other sources that the unofficial and commercial exchanges between Egypt and Israel have already been stopped.

In its relationship with the United States, Egypt has also deliberately enlarged the distance between the two countries. Egypt no longer avoids pointing out the "negative aspect" of the Middle East policies of the United States in order to urge the United States to change its stand of refusing to recognize the Palestinian people's right of self-determination and of opposing the establishment of a Palestinian state.

At the same time, Egypt has also strengthened its influence in the Third World. Not long ago, President Mubarak visited Yugoslavia and Romania and stressed that Egypt would make contributions to the Nonaligned Movement.

Since last October, relations between Egypt and other Arab countries have been gradually improved. It is a general view that the normalization of relations between Egypt and other Arab countries is only a matter of time. Egypt's approval of the results of the Fes summit meeting has shown that there is already a reliable foundation for coordinated action between Egypt and other Arab countries.

As this correspondent finishes his report this afternoon, the Egyptian people and troops along the banks of the Suez Canal are carrying out a simulated maneuver of a forced crossing of the canal. The veteran soldiers who took part in the October war are setting up a floating bridge again and bravely dashing toward the Egyptian territory in Sinai. What are they thinking about? Surely this spirit of challenging death and giving their lives for their motherland is the very spirit they need in carrying out the peaceful construction of their motherland and in defending the fruits of peace that their martyrs have paid for in blood.

EMERGENCE OF ISRAELI PEACE MOVEMENT NOTED

[Round-up: "Peace Movement in Israel by Correspondent Mei Zhenmin" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, October 11 (XINHUA) -- A peace movement against the expansionist policy of the Begin regime has been rising in Israel in the past few months.

On September 25, some 350,000 Israelis -- about one tenth of the country's population -- took part in a demonstration in Tel Aviv, demanding peace and opposing the aggressive war against Lebanon.

The movement actually started much earlier. On July 3, one month after the invasion of Lebanon, some 80,000 people demonstrated in the same city, shouting: "No war," "Peace with Palestinians."

The movement has extended to various circles including politicians and the army. Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin and Defense Minister Ari'el Sharon were sharply criticized by many parliament members after the massacre of Palestinians in Lebanon in mid-September. Several high-ranking officials, including three Cabinet ministers, offered their resignations.

The British news agency REUTER quoted Israeli military sources as saying in a report that "controversy over the Lebanese war has rocked the Isareli army and dissent is affecting all ranks" and that "pacifist trends never seen before in wartime" have appeared.

Many Israeli armymen in Lebanon took the war as "unnecessary." When Israeli army Chief-of-Staff Rafael Eitan went to see his men at an assembly point, one soldier shouted: "We don't want a war -- We want to go home."

Radio Israel said some 1,000 officers and soldiers delivered a petition to Sharon on Sept. 29, refusing to be sent to Lebanon.

The mounting peace movement in Israel is a sign of the awakening of the Isareli people under the high-handed, unpopular policies of the Begin regime. As the whole world has witnessed, Begin has, since coming into power as the Likud leader in 1977, pursued an expansionist hard line more obstinately than his predecessors in the government. The Begin regime has not only inherited the Zionist policy, but has gone even further in refusing to withdraw from all Arab territories it occupied, and in annexing the Golan Heights, the West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip in an attempt to set up the greater Israeli empire.

Sharon's study report on Israel's strategy in the 80s puts forward the nuts and bolts of Israel's expansionist strategy.

Israel's bombing of the Iraqi nuclear plant, its annexation of the Golan Heights, its imposing of civilian jurisdiction in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip and the recent aggressive attack in Lebanon -- these are all steps in the implementation of such an expansionist strategy. This strategy runs completely against the Israeli people's desire to live in peace.

Begin has brought untold sufferings to the Israeli people in the five years since he took office. His government has constantly strengthened the military apparatus and expanded the settlements in the occupied area. This has resulted in a drastic increase of national expenditure. The gross national product for 1981 reached 21 billion U.S. dollars while the financial budget for the year 1981-82 amounted to 25 billion U.S. dollars. It is rarely seen worldwide that the financial budget swallows the whole gross national product. In order to meet such a big expenditure, the Begin government has turned to foreign countries for aid while asking the Israeli people to tighten their belts. As a result, foreign debts have increased from 10.4 billion U.S. dollars in 1977 to 24 billion U.S. dollars in 1982, with averaged liabilities for each person reaching 6,000 U.S. dollars. The inflation rate is 137.6 percent.

The bad economic conditions have aroused strong resentment among the Israeli people. 500,000 Israelis (accounting for about one seventh of the population) have left Israel in the past five years. The June war against Lebanon has resulted in a loss of 5 billion U.S. dollars and 20,000 casualties. This has inevitably led to the sharpening of contradictions between the Israeli people and the Begin government, thus pushing forward rapidly the peace movement at home.

SUPPORT OF SOUTH AFRICAN PEOPLE'S STRUGGLE NOTED

[Text] Beijing, October 11 [date as received] (XINHUA) -- China strongly condemns the South African authorities for pursuing a policy of apartheid and resolutely supports the South African people's just struggle. This was reaffirmed today by Huang Hua, state councillor and minister of foreign affairs of China, in a message addressed to Al-Haji Yusuff Maitama-Sule, chairman of the Special Committee Against Apartheid of the United Nations, on the occasion of the Day of Solidarity with South African Political Prisoners (Oct. 11). The message demands the immediate and unconditional release of Nelson Mandela and all the other nationalists who have been put in prison by the South African racist authorities. The message says: "For years, the South African authorities have pursued a barbarous policy of racial oppression, wantonly arresting, imprisoning and killing leaders of the nationalist movement and the black people."

"The fascist atrocities committed by the South African racist regime have aroused the strong indignation of the international community and evoked the strong resistance of the South African people," the message says. "As an important part of the struggle of the oppressed nations and peoples against imperialism and colonialism, the struggle waged by the South African people against the racist rule and for national liberation has won the wide sympathy and support of the world's people," it continues.

"The Chinese Government and people have consistently and firmly supported the people of South Africa in their struggle against colonialism and racism and for national liberation," the message declares.

"We are convinced that, with the solidarity and support of the African people and the people of the world at large, the South African people will win final victory in their struggle against racism and for freedom and liberation," it says.

RENMIN RIBAO ON PARTY STYLE, PARTY OBJECTIVES

[Article by Wu Xiuyong [0702 4423 3057] and Pei Shaojun [5952 1421 6511]: "Party Style and Realization of the Party's Grand Objectives"]

[Text] In his report to the 12th CPC Congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang issued the grand objective of building our country into a highly civilized, highly democratic, modern socialist country. He also pointed out that in order to meet the requirements of the party's general tasks in the new historical period, it is necessary to vigorously straighten out party style and organizations, and to bring about a basic improvement in party style. This is important policy, serving as a guarantee to the party in undertaking the historical mission.

In recent years, some people used to say that the objectives issued by the party's Central Committee were grand and inspiring, but one would certainly lose one's confidence and be suspicious of the realization of objectives when seeing the unhealthy practice within the party. Though partial and unreasonable, this saying really reflects a problem, that is, party style and party image produce a great impact on the confidence of the people in realizing grand objectives.

When we say party style, we mean the style, habit and character of a Communist in his ideology, politics, work, life and other fields. Generally speaking, a party's program and line correspond with its style. In judging a party, people must not only pay attention to its programs and declarations, but also must pay attention to its practical action. Party style is something which can be easily felt by people. Therefore, it is first of all through their observation of party style and party members' practical actions that the broad masses of the people understand the party and realize the correctness of the party's program and line as well as the justice of the party's cause.

Nurtured by Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought, our party, since its birth more than 60 years ago, has established a series of fine traditions and style in the protracted and arduous revolutionary struggles. In order to realize the party's objectives, countless Communists have stepped into the breach one after another and fought bravely. They have shown their noble character and morality in fearing neither hardship nor difficulties, neither bloodshed nor sacrifice, being unselfish, dedicating themselves to others, being the first to bear hardships and the last to enjoy comforts, rigidly observing discipline, integrating themselves with the masses, living a hard life and being honest in performing their official duties. It is through these Communists and their fine style that the broad masses of the people understand that they truly serve the interests of the vast majority of the people and that the cause they are fighting for is a just, most hopeful and promising one. Hence, they trust the party, respect the party, voluntarily follow the party and firmly believe that the communist cause is bound to win. The fighting course of our party has shown that in order to make people believe that revolutionary objectives can be achieved, it is necessary to conduct propaganda and education in ideology and theory. The influence and affection of the Communists' model behavior and excellent style on the masses is concrete and convincing propaganda.

When we review the history of the revolutionary struggle, we will find that wherever things were most difficult and hard, there would the Communists appear and the party's excellent style would shine brightly. In battlefields, they took the initiative to charge forward. In courts they refuted enemies with justice. On execution grounds they faced death unflinchingly and died martyrs' deaths. In daily work they worked conscientiously and were not upset by criticism. At leading posts they were so absorbed as to forget food and sleep and spared no effort in the performance of their duties. In war years and difficult times they shared weal and woe with the masses and made joint efforts to fight courageously. At dangerous moments they left living hopes to others and kept death risks to themselves.

Acting in this way, our party has established a noble image in the minds of the people with its revolutionary spirit and excellent style. Therefore, however great the difficulties people might meet and however serious the setbacks people might suffer in the revolutionary course, they will resolutely follow the party with the belief of being bound to triumph in the end.

However, we must also see that due to the disturbance and sabotage carried out by the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques in the 10 years of internal disorder as well as the increasing corruption of various exploting classes under new circumstances, there have existed within the party the problems of impurities in ideology, style and organization. The problem of impurity in party style is very serious among some party members, cadres and in some units. For example, some take advantage of their power to seek private interest, and invade, occupy and squander the properties of the state and collectives. Some seek privileges, occupy more houses in contravention of relevant regulations and use public funds to build private apartments. Some seek special treatment and consideration for their relatives, sons and daughters and friends in such fields as enrollment in higher schools, promotion, employment and going abroad. Some use public funds to entertain and fete others, willfully allocate money and property and establish connections for their private interests. All they care for is their private interests and that of their families and they leave aside the party's fighting objectives, the future and destiny of the party and the country and the people's sufferings.

Impure party style has brought various bad consequences. In particular, it damages the intimate relationship between the party and the people, seriously impairs the party's image and lowers the party's prestige, thus shaking the confidence of the masses in realizing the grand objectives. The advanced and model nature of the Communist Party members is a conspicuous mark with which people distinguish our party from other political parties. If our party members and cadres do not take the initiative to fight for the communist cause but engage in unhealthy practices, they will lose completely their advanced andmodel nature.

In such a circumstance, if they continue to call on and mobilize the masses to believe in communism and fight for its realization, they will not only become less persuasive but will also be strongly disliked by the masses, or even lead them to the conviction that communist propaganda is unrealistic. Such cases are very common in real life. Leading cadres in some units are keen on unhealthy practice and are not so honest in performing their official duties. Consequently, the masses will take an indifferent attitude toward their impassioned speeches. People have every reason to ask: When shall we realize the grand objectives if we depend on such leaders?

Both positive and negative experiences have taught us that under the circumstances of correct line, guiding principles and policies of the party, wherever there is a pure party style, party organizations will be able to unite people more closely, to strengthen fighting will and to raise confidence. The party's line, guiding principles and policies will also be implemented more smoothly and the work will be carried out more vigorously. Likewise, wherever there is an impure party style, party organizations will impair their prestige, unhealthy practices will have their way, people will be demoralized and lose their belief, the party's line, guiding principles and policies will not be carried out and the work will be damaged.

Therefore, we must not underestimate the bad influence which impure party style might have on people's belief. To rectify party style in order to strengthen belief has become a sharp and urgent issue raised for us by reality.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the party's Central Committee has all along treated party style as a most serious issue concerning the life and death of the party, and has made strenuous efforts and adopted a series of practical measures to rectify the impure style within the party.

The 12th CPC Congress in particular, which is of great historical significance, has clearly put forward that the rectification of party style and the straightening out of party organizations should be treated as the prime issue of the party, and 3 years will be spent to resolutely carry out an overall rectification so as to bring about a basic improvement in party style. All these have shown the party's unequivocal attitude to fight against impure party style and its determination to carry out a thorough rectification. We must heighten our confidence by this and see the promising prospect of a basic improvement in party style.

Bad style is the archenemy of the party and the people, and its seriousness and perniciousness must in no way be underestimated. However, it is absolutely wrong to go to the other extreme and to treat bad style as an incurable disease and become pessimistic and demoralized. We must realize that there is only a handful of people who engage in unhealthy practices and stick to bad style within the party and that the mainstream of the party contingent is healthy and powerful. Especially through the recovery and reorganization in recent years, there has been a great improvement within the party and the party's prestige is becoming higher and higher. Whether veteran revolutionaries or newcomers who have just joined the party, they are all working selflessly at different posts with hearts devoted to the communist cause. Their noble characters and excellent style have played a model and initiative role among the broad masses and have encouraged and inspired them to fight for the realization of the four modernizations. Understandably, due to various reasons, bad style is somewhat durable, which explains the complicated and hard nature of the work to rectify it, since a certain process is needed. With the correct leadership of the party's Central Committee and the supervision of various discipline inspection commissions at all levels as well as with a series of party regulations and laws and the vast number of party members and masses who detest unhealthy practice and bad style, so long as we adopt correct and reliable guiding principles and carry them on, we will certainly throughly rectify bad style.

We are deeply convinced that through the overall rectification, our party will become more vigorous and will appear among the people with a new gesture. The people of various nationalities in the country will unite more closely around the party and confidently create an overall new situation of socialist construction for modernization.

STRATEGY FOR ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT VIEWED

[Article by Wang Jue [3769 3778] and Wu Zhenkun [0702 2182 0981]: "Strategic Priorities Are Basic Links in Achieving the Strategic Goal"]

[Text] In his report at the 12th CPC National Congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang said that to achieve the strategic goal of quadrupling the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production in economic development, we must "in the next 20 years keep a firm hold on agriculture, energy, transportation, education and science as the basic links, the strategic priorities in China's economic growth."

To set agriculture, energy, transportation, education and science as strategic priorities in economic growth is an important strategic policy decision or strategic arrangement made at the 12th CPC National Congress. It is of decisive significance in realizing the strategic goal in 20 years.

The Importance of Correctly Setting Strategic Priorities

In a given historical period, the process of development of the whole national economy, including the various means adopted to accomplish the main tasks in this period and the processes of development among the various means, is an undertaking involving a complicated composite of contradictions. Contained therein must be principal contradictions that have a decisive effect on the whole situation. As far as the national economy -- a composite of contradictions -- is concerned, the main contradictions contained therein that have a decisive effect constitute the basic means of the various means adopted to achieve the strategic goal and the basic links of the various links.

These are also the strategic priorities that must be given attention. Therefore, in accomplishing strategic tasks for economic development in a given historical period in a country's economic growth, there will objectively develop one or several strategic priorities.

Strategic priorities are the main targets of attack selected in realizing the strategic goal and the main components of various measures adopted to realize the strategic goal. Therefore, it is of primary importance to correctly set a strategic goal. But whether or not proper strategic priorities are set also has a great bearing on the country's economic growth. Judging from the history and the realities of our country, there are such experiences, both positive and negative. In socialist economic construction, there are cases of success due to the proper choice of strategic priorities and also cases of setbacks due to the improper choice of strategic priorities. During the period of the First 5-Year Plan, to lay a foundation for industry and thus achieve the strategic goal for national industrialization then set, we took those industrial sectors of a fundamental nature (chiefly embodied in 156 projects) as priorities in industrialization, thus stimulating the quick development of the national economy. After 1957, we put forth the strategic goal that called for our industry to catch up with and surpass Britain in iron and steel and other main products in 15 years or in a much shorter period of time. Based on the demands of this goal, we took iron and steel as the only strategic priority in industrial development. We further raised the strategic slogan "take steel as the key link," carrying the emphasis upon steel to an inappropriate stage. As a result, the development of the national economy suffered a serious setback. This was, of course, first caused by errors made in setting the strategic goal and in adopting the pattern for the "Leap Forward." But the improper selection of strategic priorities was also an important cause. As things now stand, since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the party Central Committee has in economic work laid emphasis on overcoming the "leftist" mistakes that had for a long period of time marked guiding ideology in the past. First of all, it has taken up agriculture as a strategic priority. It has restored and enlarged the decisionmaking power of rural communes and brigades and restored private plots, secondary occupations of families and fair trade in the country, gradually introducing various versions of the production responsibility system which call for linking production with pay. Meanwhile, it has raised the purchase prices for grain and some other agricultural products. It has subsequently further solved the problem concerning the guideline for a diversified economy, thus bringing about marked changes in the features of agriculture and making it thrive where it used to stagnate. This has played an important role in bringing about a turn for the better in the whole economic situation and the political situation.

Both these positive and negative experiences tell us that even if the strategic goal is formulated on a scientific basis and practicable, given the improper choice of strategic priorities, the goal also cannot be achieved in a satisfactory manner, and cannot be achieved even fundamentally. Therefore, in a given sense, with the strategic goal set, correctly setting strategic priorities is of decisive significance.

The Main Objective Basis for the Correct Selection of Strategic Priorities

Why was it that the 12th CPC National Congress set agriculture, energy, transportation, education and science as strategic priorities in economic development? This was by no means dictated by subjective will but determined by the peculiar place and role of these sectors in the development of the national economy as a whole.

Agriculture, energy, transportation, education and science are fundamental factors directly affecting and restraining the scale, pace, technical level and economic results of our economic construction at present and in the future, factors affecting the whole situation.

Agriculture is the foundation of the national economy. First, grain is the most fundamental means of subsistence for people. If the problem of food is not properly solved and if the simple reproduction of labor can hardly be maintained, then there is no way of carrying out any economic activity in a normal way. Second, agriculture provides raw materials for industry. Third, agriculture is a broad domestic market for industry. Fourth, agriculture also serves to accumulate funds for itself and for the state. Fifth, the overall development of agriculture not only allows the full exploitation of natural resources but also helps solve the problem of work for an ever growing amount of surplus labor. Therefore, how agriculture fares and its quick or slow development have a significant effect on the consolidation and development of the significant situation of stability and unity.

Energy is an indispensable material in people's production efforts and everyday life and especially an indispensable source of power in contemporary mass production. The operation of machinery, the movement of motor vehicles, the smelting of iron and steel, lighting and so forth are all inseparable from energy. The exploration and exploitation of energy directly concern the scale and pace of development of the national economy. Therefore, the energy problem is closely bound up with the national econmy. What energy is to economic development is what grain is to a man's life. In the contemporary era, energy has become a problem of a strategic nature.

Communications and transportation provide links for economic ties between given areas and between production and consumption. A look at history shows that the sailing of steamers, railroad traffic, stream and river navigation and telegraphic operations have stimulated the great development of the economies of various countries and the formation of the world market. Under modern conditions, the development of communications and transportation must especially be brought inline with the development of production and circulation. Only in this way can we stimulate production specialization and cooperation, promote the exchange of production skills and the rational arrangement of productive forces, increase the sales of products and the supplies of raw and other materials and bring about the development of domestic commerce and foreign trade. Therefore, communications and transportation must lead the way, one step ahead. Only in this way can we guarantee the smooth development of the nationl economy.

The development of the national economy must depend on scientific and technological progress. As productive forces, science and technology have become an ever greater driving force in practice. Science, through matter, becomes technology to form realistic productive forces and is embodied in laborers, the subject of labor and the means of labor. Science is getting more and more closely related to production. It permeates through various aspects of social production to constitute a very important factor in the development of modern productive forces. Now, a big increase in labor productivity chiefly depends upon scientific and technical forces. The economic development of the economically developed countries of today has relied more and more on science and technology. The economic development of our country must also increasingly depend upon science and technology. The key to the realization of modernization is the modernization of science and technology. This is a scientific summary of historical experiences.

To develop modern science and technology, we must have large numbers of skilled personnel. Without skilled personnel who master modern science and technology, there can be no modernization of science and technology, Meanwhile, modern work tools and technological processes are unprecedentedly complicated. They represent science having been transformed into matter. This, of course, calls for their users or operators to have an appropriate scientific knowledge. Under these production conditions, the role of laborers' physical element and that of their mental element are undergoing changes. The trend is that the role of the former is decreasing while that of the latter is increasing. This has imposed an increasingly exacting demand upon the laborers' cultural and scientific levels. The higher their cultural and scientific levels and the richer their production experiences, the higher is the level of productivity.

It is impossible for a country devoid of a large well-trained labor force to realize the modernization of the national economy. If the modernization of science and technology is the key to the realization of the "four modernizations," then big progress and big improvement in education can be considered as the key to the key.

The simple analysis given shows that agriculture,energy, transportation, education and science are assuming a peculiar position and playing a special role in the modern economy. They are indispensable and extremely important pillars in the normal operation and the quick development of the modern economy. Therefore, to achieve the strategic goal of quadrupling the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production by the end of this century, they must, of course, objectively be made strategic priorities in economic construction.

The Urgency of Properly Setting Strategic Priorities

Agriculture, energy, transportation, education and science have become strategic priorities also because of the urgent demands imposed on them by the realization of the strategic goal. At present, our agriculture, energy, transportation, education and science have become long-term, fundamental limiting factors in economic development. Therefore, "in light of the whole situation, to achieve the above goal of economic development, the most important thing is to properly take care of agriculture, energy, transportation, education and science." This is to say that in light of China's actual conditions, we must urgently solve the problem concerning these several strategic priorities.

At present, our agricultural production equipment is still very backward and the technical level is not high. Of the cultivated land of the whole country, the area plowed by machinery still accounts for less than 50 percent. Concerning the amount of manure applied, the available component per mu is only a dozen jin. Of the whole country's cultivated land, the area capable of being irrigated represents less than 50 percent. The ability to fight natural disasters is still very weak. Many areas are at the mercy of the elements when it comes to the problem of food. Labor productivity is relatively low. Agricultural output available per capita is also relatively low. The commodity economy is not well developed, the commodity rate low and economic returns poor. Therefore, the conflict between backward agriculture and modern economic construction is a principal problem in realizing the strategic goal of economic development. We must keep a tight hold on agriculture as a priority and continue to develop the current very favorable situation in agriculture. To this end, we must continuously uphold for a long time to come the production responsibility system established in the countryside. We must fully arouse the enthusiasm of the masses of peasants and stimulate the development of agricultural productive forces. We must continue to put grain production in first place. Meanwhile, we must enlarge the scope for production and energetically develop a diversified economy, concentrating on production in a penetrating and extensive manner and bringing about the overall development of agriculture, forestry, husbandry, secondary occupations and fishery. We must energetically strengthen the study and popularization of agricultural science and technology, linking the results of research in modern science and technology with the fine tradition of intensive and meticulous farming in our agriculture. We must greatly improve agricultural production conditions, producing an increasingly large supply of agricultural products in order to satisfy the needs of the development of industry and the needs of an improved living standard for the people.

Energy and transportation are weak links in current economic development. Whether or not the strategic goal in our economic development can be realized depends, to a large degree, on whether or not energy and transportation can be properly taken care of. At present, energy is in extremely short supply. There is an extremely great contradiction between freight volume and transportation capacity, making it impossible for many enterprises to fully develop their production capacity and hampering the operation of many links of circulation. This seriously interferes with the normal operation of the national economy. The development of energy and the building of transportation facilities involve not only a large investment but also a long cycle. Therefore, there cannot possibly be a great change in conditions surrounding energy and transportation needs in the near future.

We must thoroughly implement the correct guideline of solving the energy problem and pay equal attention to exploration and conservation. We must give priority to conservation in the near future. In conserving energy, we must not only rely upon the readjustment of the production structure but, more important, rely on technical transformation and the improvement of the management level. Meanwhile, we must concentrate a proper amount of capital on developing and building new oilfields and coalfields, creating conditions for future development. We must combine the development of energy with the building of transportation facilities. We should also let transportation lead the way, one step ahead. We must first strengthen railroad and port construction. Meanwhile, we should also pay attention to the development of water transportation, highways and postal and telecommunications facilities. We must try by every means to enable communications and transportation to adapt to the needs of the development of the whole economy.

Generally speaking, our current scientific and technological levels are still in a backward state. Industrial production skills are, on the whole, at a level equivalent to that of economically developed countries in the 1950's or in the early 1960's. Skills in some fields are still more backward. Due to the backwardness of production skills and the management level, consumption of raw material is high and returns are poor. When it comes to education, we have fallen far behind in satisfying the needs of education at the junior, intermediate or advanced levels. The quality of education is poor. The quality of fundamental education is still poorer. The educational structure is irrational. Vocational education is underdeveloped. Such a backward state of science and education affects not only the building of socialist material civilization but also the building of socialist spiritual civilization. To push science and education forward, we must exert all our efforts to strengthen and develop various educational undertakings, cultivate various skilled personnel and raise the scientific and cultural levels of the whole nation. Only with the tremendous development of our scientific and educational undertakings can they become a great driving force behind the realization of the strategic goal in economic development.

Exactly because of their importance and backwardness, agriculture, energy, transportation, education and science have become the main contradictions and strategic priorities in our modern economic construction. Comrade Mao Zedong said: "A leader at any level should concentrate his attention on problems and actions that are most important and of most decisive significance to what is under his charge, as far as the whole situation is concerned." ("Selected Works of Mao Zedong," vol 1, p 160) So long as we act in accordance with this important guiding ideology or work method by Comrade Mao Zedong and keep a tight hold on and take good care of these several strategic priorities, we can surely realize smoothly the great goal for economic development set at the 12th CPC National Congress.

IMPORTANCE OF IMPROVED EDUCATION STRESSED

[Text] Beijing, October 13 (XINHUA) -- The development of China's economy requires greater density of knowledge among China's population, said Education Minister He Dongchang today.

The minister was receiving delegates to the UNESCO sponsored field operational seminar on adult education and literacy.

China's goal set at the recent party congress is to quadruple the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production by the year 2000. Priority is given to agriculture, energy, transport, education and science.

He Dongchang laid particular emphasis on the need to raise educational level of the peasants. Rural prosperity cannot rely on diligent manual labor alone, the minister said.

Since the responsibility system has been introduced among the Chinese peasantry, quite a number of peasant families with ten thousand yuan yearly income have emerged and, consequently, peasants are more eager to learn science and technology.

One of the very important factors in adult education is the training of cadres, especially grassroot cadres in rural areas, because with a higher level of education themselves, they will become more aware of the need to develop education in their localities, said the minister.

However, he said, the development of education lags behind economic development. Efforts must be made to open up new ways in education, to rally the whole society and allow greater flexibility. About 78 thousand students graduated from the T.V. university this year, but efforts are still inadequate. Measures will be taken to add more T.V. channels for educational purpose.

The minister said, as China plans to popularize primary education by 1990, pre-school education should be developed step by step. Where condition permits, cities as well as well-off rural areas should popularize secondary education.

The Asian Pacific regional field operational seminar on adult education and literacy opened on October 4 at Foshan, Guangdong Province. Delegates from various countries visited Shandong and Henan Provinces in two separate groups and then converged in Beijing this morning to sum up their investigations.

This evening, the minister and Gao Yi, chairman of the National Commission of the People's Republic of China for UNESCO gave a banquet in honor of all participants to the seminar.

PLA AIR FORCE PUBLICIZES CONGRESS DOCUMENTS

[Text] Among the PLA Air Force units, more than 8,000 cadres have been assigned to explain and publicize the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress in various units, institutes of higher learning and aviation repair plants and among cadres, fighters, workers and their dependents. Leading comrades of the PLA Air Force and cadres at all levels of leading organs of the PLA Air Force have taken the lead in this work and set examples for the cadres assigned to explain and publicize the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress.

PLA Air Force Commander Zhang Tingfa and Political Commissar Gao Houliang prepared their own notes in explaining and publicizing the documents to office cadres. Shortly after the 12th CPC National Congress, party committees of the PLA Air Force Headquarters, the Political Department, the Logistics Department and the Aviation Engineering Department immediately trained more than 300 cadres at and above the regimental level for this work by having them visit nearly 200 grassroots units to meet cadres, fighters, workers and their dependents. To ensure the quality of the work of the cadres assigned to explain and publicize the documents, many leading comrades of the party committees of the air force units personally prepared notes and set good examples. In order to achieve the general objective, the assigned cadres have also conducted investigation and study in the units to find out what the cadres and fighters have in mind and their opinion concerning their work. They have also prepared notes in the light of the actual conditions in the respective units for explanation and dissemination. Emphasizing neither quantity nor perfection, they have endeavored to get the people to understand what they explain and publicize and have tried to help cadres and fighters solve one or two actual problems at each session so that they can grasp one or two basic viewpoints.

[Text] According to a JIEFANGJUN BAO report, the masses of commanders and fighters in road construction units of the PLA Capital Construction Engineering Corps have, in 16 years of hard work, made important contributions to developing the country's transportation system, strengthening preparedness against war, and building up the border regions.

These units were responsible for the construction and reconstruction of the Qinghai-Xizang, Sichuan-Xizang, Qinghai-Xinjiang, (Tianshan), (Yingshan) and other important highways. The cadres and fighters work in mountain valleys, live in tents, drink water melted from snow and salted vegetables year in, year out. They carry on a tenacious struggle against snow storms, avalanches, landslides and mud-rock flows, build roads along sheer mountain cliffs and erect bridges across rapids.

By the first half of this year, the road construction units had built a total of more than 2,000 kilometers of highways and buildings with a total floor space of nearly 50,000 square meters.

PRC WILL NOW RECEIVE INDIVIDUAL TOURISTS

OW131956 Beijing XINHUA in English 1532 GMT 13 Oct 82

[Text] Shijiazhuang, October 13 (XINHUA) -- China will start as of now, to receive individual foreign tourists, said Han Kehua, director of the National Tourism Administration at a tourism conference in Zhouxian County, Hebei Province today.

According to preliminary projection, he said, individual tourists will account for 20 to 30 percent of total tourists to China by the year 1990 and the percentage will rise to 30 to 40 percent by the end of this century.

China's tourist industry started in 1978. Foreign tourists numbered 229,000 in that year and grew to 670,000 in 1981. Almost all the tourists came in groups owing to the restraints of transportation and hotel facilities, he said.

Han Kehua called on all tourist departments to get ready for the influx of individual tourists and provide them with good services, including sightseeing tours, hotel accommodations and travel facilities.

The four-day conference is scheduled to close tomorrow. Attending were 70 representatives from 13 provinces, municipalities and regions as well as from central government departments.

SOUNDLESS DEMOLITION MIXTURE DEVELOPED

OW131412 Beijing XINHUA in English 0254 GMT 13 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, October 13 (XINHUA) -- A new, non-explosive, demolition mixture which can destroy concrete structures or rocks with little vibration, noise or gas, has been trial-produced in Beijing by the Cement Institute of the Research Institute of Building Materials.

According to the institute, the mixture -- which is in powder form -- is easy to manufacture and safe to transport and the production cost is low.

A recent test showed that one day after the powder was mixed with water to form a paste and filled into holes of several large blocks of concrete, the paste expanded to make the concrete collapse.

The institute said that since the traditional explosive method of destroying buildings frequently injures people and damages nearby facilities, the new method is suitable for use in pulling down buildings in crowded cities and narrow areas as well as for mining granite, white marble and other valuable stone.

The soundless demolition mixture is being trial-used and is scheduled to go into production next year.

BALLOONS USED FOR ATMOSPHERIC OBSERVATION

OW111447 Beijing XINHUA in English 1222 GMT 11 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, October 11 (XINHUA) -- An atmospheric observation balloon recently launched by Chinese scientists reached an altitude of 33,000 meters in Xianghe County, Hebei Province, according to the Chinese Academy of Sciences.

The 176-kilogram instrument package carried by the balloon provided data of solar radiation on 20-micron-wave length in observing far infrared rays and cosmic gamma rays.

China has established a complete system for high altitude balloon observation including manufacture, launching technology, flight command, recovery of the instrument package, telemetry and telecontrol, tracking and locating, single-axis attitude control, data terminals and ground facilities.

Over the past four years, 28 high altitude ballons have been launched by Chinese scientists. The biggest had a diameter of 42 meters with a volume of 30,000 cubic meters. The maximum load carried was 200 kilograms and the longest flight more than half a day.

Participating scientists are mainly from the Institute of High-Energy Physics, the Institute of Atmospheric Physics, the Space Science Center, the Shanghai Observatory and the Guangzhou Electronics Institute.

High altitude balloons are widely used for observation in the fields of atmospheric physics and chemistry, high-energy astrophysics, cosmic radiation, infrared astronomy, remote sensing, high altitude biology and physiology.

COOPERATION SOUGHT IN OFFSHORE OIL EQUIPMENT

[Text] A subsidiary of the China State Shipbuilding Corp is setting up joint ventures with some leading world oil companies to produce oil exploration equipment for use in China's search for offshore oil.

China Offshore Platform Engineering Corporation (COPECO), recently established to handle drilling and production oil platforms at sea, will later this month send a delegation to the United States to explore the potential for collaboration with Brown and Root Company and other important American companies. He Zhigang, executive deputy manager of COPECO, said in a interview.

Meanwhile, the corporation will send another delegation to France to complete an agreement with Union Industrielle et d'Enterprise of France (UIE), He Zhigang said.

COPECO signed a preliminary contract with UIE late last year when COPECO was being established.

Under the UIE contract, the two sides will produce medium-sized production platforms for use in the South China Sea. The construction of the Guangzhou Huangpu shipyard and its products will be designed by both sides.

Now COPECO is planning a bid used to build equipment for a production platform which will be used in the Chengbei oil field in China's Bohai Sea. COPECO hopes to cooperate with some leading American companies to build the platform. The order comes from the China National Oil Ministry and the Japanese organization responsible for the oilfield. These two have agreedjointly to explore the Bohai Sea.

There are favourable conditions for China to win the bidding, He Zhigang said. China published a regulation regarding cooperation with foreign companies for China offshore exploration and development, saying that China's own industries would be well protected and would co-operate with the world's technical leaders where necessary.

Both sides would bid together and jointly build production platforms. This would be a highly more competitive combination both in technology and in price, he said.

Well-Established

COPECO is already well-established as a builder of drilling rigs. Last month, under the supervision of the corporation, Dalian shipyard completed the building of two rigs for Baker Marine Corporation of the United States.

The corporation also reported that it had finished repairing a seriously worn and damaged foreign-made drilling rig, which had been salvaged from the ocean by Baker.

More than 500 tons of steel was used to replace old steel plates. The shipyard also replaced most of the old or poor-quality equipment.

COPECO is ready to establish a China offshore platform designing corporation later this month.

"The corporation is only a few months old with a small executive staff, but it sees to the building of various products and has the services of all the shipbuilding research institutes, shipyards and laboratories of the country," he said.

COPECO has received orders for multi-purpose supply vessels from Singapore. These ships can be used for tugging, sea transport and anchor handling.

Meanwhile, the corporation is busy preparing to build other ships of this kind for domestic use in the Bohai Sea, he said.

COMMENTATOR URGES DEVELOPING CITY SUBURBS

[Commentator's article: "City Suburbs Can Become Prosperous Faster"]

[Text] Comrade Deng Xiaoping, in his opening speech delivered at the 12th party congress, pointed out: There are three major tasks for our people in the 1980's, and economic construction is at the core of these three tasks. RENMIN RIBAO has published news and reports on the important changes which have taken place in Changping County since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, and the practice of this county has given new inspiration to the people. By really emancipating the mind, relaxing policies and livening up the economy closely centered on economic construction, it is entirely possible for the suburbs of Beijing and other cities to become prosperous sooner and faster.

The suburbs of Beijing have very favorable conditions to become prosperous. The suburbs have a total area of 16,000 square kilometers and a rural population of 3.77 million. They are situated on a vast plain which is only 60 percent hills. Natural conditions are very good and there is an abundance of resources. The level of agricultural production is high, communications and transportation are developed, all villages are linked by highways and every production team has electricity. They have more water conservancy facilities, machinery and chemical fertilizers. They also have the support of the powerful scientific and technical force of the capital and their level of scientific farming is high. There is great potential in agricultural science and technology, and a number of advanced communes and production brigades have succeeded in doubling their output value in the last 3 years.

They have available experience to draw on, and what is more, they have the support of this big market of the capital and major cities. As long as they are good at applying and giving play to these exceptionally favorable natural conditions, certainly they will be able to make the suburbs of the capital prosperous as quickly as possible.

Have they the courage to become prosperous? How can they become prosperous? It is extremely important for the leading members to emancipate their minds. An important reason why the rural economy of Changping County has nearly doubled in the last 4 years is because the members of the country party committee have emancipated their minds and more firmly implemented the series of policies and principles of the third plenary session. They have done away with restrictions and reformed the systems which do not correspond to economic development. For example, they have changed unitary agricultural production, which contains a very large portion of the natural economy, into an integrated agricultural, industrial and commercial complex; changed the cadre designation system, which cannot give play to the initiative and creativity of the cadres, into a selective appointment system; and changed the organizational system, which makes no distinction between party and government and combines government administration and enterprise management with the result that individual work is affected and individual responsibility is confused, into the separation of party and government and the separation of government administration and enterprise management. All these have effectively promoted the development of the rural economy.

Facts have proven that in order to make the vast countryside prosperous as quickly as possible, they must not only emancipate themselves from unitary grain production and practice diversified economy in the planting industry, but they must also energetically develop the livestock and poultry-raising industry and carry out agricultural production in a broader sense. Proceeding from the condition of local natural resources, they must also set up all kinds of industrial and sideline industries serving the cities. Changping County in recent years has energetically developed industrial and sideline industries serving the capital. At present, the proportion of income from industrial and sideline industries already accounts for more than 66.1 percent of the whole rural economy. A similar proportion in the income of the peasants is also derived from industrial and sideline industries. The income of the peasants in Changping has nearly doubled in the last 4 years, and industrial and sideline industries have played a very important role. This explains why, in making the countryside prosperous more quickly, merely running in circles around the former concept of the traditional rural economy will not do. They must take the path of the all-round development of diversified economy and closely link together agriculture, industry and commerce. This also means that while developing agricultural production and industrial and sideline production, they must at the same time energetically develop commercial and service industries serving the cities and their own localities. In this way, not only will they be able to provide better facilities to the cities, but they will also be able to effectively promote the development of local industrial and sideline industries.

"Serve the capital, make the peasants prosperous and build a new countryside." These are the demands made by the Beijing Municipal CPC Committee for developing the economy of the suburbs. All rural areas in the suburbs of cities must serve the cities. The better they serve the cities, the faster they will become prosperous. The more prosperous the suburbs, the better will be their service to the cities as a result.

The suburbs serving the cities and the cities supporting the suburbs are aspects which cannot be overlooked in developing the economy of the suburbs faster and making the people of the suburbs prosperous more quickly. Leading organs in cities must make a success of two things. The first thing is changing those old restrictions that hinder the rapid economic development of the suburbs and promptly solving the new problems that have cropped up in the path of advance. The second thing is mobilizing the various professions and trades to energetically support the development of the rural economy. Banks and financial departments must offer support through funds. Commercial departments must help the enterprises of counties, communes and production brigades with organizing the supply of goods and the marketing of products.

Industrial as well as scientific and technical departments must give assistance and provide guidance to the enterprises of communes and production brigades in raising their technical level and create an excellent situation of the urban and rural areas in helping each other and promoting the development of the rural economy.

The economy of the Beijing suburbs has developed rather rapidly in recent years. However, there is still a gap in comparison with the demands of the third plenary session and the advanced districts throughout the country. Judging from the growth rate, average total agricultural output value was only 5.6 percent a year in the 20 years before the third plenary session. Since the third plenary session, the average growth rate has been only 6.5 percent a year. At present, some 20 percent of the communes and production brigades in the suburbs have still not successfully carried out the production responsibility system and their scientific and technical levels as well as their management level are also still rather low. To achieve the target of quadrupling production, enormous efforts are still required. We hope that that broad masses of cadres and people in the suburbs of the capital will conscientiously study and implement the guidelines of the documents of the 12th party congress, give full play to their initiative and creativity, use every means to tap potential and make their contributions by creating a new situation in the construction of the Beijing suburbs.

URBAN RESIDENTS BENEFIT FROM STATE SUBSIDIES

[Text] Beijing, 12 Oct (XINHUA) -- According to information recently supplied by the State Planning Commission, from 1979 to 1981, the state appropriated 62.8 billion yuan to finance subsidies and social welfare funds for urban residents in addition to adopting various measures to increase the workers' income, in spite of financial difficulties. The subsidies included those to offset price increases of basic consumer goods and those for rent. In 1981 alone, the subsidies to offset consumer price increases totalled 25 billion yuan, equal to 30 percent of China's total workers' wages. On an average, each urban resident enjoyed 164 yuan of those subsidies.

The 62.8 billion yuan may be broken down into three parts:

1. Subsidies amounting to 41.6 billion yuan were for offsetting price increases of grain, edible oil, nonstaple foodstuffs and related industrial products. The issuance of these subsidies was an important measure, adopted by the state to stabilize market prices and the urban residents' livelihood while the state raised the purchase price of agricultural and sideline products to develop agriculture and increase the peasants' income. Of the amount, 28.8 billion yuan covered grain and edible vegetable oil. The state subsidized 10 cents on each jin of grain and 80 cents on each jin of rapeseed oil sold to urban residents. Subsidies for nonstaple food, such as meat, fish, eggs, poultry and vegetables, amounted to 8 billion yuan. The state also subsidized various production and sales departments of textile goods, fuel for household use and other consumer goods with 4.8 billion yuan to offset price increases of raw materials.

2. Subsidies for house rent amounted to 3.5 billion yuan. China pursues a low house rent policy for urban residents and charges, on an average, 12 cents per square meter of floor space. The 3.5 billion yuan was subsidized to cover depreciation, repair and management of housing averaging at least 38 cents per square meter of floor space.

3. Social welfare funds cost 17 billion yuan. According to statistics, the state in the past 3 years spent 11.7 billion yuan on medical care for workers of enterprises and institutions and cadres from government offices. It also spent approximately 6 billion yuan on collective welfare, sports and cultural and propaganda activities of various organizations.

The departments concerned hold: The subsidies are a substantial help to urban residents. To enable the people to reduce expenditures is equal to increasing their income. In the past, people did not clearly know this. The release of the information now will help people know the general situation, the actual work and the difficulties of the state and make people work hard with one heart and one mind to accomplish the task of creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization set by the 12th CPC National Congress.

RENMIN RIBAO ON HISTROY OF REWARD, PUNISHMENT

[Article by Mu Futian [4476 4395 3944] and Ma Zhounian [7456 0719 1628]: "Giving Reward or Meting Out Punishment Where They Are Due Is 'Essential to the Smooth Functioning of Government'"]

[Text] Zhuge Liang, our country's famous statesman in the time of the Three Kingdoms, asserted that "giving reward to encourage contributions and meting out punishment to eliminate malpractices" are "essential to the smooth functioning of government." All farsighted and ambitious leaders in history always took reward and punishment as their important weapon in administering the country and the army. Proceeding from the basic interests of their own classes, they had to clearly define what was to be encouraged and what was to be prohibited on the one hand, and on the other had to select good and bad examples, commend the former and criticize the latter and thus give rewards and mete out punishment accordingly so as to enable people to draw lessons from the comparison between the positive and negative examples and to follow the former and take warning from the latter. In essence, giving reward and meting out punishment where they are due means to adhere to principles and reinforce discipline.

If we review the history of the rise and fall of all dynasties in our country, we will never fail to see that a healthy atmosphere would always prevail, evil practices would always be constrained, and the country would become prosperous and powerful whenever the system of reward and punishment was strictly carried out; and evil tendencies would dominate healthy trends and the country would decline day after day whenever the system of reward and punishment failed to function well. The Sui Dynasty was the most typical case to illustrate this statement. Despite its short life, this dynasty, which lasted for two generations, had a history of great order and chaos and of drastic rise and decline. Yang Jian, Emperor Wen of the Sui Dynasty was strict and fair in meting out reward and punishment. He often issued imperial edicts to commend officials who performed well. On one occasion, he personally promoted Liu Kuang, magistrate of Linying County who won the first place in the nationwide promotion examination for civil officials to be governor of Juzhou Prefecture; and on another occasion, he bestowed 300 bolts of fabric on Linghu Xi, governor of Bianzhou Prefecture who had won the first place in another promotion examination, and publicly commended the latter. On the other hand, he deposed the crown prince, Yang Yong, as the latter was fond of women and extravagant living; and placed his son Yang Jun in confinement as he had arbitrarily built palaces. When Yang Su, a minister, complained that the penalty was too heavy, Emperor Wen sternly reprimanded him: The law is equal for princes and the people. Do you think we have to formulate another law for princes? In light of these strict demands he placed on his sons, we can easily imagine how strict he was toward corrupt officials. These measures, which won the support of the people throughout the country, were the key for his revival of the country, which had suffered from protracted war and turmoil for more than 300 years, and for the society to prosper under the feudalist system.

However, his successor, Emperor Yang acted in a way completely contrary to his, making the satisfaction of his own desires the only criteria for reward and punishment. When Emperor Yang was enroute to Jiangdu on an inspection tour, three local officers came one after another to sincerely convince him to cancel his trip which might tire the people, drain the treasury and undermine the dynasty's foundation. However, the emperor was so angry that he killed these three officers.

When he received local officials in Jiangdu, what he was concerned with was not their achievements in their official career but their shares in the tribute to the throne. Two notorious and corrupt officials were immediately promoted in reward for their "contributions" in presenting rare curios. "An unhealthy trend which is prevalent in the upper strata will always receive a response from the lower strata." So, the performance and the quality of the bureaucratic apparatus was quickly spoiled, the people were thrown into dire poverty, and the foundation laid by Emperor Wen was destroyed in an instant. Eventually, the enormous tide of peasant uprising overwhelmed this autocrat. Examples like these, positive or negative, can easily be found in history.

By studying historical experiences, we can see that it is not an easy task to be strict and fair in meting out reward and punishment. The key is that we must adhere to three principles: 1) One must behave oneself well. 2) Reward and punishment must be given according to the law but not according to someone's words. 3) The law must be applied equally to everyone, regardless of their status and their relationship with the authorities.

A feudal ruler with an enterprising spirit was bound to judge between reward and punishment in accordance with the criterion of whether it would be advantageous or disadvantageous to his cause. Therefore, apart from some exceptional cases, most rulers could remain strict and fair in meting out reward and punishment. Nevertheless, an extravagant and imperious king would in turn take the satisfaction of his personal desire and prejudice as the criterion. As a result, justice and injustice were reversed, and wrongdoers were rewarded and honest people were punished. Sincere and pertinent remonstrations by honest ministers were always highly appraised by historiographers. However, the destinies of remonstrators were different. Justly remonstrating with Emperor Zhou of the Shang Dynasty, Bigan was cruelly killed after torture as he had irritated the king with his honest advice. This showed the fatuousness and self-indulgence of Emperor Zhou. For frankly criticizing Emperor Taizhong of the Tang Dynasty at the risk of incurring his displeasure, Wei Zheng was given generous rewards again and again as the emperor appreciated his contribution in "pacifying the people, benefiting the country and helping the dynasty forward." This showed the ambition of Emperor Taizhong to make the country prosperous and powerful. There are a great many examples of inappropriate reward and punishment in history. Can we not find their roots in the "unhealthy style" of the rulers themselves?

Under the circumstances that the words of a certain personage are worshipped in place of the law and the words are regarded as the law, the legal standard for meting out reward and punishment is demolished. This is one of the important causes which leads to inappropriate rewards and punishment. Let us take a historical fact recorded in the book "Important Political Events of the Reign of the Zhengguan Emperor" as an example. In the early Tang Dynasty, the government took active measures to select officials. However, some people tried to cheat the government with spurious qualification documents. So, "Emperor Taizhong issued an order, compelling them to surrender themselves, or condemning them to death otherwise." Several people who refused to surrender themselves were arrested later. Their cases were handed over to Minister Dai Zhou. However, the latter did not carry out the emperor's order and condemn these criminals to death but just sent them into exile according to the law. Hence an acute dispute occurred between the emperor and the minister. Emperor Taizhong asked Dai Zhou: I ordered you to condemn the criminals to death, but you just sent them into exile. Were you not trying to make me break my promise before the people? Will my promise still be valid then? Dai Zhou answered him unflinchingly: Your majesty entrusted me with the cases. All I could do was to process the cases in accordance with the law. By adhering to the law we create the credibility of the state, the greatest credibility of the state. Your words were based on your personal feelings. I would have undermined the state's greatest responsibility if I had handled the cases in light of your words which go against the law.

On hearing this, Emperor Taizhong turned out to be content. He said: My words were contrary to the law. You did well to correct my mistake. With an honest minister like you, I have nothing to be worried about! Thus the dispute finally concluded in a common understanding of abidance by law. The criminals were given appropriate punishment, and Dai Zhou, who had meted out punishment in accordance with the law, also received a reward from Emperor Taizong -- he was promoted to be a metropolitan official.

One of the characteristics of feudal society was the patriarchal hierarchy. In the eyes of many judicial officers, meting out reward and punishment meant to mete out reward and punishment according to one's social status and one's relationship with the authorities. Such practices would inevitably intensify the contradictions between classes, and thus upset the stability of the feudal rule. In view of this, some clever statesmen put forth and carried out some rational policies, such as "punishing a minister if he committed crimes and rewarding an ordinary citizen if he made contributions;" "meting out punishment regardless of kinship and giving reward regardless of grudge;" and so on. Such historical facts are numerous in history books. For example, Emperor Wu of the Han Dynasty condemned his nephew, the Lord of Zhaoping, to death by law ("Biography of Dongfang Shuo," "Han Shu"); Dong Xuan seriously penalized a trusted follower of Princess Yanghu ("The Biography of Dong Xuan," "Hou Han Shu"); Zhuge Liang reluctantly beheaded Ma Su ("The History of Shu," "Sanguo Zhi"); Cao Cao flogged members of wealthy and influential clans with a five-colored stick ("The History of Wei," "San Guo Zhi"); and so on. Such a good style of fairly and strictly meting out reward and punishment was undoubtedly of essential significance to safeguarding social order and helping forward historical development. Feudal statesmen who could observe this principle were not numerous, yet they radiated with eternal light in the ancient history of our country like stars glimmering in the night sky.

We are now undertaking the historical mission of creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization construction, for which a strict and fair system of reward and punishment is also indispensable. In comparison with our predecessors, we should and can uphold more firmly our principles, set up a sounder legal system and be fairer and stricter in meting out reward and punishment.

BRIEFS

GUIZHOU INDUSTRIAL, COMMUNICATIONS OUTPUT -- From January to September this year, Guizhou Province fulfilled 78.8 percent of its 1982 quota for its total industrial and communications output value. Its total industrial and communications output value in this period was 19.9 percent more than in the corresponding period last year. Comrade Jianabuer gave the first speech during the meeting. After summarizing the achievements made by the region in launching the five stresses, four beauties campaign over the past 2 years, he said: In the course of building spiritual civilization, we have accumulated certain experiences and started off well.

However, we can see that certain achievements in promoting courtesy and civility have not been consolidated.

Jianabuer continued: In order to deeply launch the campaign of five stresses, four beauties, we must first enhance our understanding of the strategic significance of building socialist spiritual civilization. Socialist spiritual civilization is an important characteristic of socialism and is an important manifestation of the superiority of the socialist system. Without socialist spiritual civilization, which is focused on communist ideology, we will be unable to build socialism. Thus, party committees at all levels must enhance their understanding of this on a high theoretical and political plane, repeatedly popularize the significance and role of building spiritual civilization, enhance their awareness and strengthen their sense of responsibility.

Jianbuer said: It is necessary to immediately arouse the enthusiasm of the cadres and masses to create an upsurge in launching the campaign of five stresses, four beauties. The key to launching the five stresses, four beauties campaign at present lies in solving problems of confusion. Both the urban and rural areas must grasp this, and the urban areas must particularly make a good job of this.

Jianbuer said: It is necessary to continue to grasp well the implementation of the policy toward nationalities and education in unity among nationalities. We must consolidate and develop socialist relationships among various nationalities. Strengthening unity among nationalities is an important content of the building of socialist spiritual civilization. We must do well in grasping this and make achievements.

In conclusion, Jianbuer said: Party committees at all levels and departments throughout the region must take immediate actions to adhere to the direction pointed out at the 12th party congress, unswervingly promote the building of socialist spiritual civilization which is focused on five stresses and four beauties and strive to open up a new situation in socialist modernization in the region while promoting the building of a high degree of material civilization.

BEIJING VIEWS TAIWAN DEMOCRATIC MOVEMENT

OW081249 Beijing in Mandarin to Taiwan 0400 GMT 8 Oct 82

[Station Editorial Department commentary: "Taiwan's Compatriots Must Heighten Their Vigilance"]

[Text] A noteworthy trend has recently appeared in Taiwan. At a time when the press in Taiwan has been commenting on some incidents that occured on the island, Taiwan authorities' propaganda machine -- CHUNG YANG JIH PAO -- put out an editorial on 2 October labelling those activities launched by non-Kuomintang members as seriously illegal and calling for their punishment in accordance with the law or the imposition of sanctions against them.

The editorial also warned that another Gaoxiong incident might occur again. As you may recall, the Gaoxiong incident clearly was engineered solely by the Taiwan authorities in order to persecute Taiwan's compatriots. Despite the harsh measures taken by the Taiwan authorities to suppress them by slanderously calling them members of the Taiwan independence movement, Taiwan's compatriots have never given up their multifaceted struggles for democratic rights. Taiwan's compatriots should be vigilant against the ill omen reflected in the fact that the Taiwan authorities are now resorting to their habitual practice of creating public opinion before adopting suppressive measures. We strongly oppose Taiwan's independence movement but we vehemently support Taiwan's patriotic and democratic activities.

The cause of reunification with the motherland can be promoted only when Taiwan's compatriots enjoy sufficient democratic rights and their democratic rights can be secured only through Taiwan's returning to, and reunifying with, the motherland. The Taiwan authorities will certainly come to no good if they attempt to create pretexts for suppressing the patriotic and democratic movement of the compatriots in Taiwan.

IBF PRESIDENT DISCUSSES 'TWO CHINAS' ISSUE

[Excerpts] Paris, October 10 (XINHUA) -- The United States carried off both the men's open pair and women's pair titles at the sixth world bridge championships which closed in the French southern city of Biarritz this morning.

Making its debut at the world championships, a Chinese team entered the men's open pair contest alongside 359 other pairs. China's Wang Junren and Lu Yulin came 15th, the best placing ever won by Far Eastern entrants in the event. Team competitions, the last event of the championships, will last until October 16.

Referring to the China issue at the Congress of the International Bridge Federation (IBF) here on October 8, IBF President J. Ortiz Patino said there is only one China in the world, that is, the People's Republic of China. The team from China's Taibei could only participate in the championships in the name of the "Chinese Taibei Bridge Association".

He pointed out that China's participation in the championships was a major event.

Earlier, members of the bridge team from China's Taibei were requested to quit the opening ceremony for they wore the sports jackets emblazoned with the English letters "ROC" (abbreviation of the so-called "Republic of China"). To prevent the recurrence of such practice in future, Patino took two measures, stipulating that the Chinese Taibei team could not enter the meeting hall and canteen in such sports jackets and that a formal message will be sent to the organization concerned in Taibei, warning that players be banned from wearing such jackets in the contest. Failing this, they will be deprived of their qualification for the current championships and all the contests sponsored by the Far East Bridge Federation and the IBF.

Observing the IBF ruling, members of the Chinese Taibei team were later allowed to participate in the championships.

Patino expressed satisfaction with the participation of the Chinese team and the Chinese Taibei team in the current championships.

PRESS REPORTS ON FRG PRESIDENT'S TALKS

Deng Xiaoping on USSR

HK140146 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 14 Oct 82 p 1

[Dispatch from correspondent Cheng Hsiang: "Deng Xiaoping Speaks on Sino-Soviet Talks"]

[Text] Deng Xiaoping told visiting West German President Carstens: China holds that a country should carry on a dialogue with a neighboring country on state-to-state relations. Though China is still opposed to the Soviet Union's pursuit of hegemonism, is opposed to its stationing of troops along the Sino-Mongolian border -- which threatens China's security -- and is opposed to its invasion of Afghanistan and its support of the Vietnamese occupation of Kampuchea, it is necessary and normal to carry out a dialogue. Deng Xiaoping said: The dialogue between China and the Soviet Union was once suspended due to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. But it has now been resumed. This is the first time that China has made known its position on current Sino-Soviet contacts.

Deng Xoaping set forth his above-quoted views when he responded to a comment raised by Mr Carstens. Carstens told Deng Xiaoping: West Germany also considers it necessary to hold a dialogue with the Soviet Union, though West Germany must base its stand on strengthening its defense to guarantee its own security. Deng Xiaoping agreed with Carstens.

It is known that the current Sino-Soviet dialogue involves only state-to-state relations. Party relations are not being discussed, but the talks cover a wide range of topics. Both sides have stated their respective views.

Deng Xiaoping and Carstens also discussed their respective relations with the United States. Deng Xiaoping criticized U.S. policy toward Taiwan and hoped that the United States would abide by the joint Sino-U.S. statement.

Carstens also said: All political parties in the West German Parliament are for maintaining close ties with China. He was satisfied that West Germany and China can share common views on a series of international issues.

Deng, Hu Yaobang on FRG

[Special dispatch from correspondents Li Hsu-huan [2621 3219 3883] and Hou Tung-tai [0230 2639 3189]: "Deng Xiaoping Speaks on Sino-Soviet Dialogue"]

[Text] On the morning of 13 October, when Deng Xiaoping met Karl Carstens, president of West Germany, at the Great Hall of the People, they talked about Sino-Soviet relations, saying "China opposes hegemonism, but as far as relations between countries are concerned it is necessary and normal for China to maintain her dialogue with her northern neighbor." Deng Xiaoping reiterated to Carstens China's support of the German people's just desire for national reunification. He said that all those states and nations that are now divided into two will finally be unified; for such divisions are the artificial results of the use of force.

Moreover, Deng Xiaoping stressed the significance of the West European alliance. He said: "In order to fight against the hegemonists, the West European countries have to form an alliance. No European country is able to deal alone with the threat posed by the hegemonists."

Carstens said: "The European alliance is an important factor for safeguarding peace and stability. It is imperative for West European countries to form a political and economic alliance under the conditions of maintaining each country's national characteristics."

In his talks, Deng Xiaoping criticized U.S. policy toward Taiwan. He also pointed out: "China's analysis and judgment of the world situation and China's policy of opposing hegemonism and safeguarding world peace is consistent and has not changed."

The two sides carried out a wide-ranging discussion on the necessity for the industrialized countries to transfer technology to China.

Carstens said that during the period when China is readjusting her economy, the speed of economic exchanges between China and West Germany has decreased.

In reply Deng Xiaoping said that this is only a temporary phenomenon and that China appreciates West Germany's advanced technology and hopes to develop its relations with West Germany. China welcomes assistance from industrialized countries.

On 13 October, before he gave a luncheon in honor of President Carstens, CPC General Secretary Hu Yaobang gave a speech to a group of West German reporters. He said: "Along with the progress of history, the history of the artificial division of one country into two will certainly be eliminated."

Hu Yaobang said: "The Chinese people always support the German people's just desire for their national reunification and unity. The Chinese people wish to see the German people build their country into a great, unified and independent country striving to achieve prosperity and maintain friendly relations with Europe and other countries in the world."

Moreover, he said that the German nation possesses science and technology. We hope the German nation will be able to make contributions to the development of the present world, especially the Third World.

Zhao Ziyang on PRC Economy

[Special dispatch from correspondents Li Shu-huan [2621 3219 3883] and Hou Tung-hai [0186 2639 3189]: "Zhao Ziyang Talks About the Economy This Year"]

[Text] Beijing, 12 October -- This afternoon, Premier Zhao Ziyang had a friendly talk with Karl Carstens, president of the Federal Republic of Germany, at Diaoyutai state guesthouse. The talk lasted for nearly 1 hour.

He said that Carstens' visit to China is an important event in relations between the two countries. It will certainly promote the development of this friendly relationship.

He said that although the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries came comparatively late, the years since then have seen a rapid development of relations between the two countries. On many world issues, the two countries have identical or similar views, including a common interest in fighting hegemonism and safeguarding world peace. There is the possibility of wide-ranging cooperation between the two countries in the economic, trade and technological fields. Therefore, there are good prospects for further developing cooperation between us. He was optimistic about the future development of the friendship between the two countries.

Zhao Ziyang briefed Carstens on China's economic situation. He said that many achievements have been scored since the economic readjustment began in 1979. Agricultural production this year is expected to break all records. He expected China's economy to grow by 4-5 percent or more this year.

President Carstens said that he was greatly impressed by his visit in two aspects:

1. The two countries have a common goal -- to safeguard world peace.

2. There is enormous potential for the development of economic cooperation between the two countries.

At present, there are 1,500 Chinese students and scientists in the FRG. They have formed bridges between the two countries and are architects in the development of mutual friendship.

He said his government would make efforts to expand cooperation with China in the economic, technological and other fields.

According to another report, Chinese leaders Deng Xiaoping and Hu Yaobang will meet separately with President Carstens tomorrow morning. Hu Yaobang will give a banquet in honor of President Carstens and his party.

WEN WEI PO COMMENTS ON FUTURE OF HONG KONG

[Special feature by Li Tzu-sung [2621 1311 6139]

[Text] In November 1924, Dr Sun Yat-sen left Guangdong for Beijing to propose convening the National Assembly to abrogate the unequal treaties. He pointed out in a straightforward manner that these unequal treaties "are precisely the indentures by which we have sold ourselves."

Indeed, during the late Qing Dynasty many treaties were signed with foreign powers that forfeited China's sovereignty, forced China to cede some of its territory and suffer the plunder of its economic resources, and insulted its national dignity. In Dr Sun Yat-sen's words, the Chinese people became the slaves of more than a dozen foreign countries and China was reduced to a "subcolony" of the foreign powers.

The next year, Dr Sun Yat-sen died without achieving his goal. He did not live to see the abrogation of the unequal treaties.

On 1 October 1949, the PRC was founded and the Chinese people stood up! The people's government announced that China did not recognize any unequal treaties. In fact, all the indentures by which the foreign powers had forced China to sell itself have been abrogated one by one and the sovereignty and rights that we lost have been gradually recovered. Dr Sun Yat-sen's wish has gradually been fulfilled.

However, after her recent visit to China where she discussed the Hong Kong issue with the Chinese Government, the British prime minister, Mrs Thatcher, alleged that the three treaties relating to Hong Kong (the "Treaty of Nanking," "The Convention of Peking" and the "Special Treaty on Expanding Hong Kong's Boundary") were valid and had to be "continuously observed." Were these remarks not insensitive and out of keeping with the times?

It would have been better if the British prime minister had not made such remarks. However, since she has made them, the Chinese people cannot help but recall the British imperialist aggression against China. The Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs could not help but once again declare that Hong Kong is a part of Chinese territory. All the treaties relating to Hong Kong are unequal treaties that the Chinese people have never recognized. The Chinese Government will not be bound by these treaties and will recover the entire Hong Kong area when conditions are ripe. As both the Chinese and British sides wish to maintain Hong Kong's prosperity and stability, they will discuss the matter through diplomatic channels. From this we can see that China's stand and attitude are firm and resolute.

In the past, Dr Sun Yat-sen placed his hopes on those foreigners who upheld justice and thought that they would speak out of their sense of justice and help us demand that their governments abrogate these unequal treaties. It was a pity that at that time our country was weak and not able to make these governments change their minds, even with the help of a few friends in these countries. Things are different today. China has transformed itself from weakness to strength and is powerful enough to be master of the international situation. Moreover, the struggle against colonialism, imperialism and hegemonism has already become an irresistable torrent. The fallacy that upholds continued adherence to the unequal treaties will certainly encounter the widespread opposition of the press. We have good reasons to believe that under the pressure of the situation and international public opinion, the British Government will be forced to hold earnest talks with the Chinese Government and will reach an agreement for solving the Hong Kong issue.

The unequal treaties were one of the causes for China's poverty and weakness in the past. Now China has already become an independent socialist country that is striving to become strong. It will never be bound by an unequal treaty and will never suffer foreign aggression, bullying or humiliation. Moreover, it is vigorously carrying out its modernization program and its policy of opening up to the outside world. Our economy has taken a turn for the better and will prosper day by day. Our motherland has a boundless future and so, therefore, does Hong Kong.

Looking into Hong Kong's future, both goals of "recovery of sovereignty and maintaining prosperity" will be achieved. As long as our measures are appropriate, even if the two aims cannot both be achieved at present, we will soon succeed in achieving them. Since our central leaders have been able to change the destiny of the county, save the country from danger and turn a situation of turmoil into order, why can they not satisfactorily handle the affairs of a small area? Beijing has made adequate preparations for solving the Hong Kong issue and we believe measures will surely be adopted to ensure the interests of China, Britain and our Hong Kong compatriots. The future will surely be better if all the indentures by which we were sold are abrogated. This is an inevitable and reasonable development of the situation. What do our compatriots have to worry about?

[Text] To solve the problem of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan, the Chinese and U.S. sides signed a joint communique over 2 months ago. In the communique, the United States reiterated that it recognized the PRC Government as the only legitimate government, or, in other words, recognized only one China. The United States also solemnly vowed not to promote the policy of "two Chinas," or "one China and one Taiwan." The United States further promised to reduce the sales of arms to Taiwan gradually until the problem is finally solved.

China signed this communique, saving Sino-U.S. relations from a crisis of deterioration. But China also said: "Listen to someone's words and watch his actions." In other words, this means: "I believe in you again; let me see if you know what you should do!"

Only 2 months, or 60 days and nights later, U.S. President Reagan really went back on his word, committing a breach of faith as he used wild language that runs counter to the Sino-U.S. communique.

In answering questions by some Republican congressional candidates in the White House, he took the peaceful solution of the Taiwan problem by China as a prerequisite for the suspension of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan. He said that China must keep its promise about the peaceful solution of the Taiwan problem, so that the United States would then no longer need to supply arms to Taiwan. He also stressed that there is "no change in U.S. policy toward Taiwan." "Our Taiwanese friends will continue to receive all the weapons they need for self-defense."

To solve the Taiwan problem and reunify the motherland -- this is surely China's internal affair and is a problem to be solved by the Kuomintang and the Communist Party and the more than 1 billion people on both sides of the Strait. Why is there need for the Communist Party or the Kuomintang to make any promise to the United States? The more than 1 billion Chinese people have also never thought of the need to make any promise to the United States. Still less is there a problem of "keeping" or "breaking" a promise. What power does the U.S. President have to demand that the Chinese people keep their word? Does the United States still think that, as in the period of the old China, the United States can continue to be a government lording it over China? All imperialists always cling to their previous ways of hegemony, harboring the illusion of a reversion to an earlier period as far back as 33 or even 140 years!

The peaceful reunification of the motherland is the Chinese Government's supreme national policy and is by no means an exchange for the U.S. suspension of arms sales to Taiwan. If there has been a promise to the Taiwan authorities, it is not a promise to be "kept" to the United States, but only to Taiwan. But this also depends on whether the Taiwan authorities accept the guideline of peaceful reunification and accept this promise to be carried out by both sides. Needless to say, peaceful reunification cannot depend on the Communist Party alone. It must also depend on the Kuomintang. In other words, only with cooperation between the KMT and the Communist Party can peaceful reunification be realized. There is no need for the United States to worry about this. Still less is it necessary to let the United States interfere. This is a matter of course.

Now, Reagan's worry is the fear of cooperation between the Kuomintang and the Communist Party and the reunification of China! Therefore, the U.S. administration has tried by every means to interfere. Its arms sales to its old friend, Taiwan, or the Taiwan KMT authorities, is one way of telling the latter not to cooperate with the Chinese Communist Party and not to seek the peaceful reunification of China.

This is a flagrant encroachment upon China's sovereignty and constitutes intervention in China's internal affairs.

Reagan has kept talking about acting according to the "Taiwan Relations Act" unilaterally formulated by the United States and has harped about their being "no change" in his policy toward Taiwan. This is to say that in addition to his policy toward China, there is another policy toward Taiwan. Then, is his pledge to "recognize Taiwan as part of China's territory," written in black and white, not a big lie? If he really recognizes Taiwan as part of China's territory, why should there by a separate policy toward Taiwan apart from the policy toward China? Is this not again dividing China into two parts?

Thus, isn't the promise not to promote "two Chinas" or "one China and one Taiwan" a big lie?

Therefore, it is only we Chinese who have the right to demand that the Reagan administration keep its promise not to promote "two Chinas" and "one China and one Taiwan" and demand that it keep its promise not to encroach upon China's sovereignty and not to interfere in China's internal affairs. If it does not keep its promise, the Chinese people have nothing to fear about going their own way!

"Political Talk" column by Shih Chun-yu [2457 0689 3768]: "Beijing Long Ago Foresaw This Step by Reagan"]

[Text] Less Than 2 Months After the Release of the Joint Communique

RENMIN RIBAO carried a short commentary yesterday on U.S. President Reagan's statement on Sino-U.S. relations.

Since China and the United States released a new joint communique on 17 August, RENMIN RIBAO has for the first time in a commentary criticized Reagan by name.

It has been 50 days or so since the release of the new joint communique. In less than 2 months, a dark shadow has again come over Sino-U.S. relations. A great and swift fluctuation can be seen.

The main reason for this is Reagan's recent speech in a White House press conference in which he took China's peaceful liberation of Taiwan as a prerequisite for the suspension of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan. What he said runs entirely counter to the spirit of the new Sino-U.S. joint communique.

This Situation Already Foreseen

Is the continuous fluctuation in Sino-U.S. relations something unexpected?

No. RENMIN RIBAO, in an editorial published the same day the new Sino-U.S. joint communique was promulgated, foresaw the development of this situation.

The editorial said that on the sovereignty problem the Chinese Government and people will never make any unprincipled concession. If this problem is not solved in a satisfactory manner, Sino-U.S. relations cannot be maintained and consolidated. The possibility of a retrogression in relations also exists.

The editorial also referred to the "Taiwan Relations Act." It pointed out that if the policymakers in Washington insisted on handling relations between the two countries according to the law, then there could be no development in Sino-U.S. relations. Another serious crisis would surely arise.

Now, there is still no problem of retrogression, or a crisis in relations. However, the reappearance of a dark shadow is an indisputable fact.

What Was Not Achieved in 10 Months of Talks

In his speech this time, Reagan was still full of contradictions. One the one hand, he said he wanted to improve Sino-U.S. relations. On the other, he again stressed the continuous implementation of the "Taiwan Relations Act." This was a repetition of what was said before.

What was newly suggested is that if China keeps its promise of "realizing peaceful reunification," the United States would "reduce and end" its arms sales to Taiwan.

These few lines are in fact nothing new. Before the publication of the new joint communique, China and the United States held talks for more than 10 months. During the talks, the United States, for its part, continuously tried to link the "peaceful liberation of Taiwan" with the U.S. suspension of arms sales. But China has all along prevented the United States from realizing this plot.

This time Reagan wanted unilaterally to reveal what was not achieved at the negotiating table in order to obtain Chinese acquiescence. Now, of course, this is all the more difficult to achieve.

A Prerequisite Made for a Final Solution

"Peaceful settlement" has absolutely nothing to do with the suspension of arms sales to Taiwan. The reasons are simple and obvious.

Taiwan is a province of China. The U.S. sale of arms to Taiwan is an encroachment upon China's sovereignty and an intervention in China's internal affairs. The sale of arms should have been stopped long ago.

How China solves the problem of reunifying Taiwan and the motherland is China's internal affair. No foreign country can interfere.

In the new Sino-U.S. joint communique, the United States made three pledges on arms sales to Taiwan, making a clear statement about "a final solution following a period of time." Now, Reagan has made a prerequisite for a "final solution." This obviously runs counter to the spirit of the new joint communique.

"Farsighted Statesmen"

At an evening party given for him in New York by the U.S. Council on Foreign Relations, PRC Foreign Minister Huang Hua pointed out that some people in the United States still cherished the pipedream of "two Chinas." He believed that "farsighted U.S. statesmen will fully recognize the great significance of the development of Sino-U.S. relations and take a positive attitude toward the development of Sino-U.S. relations."

In light of this, is Reagan a farsighted statesman, or even a statesman? Only he can provide the answer.

DENG XIAOPING INSTRUCTIONS ON PROMOTING CADRES

HK111304 Hong Kong MING PAO in Chinese 11 Oct 82 p 6

[Special dispatch from Beijing: "Deng Xiaoping Issues Instructions on Breaking Down Conventions in Promoting Cadres"]

[Text] For the sake of making the leading bodies at various levels more revolutionary, younger in age, better educated and professionally more competent, the CPC has taken great pains and carried out a great deal of work in the last 2-3 years. However, judging from the situation as a whole, there has not been much change in the age of the various leading bodies. Many cadres in the prime of life who possess both ability and political integrity have still not been promoted into the leading bodies. And this has become a big, difficult problem amid current efforts to restructure the organs and make the cadres more revolutionary, younger in age, better educated and professionally more competent.

Deng Xiaoping recently pointed out that the organizational system and the method of thinking among cadres currently in effect are detrimental to the promotion and employment of outstandingly qualified people who are urgently required for the four modernizations. He said: "I hope that party committees and organizational departments at various levels will make a major change on this question of promoting cadres, resolutely emancipate the mind, overcome all kinds of obstacles, break down conventions and boldly reform the organizational and personnel systems which are out of keeping with the times. They must vigorously train, discover and break rules in using outstandingly qualified people and firmly struggle against all phenomena which suppress and destroy qualified people."

The proposal to make the ranks of cadres more revolutionary, younger in age, better educated and professionally more competent was first put forward by Deng Xiaoping. As early as July and August 1979, when Deng Xiaoping was inspecting Shandong, Shanghai and Tianjin, he repeatedly pointed out: The ideological line and the political line have already been established. The questions facing us at present are the question of the organizational line, the question of cadres and especially the question of choosing successors. It is imperative that we choose people who are young and who know their business. At a forum on the work of promoting outstanding young and middle-aged cadres held by the Organization Department of the CPC Central Committee in May 1980, Hu Yaobang further explained: The ideal leading body is one in which the members are in the prime of life and full of vigor, with professional knowledge and leadership ability, who firmly implement the line of the Central Committee and adhere to the socialist road. In the end, he summed them up as being more revolutionary, younger in age, better educated and professionally more competent.

The resolution adopted by the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee clearly affirmed: "The party has decided to abolish the system of lifetime tenure which actually exists in the posts of leading cadres, change the condition of excessive concentration of power and, under the premise of persisting in becoming more revolutionary, call for gradually making members at various levels younger in age, better educated and professionally more competent."

The average age of members in leading bodies at various levels of the Central Committee has generally increased by 15 to 20 years compared with that before the Cultural Revolution and even more when compared with that of the 1950's. Most of these cadres are worker-peasant cadres who took part in conquering the country. Their cultural standard is very low. They have no scientific and technical knowledge and very few of them have received special training or understand advanced science and technology or management techniques. Relying on leading bodies of this kind makes it impossible to carry out modernization.

Therefore, the Central Committee has decided to make the ranks of cadres more revolutionary, younger in age, better educated and professionally more competent and to proceed first with leading bodies at various levels. The tentative idea is, after 5 years of efforts, to raise the political quality of the leading bodies at various levels by the time of the holding of the 13th CPC Congress and lower the average age by about 5 years compared to that before the restructuring of the organs. These leading bodies must be composed of about 70 percent young and middle-aged cadres with ability and political integrity. And 60 to 70 percent must have a cultural standard above the college level or must have a good grasp of professional knowledge. In particular, there must be brilliant and capable number one and number two persons who can unite and lead the leading bodies in creating a new situation in work.

In the first half of this year, the result of more than 4 months of restructuring carried out by the CPC Central Committee and the ministries and commissions of the State Council has shown that the average age of the leading bodies has been reduced by about 4 years. According to the statistics of the 38 ministries and commissions under the State Council, the number of ministers and vice ministers has been reduced by 67 percent and newly promoted young and middle-aged cadres account for 32 percent of the total number of members in the leading bodies. There is also a slight improvement in their standard of education. The number of professional people has also increased.

At present, various provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions are deliberating on restructuring their organs and making the cadres more revolutionary, younger in age, better educated and professionally more competent. This requires first that the old cadres give up their posts and make a success of the work of "retiring" before the matter of "advancing" can be discussed and before the young and middle-aged cadres meeting the conditions of being more revolutionary, younger in age, better educated and professionally more competent can be promoted into the leading bodies as successors. "Retiring" and "advancing" present all kinds of obstacles. Therefore, Deng Xiaoping has issued the instruction of "resolutely emancipate the mind, overcome all kinds of obstacles" and stressed the reform of the organizational and personnel systems.

RENMIN RIBAO DISCUSSES HANOI, KABUL CONSCRIPTION

["International Jottings" column article by Tong Chang [6639 2490]: "A Mortal Wound"]

[Text] Coincidentally, the Hanoi authorities and the Kabul regime have stepped up recruiting cannon fodder recently almost at the same time.

According to a report, Vietnam has begun its second conscription this year, while in Afghanistan, the Karmal regime has forced children of 10 to 16 to carry out military training and ordered all men from 16 to 55 who are not on active service to join the newly established civil defense corps.

Over the past few years, due to the lack of soldiers and the difficult war situation, it has become a common practice for both Hanoi and Kabul to press-gang able-bodied men. Group after group of young and middle-aged people, even children or people who are too old to join the army, have been sent to the battlefields to invade Kampuchea or to suppress the Afghan guerrillas, after being given military trainings under all sorts of pretexts.

However, the military situation on the battlefields has not improved. On the contrary, it has become even worse. This shows that no matter how hard they have tried to recruit more soldiers, neither Hanoi nor Kabul is able to save itself from doomed failure. Originally, there were 200,000 soldiers in the Vietnamese army which had invaded Kampuchea, and the Karmal regime had no less than 80,000 officers and soldiers. However, aside from those which have been wiped out in battles, more and more Vietnamese and Afghan soldiers have deserted through being tired and afraid of war. Thus, even if they recruit soldiers every day and practice conscription every month the bottomless pits in these two armies can never be filled. Although the Hanoi and Kabul authorities can recruit some cannon fodder by compulsion, the ideas of the Vietnamese and Afghan people and youths who are tired of, afraid of and against war can never be eliminated. This is a mortal wound for the Vietnamese and Afghan authorities. How then can they cure this wound?

AFP: SINO-SOVIET TALKS SAID TO ENTER NEW PHASE

[By Charles-Antoine de Nerciat]

[Text] Beijing, Oct. 15 (AFP) -- The 10-day-old Sino-Soviet talks here have entered a new phase, going from a general statement of positions to concrete discussions of differences between the Communist rivals, diplomatic sources said today.

Diplomats also said it was likely that the Soviet delegation led by Deputy Foreign Minister Leonid Ilichev had complained of China's continued attacks against the Soviet Union despite the resumption of negotiations.

China's top leaders, including strongman Deng Xiaoping, have lately availed themselves of meetings with foreign dignitaries to firmly restate China's position that Soviet "hegemonism" was the main threat to world peace.

Noting that a leading Soviet personality, Konstantin Rusakov, had publicly deplored the attacks by Chinese leaders and the press here, diplomats said Mr Ilichev had probably taken up the complaint in one form or another.

Ultra-secret talks between the two countries, estranged since the early 1960's, resumed October 5, nearly three years after they were broken off by Beijing to protest the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan.

A member of the Chinese Communist Party Politburo, Peng Zhen, said recently that the talks could lead to some kind of an agreement on secondary matters. He did not elaborate.

The two sides agreed that no question on bilateral relations would be barred from the talks between Mr Ilichev and Chinese Deputy Foreign Minister Qian Qichen.

Speaking to visiting West German President Karl Carstens, Mr Deng said in effect that China would bring up the entire spectrum of its differences with the Soviet Union in the talks.

After outlining the respective positions of their countries, Mr Ilichev and Mr Qian moved on to unspecified concrete problems in Sino-Soviet relations, said the diplomatic sources, who asked to remain anonymous.

Before the talks got underway, China had restated the three main obstacles it saw to an improvement in its relations with the Soviet Union: The heavy concentration of Soviet troops on their common border, Moscow's presence in Afghanistan and its support for the Vietnamese occupation of Cambodia.

China had stressed that the talks would be drawn-out and difficult.

Besides the larger issues in Sino-Soviet relations, the talks were also expected to dwell on technical points of their trade and cultural exchanges, or questions with both political and technical aspects, diplomats said.

The sources said that the Soviet Union reportedly hoped for an agreement leading to the establishment of consulates in the two countries.

AFP: USSR WILLING TO PULL TROOPS FROM PRC BORDER

OW131554 Paris AFP in English 1439 GMT 13 Oct 82

[Text] Tokyo, Oct. 13 (AFP) -- The Soviet Union would meet China's demand for reduction of Soviet troops on the China-Soviet border if China cuts its border forces of two million troops, a Japanese socialist said today quoting a senior Soviet official.

Seiichi Katsumatu, former chairman of the Japan Socialist Party, quoted Deputy Chief Ivan Kovalenko of the Soviet Communist Party's International Affairs Bureau, who he met on a recent meeting in Moscow.

He told the press that a major stumbling block for Sino-Soviet rapproachment following 20 years of hostility would be troop withdrawals from areas along the thousands of kilometers (miles) of border between the two countries.

Mr Katsumatu recently visited the Soviet Union, East Germany and France.

AUSTRALIA'S STREET ON USSR NAVY IN INDIAN OCEAN

OW110737 Beijing XINHUA in English 0724 GMt 11 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, October 11 (XINHUA) -- Australian Foreign Minister Tony Street said the Soviet Union is increasing naval operations in the Indian Ocean and the South Pacific.

Street, who was in New York last week for the U.N. General Assembly session, told NEWSWEEK INTERNATIONAL: "There is increasing Soviet activity, first in the Indian Ocean and secondly in the South Pacific." The interview was published Sunday.

He said: "In the Indian Ocean, we have responded by greatly increasing surveillance flights" and "we have also deployed naval vessels in the northwest Indian Ocean."

"In the South Pacific, we first started to see signs of Soviet probing about 18 months ago... They were offering research facilities, fisheries, resources research, hydrographic and scientific surveys and things of that kind," he said. "But I would not expect this to be the end of the Soviet interest in the area," he added.

DELEGATES ATTEND PEAT MEETING IN MINSK

OW011318 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 0300 GMT 29 Sep 82

[Text] A meeting of the International Peat Association was held recently in Minsk, USSR, to study the properties of peat and prospects for its utilization. Eighty-nine papers were read by the scholars and experts from 14 countries.

"Peat Resources in Northeast China and Their Utilization in Agriculture" and "The Formation and Growth of Peat in China," the two theses read by (Huang Xicou), deputy head of the Changchun Geography Institute of the Chinese Academy of Sciences, and (Wu Qihu), associate research fellow at the Shanxi Coal Chemistry Institute, respectively, were well received by the meeting participants. This meeting shows that increasingly greater international attention has been given to the research of peat, and important raw material and source of fuel, and to it extensive application in the industrial, agricultural, medical and other fields.

KOREA HERALD: OFFICIAL NONCOMMITTAL ON OLYMPICS

SK090150 Seoul THE KOREA HERALD in English 9 Oct 82 p 1

[Text] Tokyo (YONHAP) -- The chairman of the People's Friendship Association of mainland China, Wang Bingnan, said Thursday that Peking and Tokyo should refrain from acts which perpetuate the division of South and North Korea.

Commenting on inter-Korean dialogue, he said the two countries should make an effort to bring South and North Korea closer.

Wang is visiting Tokyo to attend a meeting for the promotion of friendship between the Chinese and the Japanese.

Asked if China will participate in the 1986 Asian Games and the 1988 Olympics in Seoul, he said it is worth noting that his country has competed with the Republic of Korea in many international games, adding its is hard to predict what will happen in the future.

Saying that 400,000 Soviet troops were stationed near the border between Russia and China during the Khrushchev period, he disclosed that his country is demanding a reduction of 600,000 men from the border force to the previous level.

The vice ministerial-level meeting between China and the Soviet Union, he said, is being held in Beijing.

However, he said, China does not regard the meeting as a full-fledged one resulting in the normalization of Sino-Soviet relations but intends to sound out the Moscow stance on the issue at the meeting.

Deng Xiaoping and Hu Yaobang secretly visited Pyongyang in April to exchange views with Kim Il-song more freely, he added.

SANKEI SHIMBUN ADVOCATES TWO-CHINA POLICY

OW131845 Beijing XINHUA in English 1623 GMT 13 Oct 82

[Text] Tokyo, October 13 (XINHUA) -- The Japanese newspaper, SANKEI SHIMBUN, recently devoted a special four-page supplement to advocating a two-China policy.

The supplement carried articles written by Dietman of the ruling Liberal Democratic Party Shinji Sato and vice-chairman of the commentators committee of SANKEI SIMBUN Furuya. Shinji Sato openly called China's Taiwan Province a "nation," saying that "it is a matter of course," that the "two countries," Japan and Taiwan, "should carry on their friendship." He asserted in another article, "Taiwan has armed forces, has territory and has sovereignty, so it is an independent country."

Furuya termed Taiwan a "political entity." He urged the Japanese Government to "reconsider the importance of Taiwan in the international arena," and treat Taiwan "as a country."

Observers here noted that the People's Republic of China is the sole legal government of China and that Taiwan is one of its provinces. The Japanese Government recognized this fact in the Japan-China joint statement and the Japan-China peace and friendship treaty.

RENMIN RIBAO NEWSLETTER ON PRC-JAPAN CONFERENCE

[Newsletter From Japan by RENMIN RIBAO reporter Chen Bowei [7115 0130 1792]: "A Good Beginning -- An Observer's Notes on the Sino-Japanese Nongovernment Personages Conference"]

[Text] During the days when we were commemorating the normalization of diplomatic relations between China and Japan, the first Sino-Japanese conference of nongovernment personages was held in Tokyo.

The scholars, specialists, politicians and well-known media personages of the two countries came together and enthusiastically discussed the problems related to developing friendly relations of cooperation between the two countries and other problems of common concern. This has reflected a new phase in the development of relations between China and Japan.

The Sino-Japanese Conference of Nongovernment Personages was initiated by Haruo Okada, deputy speaker of the Japanese House of Representatives and a well-known statesmen who has steadfastly strived for friendship between the two countries. When he visited China in January last year, he made a proposal to Chinese leaders and the responsible persons of the China-Japan Friendship Association that the unofficial personages and personages of insight of the two countries be organized to hold periodic discussions in the form of conferences in order to change opinions on problems of common concern. This proposal has been accepted by the Chinese side. In order to make preparations for and hold the conference of unofficial personages, both the Chinese and Japanese sides respectively formed a committee. Now, after more than 1 year of preparations, the first conference was successfully conducted.

At this conference, the unofficial personages of the two countries highly appreciated the development of Sino-Japanese relations since the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries and praised the great role that the unofficial friendly exchanges had played in the development of bilateral relations. In his speech, Wang Zhen, head of the Chinese delegation to the conference, said: "The friendly exchanges and cooperation through unofficial channels is the foundation and motive force for the development of relations between the two countries. On the other hand, the strengthening of relations between the governments of the two countries can create favorable conditions for the development of unofficial friendly exchanges. Therefore, these two aspects complement one another." "In the future, the relations between the two countries will surely continue to develop in this manner."

Masayoshi Ito, a representative of the Japanese committee, also said in his report to the conference: "Looking forward into the 1980's and the 21st century, in order to make the prospects of the realtions between the two countries bright and in order to develop an everlasting relationship of friendly cooperation, we should, while developing a close relationship between the two governments, concentrate the wisdom of all the strata of people in all circles, including political, economic, academic and cultural circles, and enable these people to frankly exchange their opinions and thus further deepen the mutual understanding of the two countries. We firmly believe that more widespread, deeper and more diversified development of the friendly ties between China and Japan will facilitate safeguarding security in Asia and world peace."

Those who attended the conference adopted a frank, candid and outspoken attitude in discussing problems concerning Sino-Japanese relations. In Wang Zhen's speech, there is the following passage: "Not long ago, the textbook problem gave rise to some worries about the relations between our two countries. The essense of this issue is mainly concerned with the question of how we should regard the 50 years of history of the Japanese militarist aggression against China since 1894. The question of whether we should respect the historical facts and treat them as lessons drawn from past mistakes or whether we should distort and embellish this history of aggression for posterity and to prepare public opinion for the rivival of militarism that a few people are attempting is a problem of principle that we must earnestly handle." "The banner we uphold is to maintain the friendship between the Chinese and Japanese people generation after generation. A review of the past helps people to understand the present. Receiving the historical lessons of the past is aimed precisely at avoiding forever any repetition of this tragedy of the past. Our aim is to 'turn a relation of war forever into a relation of friendship' and enable the friendly relations between China and Japan to last forever without interruption."

In his report, Masayoshi Ito, Japanese representative to the conference, expressed his attitude toward this issue. He said: "We painfully realize our responsibility for Japan's aggressive activities in the past and are carrying out a deep self-examination."

This Japanese representative straightforwardly used the term "aggressive" which many conservative Japanese statesmen and commentators have persistently refused to admit. This shows this Japanese stateman's conscience and courage. Ito also stressed the importance in strengthening mutual understanding and confidence in the future. He said: "The grim international situation may give rise to political storms in the world and perhaps between China and Japan. In such circumstances, a situation of conflicts between the interests of China and Japan may emerge. However, I firmly believe that as long as we make a deep self-examination of our past activities, uphold peace, refuse to follow the path of becoming a military power, act in accordance with the basic principles and spirit of the Sino-Japanese joint statement and the Sino-Japanese peace and friendship treaty, engrave in our minds that we should understand and have confidence in one another, and conscientiously make efforts, we will be able to permanently safeguard the peaceful and friendly relations between Japan and China generation after generation."

During the group discussion, a few members of the Japanese committee expressed their doubt about the existence of militarism in Japan. Their actual opinion was that there simply is no problem concerning militarism in Japan. However, some Japanese personages do not agree with this opinion. They think that in today's Japan, there does not exist any form of militarism that dominates the whole country, but there does exist a trend of "eulogizing the history of Japan's past," a trend which is continuously growing. Sun Pinghua, Chinese delegate to the conference, said in his speech that he "cannot agree to the view that arbitarily denies the existence of militarists and the existence of the danger of the revival of militarism in Japan," and that some people in Japan "have as yet failed to sove" the problem of how they should understand the agressive war of the past. He cited the facts of the history textbook issue, the issue of some people planning to build a "monument on the establishment of the kingdom of Manchuria, the placing of the name of Tojo into the mourning hall for fighters who died for the security of the country and the description of Tojo as a "national hero" in a certain film to prove that the series of phenomena which have occured in Japan cannot help but rouse people's careful consideration. Some of the Japanese personages who attended the conference believed that the frank discussion during the conference was beneficial.

As for the problem related to the development of the economic cooperation and friendly exchanges in other fields between China and Japan, the unofficial personages of the two countries also used this opportunity to frankly exchange their opinions and express their desire to strive to achieve this aim. In his report, Masayoshi Ito, Japanese delegate to the conference, said: "The modernization cause that people from top to bottom in China have plunged into is a magnificent undertaking. China has a vast territory and a population of 1 billion and in the process of realizing this great goal, it will encounter many difficulties. We completely understand the reason why the Chinese people regard this modernization program as a long march. However, when we recall the historical projects of the Great Wall and the Great Canal that China completed in the past, we firmly believe that China will surely achieve the great goal of modernization." He said that Japan is willing to vigorously cooperate with China. Some Japanese personages expressed their great interest in and concern for China's plan for quadrupling China's annual total industrial and agricultural output value by the end of this century. They inquired into and discussed the grounds for and the possiblity of realizing this goal. Centering on this problem, the personages of the two countries carried out some beneficial discussions about the problem and the exploitation and conservation of energy and the development of transportation, communications and agriculture in China.

The first Sino-Japanese Conference of Nongovernment Personages which was held in Tokyo for 3 days was a good beginning. It has proved that the personages of China and Japan have already been able to frankly exchange their opinions through unconstrained free discussions in order to gradually deepen their mutual understanding and confidence and promote their friendship and cooperation. This has also proved that the relations between the two countries have been processing and will become more and more mature.

PAKISTAN'S ZIAUL HAQ ON RELATIONS WITH CHINA

[Text] Islamabad, October 15 (XINHUA) -- President Ziaul Haq of Pakistan has hailed Pakistan's relations with China as "the model relationship", in an interview with XINHUA and radio Beijing correspondents in Rawalpindi on the eve of his forthcoming visit to China.

"Pakistan and China have the most friendly relations and these are relations which could be the envy of any country," the president said.

"China is the bigger partner. Pakistan is a smaller partner. China has been able to allow us to maintain a relationship on equal level of fraternity and freedom," he added.

Speaking highly of the principles of peaceful co-existence China has followed in the international relations, he said China has set an example for the larger countries. "The People's Republic of China has so far never interfered in any country's internal affairs and more so of their neighbors. We are proud to be neighbour of China and to have enjoyed this relationship."

The president expounded Pakistan's position on the Afghan problem. He said: The Afghanistan issue "has to be settled politically." "In this respect the United Nations resolution is a stepping stone toward perhaps an eventual achievement of the successful conclusion of the Afghanistan problem."

"But in the case of Afghanistan," he said, "I am not so optimistic. I think we find a good deal of hurdles."

Referring to the indirect talks on Afghanistan in Geneva, the president said: "I must emphasize here that by entering into the indirect negotiations with the Afghan political party we will not compromise on the four principles which we have followed all along. Those principles are: The foreign troops must withdraw from Afghanistan; Afghanistan's status as a non-aligned Islamic country must be restored; refugees must return with honour and dignity to their homes and hearth; and it should be left to the people of Afghanistan to select the type of the government they want."

On the Kampuchean problem, the Pakistan president said: "We are supporting the stand of non-interference in Kampuchea, exactly the same principle as we are fighting for in the problem of Afghanistan. We believe that any outside interference is not in the interests of international peace."

On the situation in the Middle East, he said: "Unless the people of Palestine who are now homeless refugees are allowed to have a homeland of their own and unless the United Nations resolutions are implemented by the withdrawal of the Israeli forces from the occupied homeland, I do not see there can be any solution to the Middle East problem."

Referring to the Iran-Iraq crisis, the president said both sides should find a peaceful solution to this problem. "We hope that not in the too distant future, the cease-fire and solution will be found." He said: "Pakistan has followed the five basic principles of peaceful co-existence with China has advocated. We have followed the principles of non-interference in anybody's internal affairs. We have also followed the principle of cordial relations and relationship on mutual respect and understanding, irrespective of the size and belief of a country or the form of government that they may have."

Dealing with his country's economic achievements, he said the backbone of the country's economy rests in the agricultural field.

The agricultural production has increased by four percent while the national economy as a whole registered a growth rate of six percent. This has been the result of hard work of the people. Yet Pakistan as a developing country still has a long way to go, he noted.

The president said he is looking forward to meeting with Chinese leaders and exchanging views with them on international issues and bilateral issues during his upcoming third visit to China.

At the end of the interview, the president said, through XINHUA and radio Beijing, he wants to convey the very good wishes from the people and Government of Pakistan and himself for the prosperity and progress of the great people of China. "We wish and pray that China will continue to progress and the people of China will continue to enjoy better and better standard of life and China will continue to play the role that China deserves to play in the international field," he said.

FURTHER REPORTS ON PCF DELEGATION'S VISIT

Hu, Marchais Hold Talks

OW142102 Beijing XINHUA in English 1541 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, Oct. 14 (XINHUA) -- General Secretary Hu Yaobang of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee and French Communist Party General Secretary Georges Marchais began their first round of talks in a sincere, candid and friendly atmosphere here this afternoon.

The two briefed each other on their nations' political, economic and social situations, their parties' historical experience and current tasks, and the guidelines and policies for fulfillment of those tasks.

Marchais analyzed social changes in France in recent years and the social and historical causes for present problems. He briefed the Chinese on the strategies and tactics of the French Communist Party for solving these problems. He also expounded his party's theoretical basis for building French-style socialism and the path to attain it.

Hu Yaobang reviewed the history of the Chinese Communist Party, its major successes and setbacks. He discussed China's improved political and economic situation since the 1976 downfall of the gang of four, and especially since the 1978 Third Plenary Session of the party's 11th Central Committee.

He also spoke on China's efforts to strengthen socialist democracy and legal system, and the goals established by the recent 12th national party congress and the policies and measures for realizing them.

Present at the talks were Maxime Gremetz, member of the Political Bureau and the Secretariat and head of the International Department of the French Communist Party, Raymond Jeanne, member of the Central Committee of the French Communist Party, Jean Francois Gau, also a Central Committee member and secretary to the general secretary, and Dr. Jacqueline Fraysse-Cazalis, PCF deputy to the National Assembly.

Also present were leading members of Chinese central departments, Ji Pengfei, Qiao Shi, Feng Xuan and Qian Liren.

Hu Hosts Banquet

OW141930 Beijing XINHUA in English 1645 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, October 14 (XINHUA) -- Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, today showed full approval for the resumption of relations between the Chinese and French Communist Parties.

"It is in conformity with the profound aspirations and fundamental interests of the two parties and peoples that the two parties join hands again with a forward-looking attitude," he said.

Addressing a banquet he gave this evening for the French Communist Party Central Committee delegation led by General Secretary Georges Marchais, Hu Yaobang extended a warm welcome to them on behalf of the C.P.C. Central Committee, the entire membership of the party and the people of China.

Georges Marchais said in his toast that his delegation is keenly interested in this visit. "We are convinced," he said, "that our understanding of the realities of the original type of socialism the Chinese people are building will enrich our own reflection. Our visit is also an indication of the friendship of our two countries."

Hu Yaobang said the shadow that was once cast upon the relations between the two parties is now over. "We are all wholeheartedly satisfied and pleased with this new, important development in the relations between the Chinese and French parties," he added.

Referring to the talks that started earlier today, he said: "We are sure that the full exchange of views and comradely discussions will certainly enhance our mutual understanding and friendship, and give a powerful push to the smooth growth of relations between our two parties on the basis of the principles of independence, complete equality, mutual respect and non-interference in each other's internal affairs."

Hu Yaobang paid tribute to the French people as a great nation cherishing freedom and progress. "The French proletariat founded the Paris commune which was described by Marx as the dawn of a great social revolution for the emancipation of mankind, leaving behind an indelible, glorious monument in the history of the communist movement," he said.

He said the French Communist Party is a party that has a glorious revolutionary tradition and enjoys extensive popular support. The French Communists, who carried forward the cause of the Paris commune, wrote a heroic chapter in the anti-fascist resistance movement.

Today, Hu Yaobang said, the French Communist Party is working unremittingly to win and safeguard the rights of the laboring people, explore a road to socialism with French characteristics, oppose the threat of war, preserve world peace, and win progress for humanity.

"Our hearts are invariably filled with revolutionary sentiments and profound admiration when we recall the heroic struggles waged by the French working class and Communists" Hu Yaobang stated.

Reviewing the mutual support between the two parties and peoples in past struggles, Hu Yaobang mentioned the days when the young Zhou Enlai and other Chinese proletarian revolutionaries of his time once studied and carried out revolutionary activities in France, when the two parties and peoples supported each other during the anti-fascist struggle, and when Jacques Duclos, Waldeck Rochet and other leaders of the French Communist Party visited China after the People's Republic was founded.

Hu Yaobang wished the great French people, the French working class and all French Communists constant new successes in their struggle for a bright future.

Georges Marchais stated tht relations between communist parties should be established on the basis of equality, mutual respect, independence and recognition of differences without affecting their friendly ties.

"We do not always share the same position on all issues," he said. "There are even differences between us on certain issues, and this is no secret."

He said the talks between the two parties will enable them to brief each other on their own positions and exchange views on all major issues in a friendly and frank manner. "We have no doubt that the talks will be fruitful and help increase understanding and cooperation between our two parties," Marchais said. He said the current visit will make it possible for the delegation to acquire first-hand information on the kind of socialist society the Chinese people are building and the successes they have achieved.

"In this connection," he said, "we naturally devote tremendous attention to your twelfth national congress and the important decisions you adopted at the congress."

The great victory of the revolution won by the Chinese people under the leadership of the Chinese Communist Party in 1949, Marchais said, was an outstanding contribution they made to the struggle waged by the people's groaning under imperialism and colonialism.

"Since that victory, the Chinese people have scored important achievements by following a unique road to socialism," he continued. "No one can deny that the livelihood of the Chinese people, who make up one-quarter of humanity, has improved markedly."

"The construction you are undertaking is a pioneering human effort, which is indeed complex and stupendous as well as soul stirring," Marchais said. "It has no precedent in China or elsewhere."

He said more and more people have embarked or are embarking on this road and they should invent, innovate and open a new road by themselves. "There is no, nor can there be, a ready-made 'model' of socialism for various peoples to copy indiscriminately," the general secretary said.

He said the French Communists are fighting to build a unique society in France. "French society is now undergoing a profound crisis which simultaneously affects its economic, social, political and cultural life as well as behavior and moral values," Marchais said.

"This crisis is rocking the structure of the capitalist system to its foundation," he said. "Only by changing the old structure and building a new society can this crisis be resolved."

Socialism has been put on the agenda of France and this socialist society will be typically French in its entirety, the French Communist Party leader stated.

Among those joining the French guests at the banquet were leading members of the central departments concerned, Hu Qili, Ji Pengfei, Qiao Shi, Feng Xuan, Qian Liren, Ding Qiao and An Gang.

Discussions With Zhao Ziyang

OW111656 Beijing XINHUA in English 1603 GMT 11 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, October 11 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said here today China's current economic improvement is laying a solid foundation for economic cooperation with other countries.

Speaking at a meeting with Per Hysing-Dahl, president of the Norwegian parliament and his delegation, Premier Zhao said that, judging by the present progress, he thinks China can surpass the target of 4 to 5 percent set for its annual economic growth.

Heavy industry began to make a turn for the better earlier this year, and light industry and agriculture are now in excellent shape, he said. This shows, he added, that China is now able to start new projects of economic construction.

Zhao Ziyang said that China and Norway have made much progress in their friendly cooperation in recent years. The current visit of President Per Hysing-Dahl and the Norwegian parliamentary delegation will lend a fresh impetus to economic, trade and technical cooperation between the two countries, he said.

Per Hysing-Dahl said Norway is very much interested in cooperating with China, especially in petroleum, oceanography, hydro-electric power and other areas in which Norway has traditional knowledge and skills.

Zhao Ziyang said China and Norway have made a good start in their technical cooperation in the petroleum industry. He thanked Norway for providing China with advice in drafting laws governing the development of offshore oil.

At the request of the Norwegian parliamentary leader, Zhao Ziyang discussed China's policy of opening to the outside world, saying that it is an established, long-range policy and that import of up-to-date equipment from abroad and cooperation with foreign firms in opening up natural resources will grow.

China is working hard to draft new economic laws and improve existing ones, he said. The Chinese Government will see to it that the legitimate interests of overseas firms investing in China are protected.

Per Hysing-Dahl said he appreciated the way China has honored its contracts and kept its promises. In a brief conversation with the three Norwegian reporters covering the delegation's visit, prior to the meeting, Zhao Ziyang said China and Norway share converging or similar views on a number of current, important international issues.

Sino-Norwegian relations have expanded rapidly in recent years and friendly exchanges have grown, Zhao Ziyang said. He wished Norway prosperity and the Norwegian people happiness. Present on the occasion were Kong Yuan, deputy secretary-general of the Standing Committee of the Chinese National People's Congress, and Arne Arnesen, Norwegian ambassador to China.

[Text] Damascus, October 9 (XINHUA) -- Yasir 'Arafat, leader of the Palestine Liberation Organization had talks today with King Husayn of Jordan on the future of Palestinian-Jordanian relations.

According to the official Jordanian news agency, PETRA, 'Arafat and Husayn also discussed the latest developments in the Middle East and the necessity for Israel to withdraw from all the territories it has occupied.

'Arafat, who is on a tour of several Arab states, arrived in Amman today from Bahrain for the talks. He and Husayn first met alone and then were joined by Jordan's Crown Prince Hassan, Prime Minister Mudar Badran, armed forces Commanding Officer Sharif Bin-Shakir and members of the PLO's Executive and Central Committees.

King Husayn's proposal for a Jordanian-Palestinian confederation was reportedly high in the talks. It envisages a federal union between Jordan and a recovered West Bank and Gaza Strip.

It is known that U.S. President Reagan has called for Palestinian self-rule in the West Bank and Gaza Strip in association with Jordan but rejected an establishment of a Palestinian state.

'Arafat and Husayn also examined decisions made at the recent Arab summit in Fes, Morocco, which include the calls for the creation of an independent Palestinian state with Jerusalem as its capital and a guaranteed peace for all states in the region.

The two leaders stressed in their talks the need to coordinate Arab actions particularly joint Jordanian-Palestinian actions.

The talks were timed before King Husayn's forthcoming Washington visit.

[Text] Damascus, October 10 (XINHUA) -- PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat said in Amman today that the struggle in the occupied Arab territories would continue so long as Israelis control their land.

Addressing a meeting at the PLO office in Amman, 'Arafat said the Arab nation was at one of the most critical points in its existence. He claimed that the Israeli invasion of Lebanon and the siege of Beirut were a part of a continuing struggle between the Arab and Zionist wills.

The PLO leader praised his fighters who had fought against Israel in Beirut for 74 days in the fact of the most advanced American weapons.

'Arafat also blamed the U.S. President for the massacre of Palestinians in West Beirut because his envoy Philip Habib had pledged to protect Palestinian civilians there.

[Text] Tunis, October 13 (XINHUA) -- Palestine Liberation Organization leader Yasir 'Arafat said today that he is satisfied with the results of his talks with King Husayn of Jordan.

Speaking to reporters at the airport here today after his return from Jordan, 'Arafat said that his talks with King Husayn are "positive and important."

'Arafat discussed with Jordanian leaders the possibility of a future Jordanian-Palestinian confederation and the course of future negotiations on the Palestinian question during his stay in the kingdom.

Referring to the search operations in West Beirut by the Lebanese Regular Army, 'Arafat said the PLO Executive Committee, in a statement issued last night, called on Lebanese President Amin al-Jumayyil and Prime Minister Shafiq al-Wazzan to stop the action aimed at persecuting Palestinians in Lebanon.

Turning to European initiatives, 'Arafat said that West European countries know well the situation in the Middle East, but they yield to hegemony and American pressures. 'Arafat also indicated disappointment at the unwillingness of these nations to respect the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people whose sole representative is the PLO.

'Arafat met French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson last night. Cheysson told a press conference here before his departure for home that he was glad the PLO has embarked on the path of a political settlement on the Palestinian problem.

'Arafat has visited the Sudan, South Yemen, North Yemen, Iraq, Syria, Saudi Arabia, Bahrain and Jordan since he left here on September 18.

WEEKLY: TRIAL OF COUNTERREVOLUTIONARIES TO GO ON

HK150915 Beijing BEIJING REVIEW in English No 41, 11 Oct 82 p 3

["Notes From the Editors" column by political editor An Zhiguo: "Trials of Jiang Qing's Accomplices"]

[Text] On the eve of the 12th National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party, eight more principal members of the Jiang Qing counter-revolutionary clique were tried in Shanghai. Was this an intentional coordination?

No. It was only a coincidence. Our Constitution and law of criminal procedure clearly stipulate that our judicial organs exercise judicial authorities independently and are not subject to interference by any organs or individuals.

After the trials of the chief culprits of the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counter-revolutionary cliques held at the end of 1980 and early 1981, our judicial organs decided to hear the cases of other principal members of the two counter-revolutioanry cliques. Legal proceedings against them have been going on over the past year and more. In Shanghai, for instance, Hu Jinrong, one of the principal accomplices, was tried last year, before the trials of Xu Jingxian, Wang Xiuzhen and six others in August this year. Xu, Wang and the other six culprits played an active role in the Jiang Qing counter-revolutionary clique during the 10 years of turmoil, persecuted a large number of cadres and people in a planned way, and plotted to subvert the government and overthrow the people's democratic dictatorship.

Principal members of these cliques were also tried successively in Liaoning, Hunan, Yunnan, Sichuan and other provinces and municipalities last year or early this year. The military tribunal of the People's Liberation Army tried counter-revolutioanry military members. For instance, Li Weixin, a former Air Force officer who took part in a counterrevolutionary coup d'etat plotted by Lin Biao, was convicted and sentenced last April. Li participated in drawing up the detailed plans for starting the coup d'etat and assassinating Chairman Mao. After the coup was aborted, he helped plot to flee to Guangzhou and set up another central committee, and he was captured while trying to flee abroad by helicopter. These trials were held publicly and were attended by the masses, and the defendants had lawyers. Just as in other countries, some of the trials were covered by the newspapers and some were not.

The crimes of the Jiang Qing and Lin Biao counter-revolutionary cliques were committed under very complicated circumstances during the decade-long "Cultural Revolution" and involved a considerable number of people. Some of the defendants' acts violated the criminal law and some were just mistakes. To distinguish crimes from mistakes, and serious crimes from light offences, therefore, calls for a comparatively long time of preparations before the trials. As regards the specific time for the trials, it depends entirely on the specific circumstances of each case, including its investigation, pre-trial and case filing.

China does not rely on individual court procedures to coordinate with certain needs. It attaches greater attention to safeguarding the dignity of the law during the court proceedings. The trials of members of the two counter-revolutionary cliques will continue for some time, which will help people attain a better understanding of China's stable and independent legal proceedings.

PROGRESS REPORT ON NATIONAL OIL DRILLING WORK

HK150734 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1245 GMT 13 Oct 82

["Much Headway Made in China's Oil Drilling Work Over Past Few Years" -- ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE headline]

[Text] Beijing 31 July (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- In the past few years China's oil drilling level has been improved to a great extent and has entered the scientific drilling stage.

China has now set up a drilling team capable of all types of production work. The number of drilling teams has increased from a few in the 1950's to over 700, and the number of drilling staff and workers totals 190,000. Apart from this, there is now a considerable number of scientific drilling research teams.

By now the drilling level has been improved in an all-round way and drilling has continued to increase in speed. In the field of well cementation, concrete can now be injected into oilfields at several levels and special technology for well cementation has been adopted. In terms of obtaining cores, short cylinders have been replaced by long ones and the rate of obtaining cores has been increased by several percent. Recently, a 46-metre core was removed from a drilling well running to a depth of 4,500 metres in the limestone of Sechuan oilfield. The rate for obtaining core was increased by 100 percent. The quality of wells has been improved to a great extent. The national monthly average speed rate registered a sixfold increase in 1981 compared with 1949. Daqing No 1205 drilling teams and Shengli oilfield No 3252 drilling team have achieved the highest annual records for drilling length, with 120,000 and 150,000 metres respectively. Huabei oilfield No 4 company has a total of 16 rigs. Wells have been sunk to a depth of over 3,000 meters. Each drilling team has achieved an average annual drilling length of 15,000 metres. The achievements of these teams have reached the world's advanced levels.

The drilling technology level has been raised markedly over the past few years. Gushers, drills of high efficiency, first-grade concrete and other new types of technology have been widely used and special drilling technology has also been developed. Formerly, we could only sink shallow wells, but we are now able to sink deep or super-deep wells. Before, we could only sink ordinary wells but we are now able to sink high-pressure gaseous wells and special technology wells. Previously, we were only capable of straight drilling but we are now capable of directional drilling and cluster-type drilling. We are now capable of both inland and offshore drilling. Since the foundation of the country, we have sunk a total of 242 wells with a length of over 4,000 metres, of which 211 were completed in the past 4 years. The average well's construction period was shortened by 295 days in 1981 compared with 1977. China now is capable of sinking a well with a drilling length of over 7,000 metres.

Drilling equipment has been greatly improved. China can now mass produce land-used rigs able to bore lengths of 1,200, 3,200 and 4,500 metres respectively, and can produce 23 different types of drills. Now 50 percent of the drilling teams are equipped with Chinese-made advanced rigs.

In terms of sea drilling, China has now established an offshore oil exploration bureau and South Sea oil exploration headquarters, equipped with over 10 drilling platforms. Oil explorations have been initiated in Bohai, the Yellow Sea, East China Sea and South China Sea and a number of high yield oil and gas wells have been sunk.

According to a person concerned in the Ministry of the Petroleum Industry, drilling is the basic means for completing oil source exploration and gas exploitation and it is an important guarantee for a stable annual yield of 100 million tons of crude oil. He added that the actual drilling work is excellent. In the first half of this year, the drilling amounted to approximately 3,700,000 metres. According to the annual plan for this year, drilling of 7,000,000 metres is likely to be achieved, establishing the highest record of drilling length since the foundation of the state.

FOREIGN TRADE HELPS PROMOTE NATIONAL ECONOMY

[Text] Beijing, 13 Oct (XINHUA) -- The progress in China's economic relations and trade with foreign countries since it adopted an open door policy has played an important role in the country's national economic development and readjustment, according to data released recently by the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade.

China has registered substantial increases in both exports and imports in the past 3 years. Total foreign trade volume for 1981 amounted to $40.4 billion, doubling that for 1978. Of the total, exports expanded to $20.9 billion from the 1978 figure of $9.7 billion at an average annual growth rate of 28.9 percent. In spite of the worldwide commodity market recession, this year's exports have increased by a wide margin over the corresponding 1981 period.

Expanded export has enabled this country to earn more foreign exchange and import more from foreign countries. From 1979 to 1981, China imported more than 2.2 million dun of cotton and large quantities of chemical fiber. These imported items were processed into manufactured goods for export which, in turn, boosted the country's foreign exchange reserve. To develop its light and textile industries, China has imported large quantities of raw rubber, dyestuff and other chemical materials. In a bid to support agricultural production, this country has also imported large quantities of chemical fertilizer, pesticide, seeds and animals for breeding purposes. Chemical fertilizer imported during the period under review amounted to more than 27 million dun. During the past 3 years, China has imported nearly 40 million dun of food grain, over 3 million dun of sugar and some 0.9 million dun of animal and plant oil. These have helped to readjust our agricultural structure, reduce the peasants' burden and regulate the domestic market regarding supply and demand.

As for importing foreign technologies, since the end of 1978 China no longer imports large and medium-sized plants or equipment in massive quantities. To step up the technical transformation of its existing enterprises, this country has accelerated the process of importing single-item technology and the major equipment required, linking introduction of foreign technology to utilization of foreign funds. Shanghai Municipality and Jiangsu Province have initiated more than 800 projects by utilizing foreign funds to import advance technologies and restructure the small and medium-sized enterprises. Some of these projects are manufacturing goods for and turning in profit to the state. Generally, these enterprieses are able to refund in full the amounts of foreign exchange they have borrowed. In addition to importing equipment in a bid to develop the chemical fiber industry, the country's textile industrial departments have purchased quite a few foreign printing and dyeing machines in an effort to improve the quality of textile goods and increase their variety. China's textile industry in printing and dyeing polyester cotton cloth can now meet domestic and foreign market demand.

While mainly relying on its own efforts, China has stepped up construction in the past 3 years by using foreign funds from many channels on selected projects. As of the end of June this year, this country directly absorbed through agreements with foreign businessmen $3 billion in investments in the form of joint ventures, cooperation in offshore oil exploration, and large and small compensation trade. Of the total amount of foreign investment, a sum of $1 billion has been spent. Moreover, foreign loans were utilized to supplement domestic construction funds to finance a number of energy and communications projects. All these have played a positive role in boosting the production capability of China's basic industry and accelerating the enterprises process of technical transformation.

The development of foreign trade, especially the growth of export of commodities manufactured using imported raw materials, has boosted his country's industrial processing capability and created more jobs for its work force. There are 20 million people in the country engaged in the production of export goods. Approximately one-third of the workers of Shanghai's handicraft industry and of Changzhou Municipality's industrial enterprises in Jiangsu are directly engaged in production of export commodities.

HYDROELECTRIC POWER OUTPUT QUOTA FOR 1982 MET

[Text] Beijing, 13 Oct (XINHUA) -- China has fulfilled this year's hydroelectric power output plan 85 days ahead of schedule. As of 7 October, the nation's hydroelectric power output had already reached 55.6 billion kilowatt hours (kWh), topping the same period last year by 6 billion kWh.

Because of the uneven distribution of rainfall in various parts of the country during the first 9 months, the amounts of water acqyired by Fengman, Shuifeng, Xinanjiang and the reservoirs of seven other major hydroelectric power stations were less than the same period last year and below the normal annual average. But thanks to water conservation and other economic measures, these power stations not only increased power output, but also stored 1.33 billion cubic meters more water in their reservoirs than the corresponding period of 1981.

During the first 9 months of this year, the Liujiazia hydroelectric power plant, in addition to generating 760 million kwh of electricity more than the same period of last year, also met the need for water to flush the silt in its dam and for irrigation and thawing the ice flows in the downstream areas. Thanks to better management, the newly-installed generators of such hydroelectric power stations, which are still under construction, have been performing satisfactorily.

Through intensification of management, the small hydroelectric power stations dotting the country generated approximately 10 percent more power during the first 9 months than during the same period last year.

DENG XIAOPING SEEKS TALENT AT LOCAL LEVELS

HK150626 Beijing BEIJING WANPAO in Chinese 1 Oct 82 p 1

[Special feature by Hu Sisheng [5170 1835 0581]: "Talent Lies Before You -- An Anecdote About Comrade Deng Xiaoping Who Goes to the Lower Levels To Seek Talent"]

[Text] Wang Zhaoguo's name is 16th on the list of the members of the 12th CPC Central Committee, arranged in order of the number of strokes in the surname. Most people have probably never heard of the 41-year-old middle-aged man.

There was an interesting and enlightening incident leading to his selection to the supreme leading circles of the party.

Early one summer morning, on 22 July 1980, Comrade Deng Xiaoping, who was on vacation elsewhere in the country at the time, went from Wuhan by train to the second motorcar plant. He was accompanied by Comrade Chen Pixian. Situated at the northern foot of the Wudang mountains in Hubei, the second motorcar plant had a staff of more than 50,000 and had attained an annual output of 80,000 cars. At 0800 sharp, the train stopped at Shiyan City. Huang Zhengxia, secretary of the factory CPC Committee and factory director, Wang Zhaoguo, deputy factory director, as well as then Henan provincial CPC Committee First Secretary Duan Junyi and Second Secretary Hu Lijiao, who were making an on-the-spot inspection at the second motorcar plant at the time, went aboard the train to meet him. Comrade Deng Xiaoping was having a breakfast of deep-fried twisted dough sticks, porridge and two plates of common dishes. As soon as he saw them, he said with elation: "I have long been looking forward to having a look here. I have come at last." Comrade Chen Pixian added humorously: "Vice Chairman Deng Xiaoping asked for the second motorcar plant while he was visiting the Gezhou dam water-control project. He has come now of his own free will." The peal of laughter resounded in the car....

They left the station by van for the second motorcar plant. Huang Zhengxi sat in the first row behind the driver's seat and Comrade Deng Xiaoping in the second row, while Wang Zhaoguo sat on the right side of that row near the door. While the van was speeding toward the first foundry plant, factory director Huang took this opportunity to say to Comrade Deng Xiaoping: "This is Comrade Wang Zhaoguo, a newly elected deputy director of our plant. He is one of the deputy directors of the main factory in charge of production."

Turning his head toward Wang Zhaoguo, Comrade Deng Xiaoping asked: "How old are you?"

"Thirty-eight," said Wang Zhaoguo.

A veteran comrade who had taken part in the construction of the second motorcar plant, Huang Zhengxia gave a detailed introduction of Wang Zhaoguo to Comrade Deng Xiaoping.

Born in the 1940's, Wang Zhaoguo was a leader of the Young Pioneers when studying at the primary school and head of the cultural section while studying at the middle school and university. He joined the CPC in 1965 and, after his graduation from the Harbin University of Industry in 1966, worked for 2 years in the university. He was assigned to work at the second motorcar plant in 1968. He had served in succession as a technician, secretary of the main factory CYL Committee, member of the Standing Committee of the main factory CPC Committee, deputy director of the Political Department and first secretary of the automobile body plant CPC Committee. He was transferred to the automobile body plant in 1975. At that time, the leading body of the branch factory was weak and lax. The staff and workers did not keep their minds on their work and production remained stagnant. It had become a "stumbling block" in the construction of the second motorcar plant. As soon as Wang Zhaoguo took office, he made an effort to attempt to reverse the situation. After a year of hard work, the outlook of the plant began to change. However, like a force 12 typhoon, the "movement to counter the right deviationist trend of reversing correct verdicts" was launched. Big-character posters to uncover the so-called capitalist-roaders in power were put up all over the country. But, as usual, the branch factory under the leadership of Wang Zhaoguo grasped production, strengthened labor discipline and boycotted the posting of big-character posters. He also unraveled a case. At the time, even the Public Security Bureau dared not handle the case, because according to the documents of the "higher authorities," the central task of the Public Security Bureau also concerned the "capitalist-roaders...."

Huang Zhengxia's introduction went on while the van was bumping along the highway in the second motorcar plant. Comrade Deng Xiaoping gazed at the bespectacled Wang Zhaoguo and smiled understandingly.

On the way to Wuhan after visiting the second motocar plant, Comrade Deng Xiaoping enthusiastically said to Comrade Chen Pixian: "There are quite a few young cadres in the leading body of the second motorcar plant. There is a deputy factory director and a vice secretary of a branch factory (referring to Comrade Ye Yanzhang). One is 38 years old and the other is 32. Both have many years of experience in exercising leadership. Moreover, they are educated, have professional knowledge and do very well in their work. This shows that our party has both talent and cadres." On the homeward journey, Comrade Deng Xiaoping mentioned on many occasions the discovery of talent during his visit to the second motorcar plant and expressed his great satisfaction with the situation.

From the early period of the founding of the party to the present, there have been four generations in the cadre ranks of our party. "It is like black silk in the morning but it turns to snow at dusk." The older generation has struggled all their lives and the law of nature plays an irresistible role for them. For the prosperity and continuation of the party's cause, Comrade Deng Xiaoping and other communists of the older generation are most concerned about the succession of the old by the new and cooperation between new and old cadres.

At a meeting before the convocation of the 12th party congress, Comrade Deng Xiaoping again mentioned Wang Zhaoguo's name. Drawing inferences about other cases from one instance, he said with meaning: "We do have talents. The problem is that we seldom get in touch with the lower levels. There is also a problem of habit so that is not easy to discover talents. In system reforms, it is important to select talent so that good and relatively young cadres come to the fore at an early date and will be worthy successors to the revolution. We have talked about this matter for several years and all of us unanimously hold this to be a matter of great importance. However, it is not easy to put it into effect. It will be impossible for us to hand this over to the next shift without a solution to this problem."

What an earnest remark and what great foresight.

Thus, we shall be able to understand more clearly why Comrade Deng Xiaoping attached such great importance to the discovery of talent in the valleys of Hubei.

JINAN PAPER: NO 'COZY NESTS' FOR CPC MEMBERS

HK150520 JINAN DAZHONG RIBAO in Chinese 3 Oct 82 p 1

[Commentator's article: "Party Members Are Not Allowed To Build Cozy Nests for Themselves"]

[Text] The new party constitution adopted by the 12th CPC Congress has set stricter demands on our party organizations and party members and on party member cadres in particular. Only by taking the demands set by the new party constitution as our criterion and doing our utmost to strengthen our tempering in party spirit and self-cultivation can we become qualified Communist Party members who can shoulder great historical missions in the new historical period. The practice of increasing tempering in party spirit and self-cultivation involves many varied aspects and the key to this matter lies in using communist ideology to arm ourselves to overcome nonproletarian ideology and individualism of all forms in particular. Here, we intend to discuss one thing only: Are party members allowed to build cozy nests for themselves?

Stalin said that Communist Party members are built of special materials. This does not mean that they have exceptional psychologies. Dut to the fact that Communist Party members are guided by the world outlook of dialectical and historical materialism, they have the conviction and will to strive for communism all their lives. Of course, Communist Party members also need clothing and food and have their own family and personal lives.

We maintain that Communist Party members, as ordinary members of the masses, enjoy what they have achieved in labor and are constantly raising the level of their material and cultural life with the increase of the people's living standard. It is normal and natural for them to do so. This is a matter above criticism. Actually, most of the broad masses of Communist Party members have their own happy and satisfactory families, but their family lives are not an encumbrance to their progress. They work selflessly and diligently to do their bit for the party's cause. Such being the case, why do we say that some Communist Party members are active in building cozy nests for themselves? We should point out the following things: Although some Communist Party members talk about fighting for communism all their lives, what they actually seek are comfortable and easy lives, positions (the higher the better) money (the more the better), dwellings (the bigger the better -- some even plan to build villas) and children, (anything possible to seek practical gains for them). They pursue evil practices, such as getting back door benefits, establishing personal relations, jobbing for selfish ends, acting in public service for private ends, taking advantage of the masses, collectives and the state by utilizing overt and covert means and so on. It is obvious that these so-called party members, apart from not playing the vanguard role, severely impair the party's image and lessen its prestige.

The nature and principle of the party has decided that Communist Party members are not allowed to build cozy nests for themselves. The CPC is the vanguard of the proletariat and its principle is to serve the people wholeheartedly. To serve the people wholeheartedly means that we are not allowed to work half heartedly or inconsistently. In "serving the people," Comrade Mao Zedong said: "These battalions of ours are wholly dedicated to the liberation of the people and work entirely in the people's interests." The new party constitution adopted by the 12th CPC Congress has also pointed out in its general program: "The party has no special interests of its own apart from the interests of the working class and the broadest masses of the people." It goes without saying that the act of building cozy nests for themselves on the part of some Communist Party members runs counter to the nature and principle of the party. If we review our party's history, we may find that countless revolutionary martyrs never engaged in building cozy nests for themselves and it was impossible for them to do so. "To a man, the country is his home." "We rove all over the world wearing long swords." Such were their noble spirits in struggling for their communist ideals. This shows their lofty thought and feelings for devoting themselves to the interests of the party and people. It is appropriate to say that it is precisely because of their dauntless heroism in fearing no sacrifice of their peace and happiness and lives that our party is able to overcome difficulties and obstacles and win one victory after another. However, whether Communist Party members can correctly handle the relations between individuals and the party on the one hand and individuals and the masses on the other is always a severe test to them -- past, present or future. They have to answer a number of questions. For instance, do they join the party to serve public or individual interests? Do they unconditionally submit themselves to the interests of the party or think of themselves before others at every turn? Do they serve the people wholeheartedly or do everything possible to seek personal ease and comfort? If they can withstand the test, they prove themselves to be Communist Party members. If they fail to withstand the test, they are not qualified to be Communist Party members.

Judging from its name, we know that the CPC is a party which takes communist ideological system as its guidance and the accomplishment of the communist cause as its own task. The great historical mission shouldered by the party has decided that it will never allow its members to build cozy nests. The communist cause is the most magnificent undertaking in the history of mankind and the social system of communism is the most beautiful social system of human society.

The more beautiful the objectives we intend to attain, the higher the price we should pay for them. Our party has a history of 61 years since its birth in 1921. In the communist practice over the past 60 years or so, our party has carried out arduous struggles. A great number of people gave their lives and shed their blood and eventually we overthrew the three big mountains and established socialist society -- the first phase of communist society. In other words, in the great practice of the communist movement, our party has won great victories unprecedented in human history. This is inseparable from our party's hard and arduous struggles. Hedonism of all forms is out of tune with the great communist practice. It is just as Mr Lu Xun said: "If our life is too confortable, our work will be adversely affected. Our party is now marching on toward the lofty goal of communism. It is shouldering a strenuous task and taking a long journey in order to score success.. Therefore, people of one generation after another are required to persist in taking the communist road. Although communist ideals are magnificent, we cannot realize them if we lack firm will and indomitable stamina. Numerous facts have told us that the greatest pleasure and happiness for a genuine party member is to carry out great struggle to realize the party's programs and ideals. Since Communist Party members are heroically and wholeheartedly carrying out struggle for communist cause, they have no time to build cozy nests for themselves. They feel it beneath their dignity to engage in the practice.

People need some sort of vitality. Communist Party members should have their own ideals and beliefs. The reason why some comrades spare no efforts to build cozy nests for themselves is because they have abandoned their communist ideals and revolutionary will. To them, the so-called ideals means "seeking personal interest" and the so-called prospects mean "taking money as the end-all." They believe that "one sparrow in the hand is better than a red-crowned crane flying in the sky." It is not difficult to find out that comrades who think thus are severly influenced by the life outlook of the exploiting class. It seems that they are leading comfrotable lives. Actually, they are pitiable. In spite of the fact that they enjoy a fuller material life,their spiritual world is hollow. If a Communist Party member does not seek beautiful ideals, loses his revolutionary belief and lacks a lofty spirit, his precious political life as a Communist Party member has actually ended. Such a party member lacks the minimum meaning of life.

We hope that those comrades who are now still building their cozy nests will strengthen their study and the study of the 12th CPC Congress documents in particular, enhance their party spirit, raise their political consciousness and further understand the nature, principle, position and role of our party. They should abandon their low target and strive to attain the lofty aim and work together with people throughout the country to make a contribution to creating a new situation in the field of socialist modernization.

[Article by Song Renquiong (1345 0117 4522): "Build a Good Cadre Contingent According to the Principle That They Must Be More Revolutionary, Younger in Average Age, More Educated and Professionally More Competent"]

[Text] The new party constitution adopted by the CPC National Congress has stipulated in clear and definite terms that "The party selects its cadres according to the principle that they should possess both political integrity and professional competence, persists in the practice of appointing people on their merits and opposes favoritism; it calls for genuine efforts to make the ranks of cadres more revolutionary, younger in average age and more knowledgeable and specialized." The core of the organizational work is the question of cadres. Making the ranks of the cadres more revolutionary, younger in age and more knowledgeable and specialized is a major principle of the party's cadre work in the new period. The comrades of the whole party must resolutely, unconditionally and enthusiastically propagate and conscientiously implement this principle.

The advance and formation of this principle went through a process. After the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee formulated the party's ideological and political lines in the new period, in July and August 1979, Comrade Deng Xiaoping inspected Shandong Province, Shanghai and Tianjin. On his inspection tour, he pointed out on many occasions during the journey that since the ideological and political lines have been formulated, the question now is that of the organizational line, that of cadres and in particular, that of selecting successors. Cadres who are competent and fairly young should be selected for promotion. On 29 September in the same year, in his speech delivered at the meeting to celebrate the 30th anniversary of the founding of the PRC, Comrade Ye Jianying stressed the need to pay attention to ensuring that "the ranks of cadres become younger in average age and more specialized step by step" and the need to try our best to "make the situation of our organization suit the political task of realizing the four modernizations." In May 1980, at the forum on the work of selecting and promoting outstanding young and middle-aged cadres, a forum which was convened by the Organization Department of the CPC Central Committee, Comrade Yaobang further pointed out that the so-called ideal leading bodies means that the members of the leading bodies must resolutely carry out the party's line, uphold the socialist road, possess professional knowledge and organizational and leadership ability, and must be in the prime of life and full of vigor. During this period, Comrade Chen Yun held that in selecting cadres, attention should be paid to the fact that they should possess both political integrity and professional competence. By political integrity, we mean, above all, upholding the socialist road and the leadership of the party. On this basis, the cadres should become younger in average age and more knowledgeable and specialized, and furthermore this method of selecting and using cadres should become a regular practice. The great historically significant decision adopted by the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee again clearly affirmed that "the party has decided to put an end to the virtually lifelong tenure of leading cadres, change the overconcentration of power and, on the basis of becoming more revolutionary, gradually reduce the average age of the leading cadres at all levels and raise their level of education and professional competence." From the above-mentioned sketchy review of the past, we can see that the policy of ensuring that the ranks of cadres become "more revolutionary, younger in average age and more knowledgeable and specialized" was worked out by the party Central Committee through careful consideration and on the basis of making repeated deliberations and of drawing on collective wisdom and absorbing all useful ideas. It is the crystallization of the collective wisdom of the party's leading core, it conforms with objective reality and also complies with the common aspirations of the party and the people.

To ensure that the ranks of the cadres become more revolutionary, younger in average age and more knowledgeable and specialized is a major subject put forth by the objective process of the continuous development of our socialist cause. With the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee as the milestone, our country has entered a brand new period of development. During this period, the party should shoulder the heavy responsibilities entrusted by history of leading the people of all nationalities throughout the country in building the economically and culturally backward China into a modern and powerful socialist country. The task of carrying out such an unprecedented pioneering undertaking is extremely arduous. Although the domestic and international situations are favorable for us, we are still confronted with many difficulties. Of the various kinds of difficulties, the conspicuous difficulty is that the present conditions of the ranks of cadres are not suited to the requirements of the new situation. The main manifestations of this situation at present are: 1) historically, the members of leading bodies at various levels are universally 15 to 20 years older than they were before the "Great Cultural Revolution" and the gap between their present average age and that in the 1950's is even wider, that is, the phenomenon of aging is serious; and 2) a considerable number of cadres lack cultural knowledge and scientific and technical know-how, and the number of those who have received systematic professional training and have a knowledge of advanced science and technology and management techniques is even smaller.

This state of affairs is in sharp contradiction with the requirements of the socialist modernization program. If we ignore the question of cadres put forth by the objective process of the great historical turning point and fail to promptly and correctly solve this problem, it will be difficult to implement the party's political line, let alone continuously carry it out for long years. It is not alarmist talk to raise the question in this way. The practice of the international communist movement has given us grievous lessons. The profound lessons our party has drawn from solving the problem of successors and from building a cadre contingent remain fresh in our memory. Happily, we already have a large number of veteran revolutionaries who enjoy high prestige and command universal respect and have rich experience. At a critical moment in effecting a great turning point in history and facing the question of the cooperation between old and new cadres and the succession of the old by the new, with great foresight, they put forth in good time for the party a correct principle of properly solving the question of cadres, that is, a principle of ensuring that the ranks of cadres become younger in average age and more knowledgeable and specialized on the basis of revolutionization. Experience tells us that only a party which is not only good at formulating a correct political line but also good at formulating the organizational line which ensures the implementation -- the effective implementation -- of the political line, can be regarded as a mature Marxist party. Ours is precisely such a party.

To ensure the "four modernizations" of the ranks of cadres, it is first imperative to start with the "transformation" of the leading bodies at various levels. Our tentative ideas are that before the convening of the next CPC National Congress, 5 years of efforts should be exerted to substantially raise the political quality of the leading bodies at various levels, and reduce the average age of the members of the leading bodies at various levels by about 5 years compared with that before the organizational reform; by then, the young and middle-aged cadres who possess both political integrity and professional competence will constitute about 70 percent; those who have an educational level of institutions of higher education or above and have mastered certain professional knowledge will make up 60 to 70 percent. In particular: we must have some of the number one and number two men of great ability who can unite and lead all the leading bodies in opening up new prospects in work. Of course, since the various localities at all levels, trades and departments have their own specific tasks, the requirements of the political and ideological levels, age and composition of knowledge for the leading bodies must also differ accordingly. However, we must not waver in marching ahead along the lines of making the ranks of cadres more revolutionary, younger in average age and more knowledgeable and specialized, in building working bodies which are small in number but highly energetic and capable of continuously opening up new prospects in work. Can the above-mentioned tentative ideas be realized? The achievements gained in the organizational reform carried out in the organs under the direct jurisdiction of the party Central Committee and the ministries and commissions under the State Council in the first half of this year make us confident in answering in the affirmative. This reform which took us 4 months not only greatly reduced the authorized size of the party and government bodies at the central level and their staff but also widely reduced the average age of the members of the leading bodies of the ministries and commissions and bureaus under their jurisdiction by 4 to 6 years. According to the statistics of the 38 ministries and commissions under the State Council, the number of ministers, vice ministers and directors was reduced by 67 percent and the newly promoted young and middle-aged cadres constituted 32 percent of the total sum of members of the newly established bodies; moreover their level of knowledge was higher and more and more people were professionally competent. There are also quite a few successful instances in the localities, departments and enterprises and undertaking units where the organizational reform has not yet been carried out. This shows that the above-mentioned requirements are attainable so long as efforts are exerted.

The crux of the matter lies in the fact that the problem of "retirement" and "promotion" should be solved satisfactorily. By "retirement", we mean conscientiously and properly arranging for batches of old and infirm comrades to retire to the second or third line resolutely in accordance with the regulations of the party Central Committee concerning the retirement system for old cadres and the related regulations of the State Council.

The practice of the organizational reform of the party and government central organs shows that the overwhelming majority of our veteran cadres have high political consciousness; can recommend wise and well qualified people out of concern for public interests; can proceed from the overall situation to conscientiously submit to the needs of revolution and the arrangements of the party organizations; can support young comrades whose seniority, prestige and experience are inferior to their own in their newly assigned work, and are willing to be assistants or to retire to the second or third line to take on the task of helping and guiding their young comrades and passing on experience to them. By "promotion" we mean promoting young and middle-aged cadres who have proved themselves to the leading bodies resolutely to be really outstanding after undergoing trials in practice, according to the principle of both political integrity and professional competence. As Comrade Chen Yun said; not just a few dozen or a few hundred, but thousands and tens of thousands of cadres must be promoted. At present particular attention must be paid to training and selecting outstanding cadres who are about 30 to 40 years old. The promotion and retirement of this kind are closely related. For veteran cadres to withdraw from first-line leading posts is important while for young and middle-aged cadres to be promoted to these posts is more important. Careful and skillful handling is needed in solving the questions of who should retire and what should become of them and who should be promoted and to what posts. The most important thing in this regard is to find the right people and put them to good use.

The guiding ideology of the CPC Central Committee is quite clear on the matter of "promotion," that is, it is imperative to boldly promote cadres who possess both political integrity and professional competence, and are in the prime of life and capable of opening up new prospects in work to leading posts; at the same time, none of the "three types of people" and none of the people who have seriously violated the law and discipline in the political or economic sphere in recent years should be allowed to sneak into the newly established leading bodies. It is the solemn responsibility of the party committees at all levels and the departments of organization and of personnel affairs to manage these two matters well, conscientiously implement the party's standards for selecting cadres and persist in the practice of appointing people on their merits and opposing favoritism. At the same time, it is also necessary to earnestly heed the opinions of all sides and quarters concerned and the masses, restructure the practices of the organizational and personnel work which do not suit the modernization program and open up new channels for discovering, training and using qualified personnel. Who are the able and virtuous people whom the party and the people wantmost to select and put in important positions? The three requirements which the party stressed some years ago and the six basic requirements stipulated by the new party constitution for leading cadres at all levels to meet are identical in spirit. The requirements are the embodiment of the dialectical unity of Red and expert and the objectivization of the party's principle of both political integrity and professional competence in the new historical conditions. While grasping and carrying out these requirements, it is essential to strictly ensure the political standard first and to promote the comrades who really have a strong sense of party spirit, are honest and upright in their methods and dare to uphold principles. It is impossible to imagine that a man who lacks firm confidence in socialism and communism, who is alienated from the correct line, principles and policies of the party Central Committee, who is irresponsible in his work, in low spirits and morally degenerate in his conduct, and who violates the law and discipline can shoulder heavy loads in leading socialist construction. However, it is far from enough to pay attention exclusively to political integrity. Only when they become younger in average age and more knowledgeable and have a good grasp of their professions, can our ranks of cadres adapt themselves to the requirements of the new tasks of the new situation. It is a pity that those who possess political integrity without professional competence can hardly take up an important post although admittedly they are politically trustworthy; the professional competence of those who possess professional competence without political integrity is precisely enough to make them more self-seeking and wily.

If we put them in important positions, they will constitute a grave danger to us. At present, we must specially watch out for the people who rose to prominence by following the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques; people who are seriously factionalist in their ideas; people who indulged in beating, smashing and looting; people who are opposed to the line followed by the party Central Committee since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee; and people who have seriously violated the law and discipline in the economic and other spheres, and we must never let them sneak into leading posts. None of these types of people must be promoted and any of them who have already been promoted to leading bodies must be resolutely and thoroughly removed from the leading bodies one by one if discovered. This is an extremely important matter which concerns whether or not we can ensure the smooth sailing of the socialist modernization program and ensure the continuity of the party's Marxist line. We must never treat this matter casually.

To judge and select cadres at various levels, we must strictly act according to the basic requirements stipulated in the new party constitution and on no account must we lower the requirements on them in the slightest degree. Then are there thousands and tens of thousands of such qualified personnel for us to select for promotion? We not only already have such talent but also have rich resources of it. There is no harm here in calculating roughly the age, qualifications and records of service (the tempering they have undergone) and the composition of culture and knowledge of the existing cadres: 1) the comrades who are 36 to 55 years old number 11 million; 2) the number of cadres who took up their work after the victory of the war of resistance against Japan and before the "Great Cultural Revolution" is around 12 million; 3) the comrades who have reached the level of senior middle school graduate or above total roughly 12 million; and 4) the technical cadres of various professions amount to more than 8.3 million. After the founding of the PRC, we trained a total of more than 3.1 million university graduates and over 38 million graduates from senior middle schools and specialized secondary schools; at present the intellectuals who work in the units under the system of ownership by the whole people and under the collective ownership system number more than 25 million. It can thus be seen that it is entirely possible to select those who excel in all spheres and to choose one in a hundred from our huge treasure house of talent and to accelerate the promotion of cadres.

Over the last 2 or 3 years, the party Central Committee and the various localities and departments have done a lot of work in realizing the "four modernizations" of the leading bodies and certain achievements have also been scored in this respect. However, judging the work as a whole, the result is far from satisfactory. This does not mean that we have not yet selected any of the right people but what we mean is that the number of people we have selected for promotion is too meager. This plus the natural growth of the age of cadres has brought about the phenomena in which little change has taken place in the average age of the members of quite a few leading bodies and large batches of comrades who possess both political integrity and professional competence and are in the prime of life have not been promoted to appropriate leading posts. The problems and difficulties in this respect lie in the fact that, as Comrade Deng Xiaoping said: The existing organizational system and the way of thinking of quite a few comrades are detrimental to the selection and use of the talent that is needed most badly in the four modernizations. Where does the way out lie? Comrade Deng Xiaoping said: "We hope that the party committees at all levels will make a big turn around on this matter, resolutely emancipate their minds, overcome one obstacle after another, break with old conventions and be bold in reforming the system of organization and of personnel affairs which are out of keeping with the times, in vigorously training, discovering and breaking the rules to promote outstanding talent and in waging resolute struggle against all phenomena of suppressing and trampling talent underfoot." In this respect, we, the organization department of the CPC Central Committee, did insufficiently in the past.

In the future, together with the comrades of the whole party, we must do our best to act as required by the party Central Committee. First of all, we must further deepen our understanding and in the selection work, we must pay regular attention to opposing feudal ideas, such as the mentality of "replacement according to seniority" and clear away the influence of "leftist" ideology in treating intellectuals, correct the idealist way of thinking of seeking "all-rounders," "perfect men" and the like in a way that deviates from reality, and really shift the emphasis of cadre work to the acceleration of the "four transformations" of the ranks of cadres so as to realize the "four modernizations" of the country.

It must still be pointed out here that making the ranks of cadres more revolutionary, younger in average age and more knowledgeable and specialized is a principle which should be carried out for long years throughout the whole new period. Carrying out the "transformation" in an on-and-off way will never attain the goal of "transformation." This is not only because people are getting older year after year, that is, today they are in the prime of life and some years later they will grow old and infirm, but also because the development of our cause calls for steady improvement of the requirements of being more revolutionary, knowledgeable and specialized. What is more, whether or not the newly promoted people can be well qualified must also go through trials in practice and they are bound to change. Therefore, we must implement the principle of ensuring that the ranks of cadres become more revolutionary, younger in average age and more knowledgeable and specialized and find good solutions to the problem of the cooperation between old and new cadres and of the succession of the old by the new with extremely great revolutionary toughness and with positive, steady and sure steps. People can see that the organizational reform of the central organs and the ministries and commissions of the State Council has pushed the "four transformations" of the leading bodies a big step further. This is however only the first step. According to statistics for the 34 ministries and commissions connected with the economy under the State Council, there are now 137 ministers and vice ministers as well as directors and vice directors with an average age of 57.93 years old, or 5.7 years less than before the organization reform. This is significant progress. However, if we do not continue selecting young and middle-aged cadres for promotion, after 2 years, their average age will again increase to more than 60 years old. It can thus be seen that if we relax our work a bit or do our work in an on-and-off way, it will be difficult for us to fundamentally free ourselves from a passive position. Therefore, it is imperative to reform the cadre system and to guarantee that the work of making the ranks of cadres become more revolutionary, younger in average age and more knowledgeable and specialized is institutionalized.

The shift of the focus of the party's work and the organizational and structural reforms require us to reform the unsuitable aspects of the cadre system. This is a historical necessity. The two go hand in hand. If we shut our eyes to the needs of development of the situation and do not enthusiastically and resolutely reform the aspects of the cadre system in which conditions are ripe and reform them partially, this will greatly delay our work. On the contrary, things will go contrary to our wishes if we regard this reform as a simple thing or take any hasty action. In reforming the present cadre system, it is first necessary to strictly implement the decision of the party Central Committee concerning the retirement of old cadres. The retirement of the old cadres at various levels must be carried out in accordance with the regulations of the party Central Committee concerning the method of reckoning age. Apart from some specific veteran comrades who have passed the age limit for retirement but are required to stay in the leading bodies by the decision of the party organizations concerned, the overwhelming majority of the old cadres must retire on the basis of doing a good job of persuasion and making proper arrangements for them. Good care must be given to the retiring old cadres and attention must be paid to bringing their role into play.

While their health permits, these comrades are encouraged to continue to make contributions to the party and the state within their power. When everybody is gradually accustomed to the implementation of the retirement system of cadres through years of efforts, the normal succession of the old by the new will be ensured institutionally. Of course, this system alone is far from sufficient. We must still establish and perfect the job responsibility system for cadres of various types and at various levels from top to bottom in the light of the organizational reform and the systems of assessment, promotion and demotion, and rewards and penalties for cadres which are suited to the job responsibility system; we must further perfect the systems of democratic election and appointment and removal of cadres in the light of perfecting political life and in accordance with the stipulations of the party and the state consitutions. Reform of the cadre system is a new thing. We will surely encouter many difficulties. However, if we fail to resolutely carry out the reform, we are bound to encounter more and greater difficulties. We hope that everyone will work strenuously in this respect and strive to lay a good foundation for further reforming the cadre system through the organizational reform of the units at various levels.

Finally, I would like to discuss the question of vigorously intensifying the education and training of cadres. The rapidly developing socialist modernization program requires us to continuously train and bring up cadres who are more revolutionary, younger in average age and more knowledgeable and specialized in larger quantities and of better quality and to fundamentally raise the quality of the whole contingent of cadres. This is a matter of strategy which has a bearing on the success or failure of our cause. In order to solve this problem, our country is stepping up its efforts and reforming the school educational work so as to infuse new blood into the ranks of cadres. One important task at present and for a period of time to come is that our work should be based on the universal raising of the standard of existing cadres. Apart from continuing to persist in training and tempering the cadres in practice, it is still necessary to train them on a large scale. Recently, the party Central Committee made a decision of strategic importance on training cadres on-the-job in rotation and urged the party schools at all levels, cadre schools run by government organizations and enterprises, and especially designated institutions of higher education and the specialized secondary schools to shoulder the regular training of cadres in their different capacities. In the future, in our use and promotion of cadres, we must attach importance to educational background and academic records as well as to experience and achievements in work. Therefore, cadres of various types and at all levels must try their best to acquire a certain level of formal learning and of educational knowledge. All cadres who are working and who do not possess the level of cultural knowledge needed in their work should be trained in rotation by stages. There must be an assessment examination in the vocational training and academic records will be one of the important bases for making appropriate adjustments of cadres. At present, some localities and departments have not attached due importance to the work of training cadres and there are also some cadres who are unwilling to take part in study. This is wrong and must be rectified. We must launch a sustained upsurge for study among the cadres at various levels throughout the nation for the sake of the grand cause of socialist modernization; an upsurge in which people study Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, acquire general knowledge, master scientific and technical know-how and operational and management techniques and study all that is needed to build a high level of socialist material civilization and spiritual civilization. In the last few years, more than 8,100 party schools and specialized cadre schools at various levels have been restored and newly built and the ranks of cadres teaching in such schools have developed into an approximately 100,000-strong contingent; more than 130 institutions of higher education have run special training courses for cadres; the various localities, departments and some medium and large-sized enterprises have run large numbers of cadre training courses, and the number of cadres who have been trained in rotation and received vocational training has increased year after year. According to statistics, the number of leading cadres at county level throughout the country who were trained in rotation from 1979 to 1981 reached more than 200,000, constituting more than half the total of cadres of this category.

Although our work of educating and training cadres is still far from perfect, we have at long last made a good beginning and also accumulated some experience. So long as we make persistent and unremitting efforts and continue to march ahead along the lines of regularization and institutionalization, by the next national party congress, greater progress will surely be made in the quality, both political and professional, of the whole contingent of our cadres, greater improvement will certainly be achieved in the extent to which they are more revolutionary, younger in average age and more knowledgeable and specialized, and new and heartening successes will surely be scored in socialist modernization.

FOUR CHARACTERISTICS OF STRATEGIC GOAL DETAILED

[Article by XINHUA Reporter Hua Xing: "The Strategic Goal Set by the 12th CPC National Congress Has Four New Characteristics"]

[Text] Beijing, 13 Oct (XINHUA) -- The strategic goal for China's economic construction set by the 12th CPC National Congress -- that of quadrupling the nation's annual gross industrial and agricultural output value by the end of this century -- has aroused great response from among the people of all nationalities throughout the country. In the past month or more, the people have conscientiously studied and warmly discussed this strategic goal. Many cadres and masses have also compared this goal with the slogans and objectives in the past, especially those unrealistic ones during the "Great Leap Forward" and the period prior to the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. As a result, many cadres have remarked: "Many slogans were shouted and many goals were set in the past, but none of them is as reliable as those of the 12th CPC National Congress." Some peasants said: "We will have a brighter future if we press ahead toward the goal of the 12th CPC National Congress."

Judging from the people's discussions, we are aware of one important factor that accounts for their confidence in the strategic goal set by the 12th Congress. Compared with the previous slogans and goals, the current strategic goal has four reassuring new characteristics.

The Speed Is Realistic

To achieve the goal of "quadruplication," China is supposed to register an average annual growth rate of 7.2 percent in its annual gross industrial and agricultural output value before the end of this century. This is attainable, though it requires great efforts. During the 28 years from the first 5-year plan in 1953 to 1980, despite the two serious reverses of the "Great Leap Forward" and the "Great Cultural Revolution," China managed to register an average annual growth rate of 8.2 percent in total industrial and agricultural output value. From this the people will have a rough idea of the law governing the growth rate and will know that the goal set by the 12th National Congress of quadrupling the annual gross industrial and agricultural output value in 20 years with an average annual growth rate of 7.2 percent is rather practical, ambitious and reliable.

Stress on Economic Results

Economic results were neglected in previous slogans and goals. A rather typical case was the 1958 slogan: "Double the iron and steel output." In those years, China did double its iron and steel output, but the quality was poor, there were many substandard products, energy and material consumption was high and huge deficits were incurred. In fact, the loss outweighted the gain. The neglect of economic results in the past led to something quite unusual in our industrial and agricultural situation because "development in production resulted in more waste, shortages of market supplies and poverty of the people." The 12th CPC National Congress abandoned the practice of seeking superficial results and actually courting disasters. It stressed that the goal of "quadruplication" should be achieved "under the premise of ever-improving economic results."

It called for "shifting all economic work to the path that concentrates on improving the economic results." In this way, by the year 2000 when China quadruples its annual gross industrial and agricultural output value, its economic and defense capabilities will also be greatly strengthened and the people will get more substantial benefits accordingly and will enjoy comfortable material and cultural life.

Face Difficulties Squarely

We recall that in the past the slogans and goals tended to stress the good aspects to the neglect of negative aspects. They tended to focus on the possibility of achieving the goals without mentioning the underlining difficulties in achieving those goals. At first the people were elated, but soon they found that things were utterly different in reality. Their delight turned into frustration. Comrade Hu Yaobang took a completely different approach when he elaborated the goal of "quadruplication" in his report to the 12th CPC National Congress. The "report" presented all the difficulties and problems about which the people are worried, such as the contradiction between the agricultural inadequacy to resist natural disasters on the one hand and the huge population and the relatively small acreage of arable land on the other, the strains on energy and communications; the outdated production technologies and methods of management and operation; and the serious shortage of skilled workers, scientists and technicians. In a straightforward manner, the "report" told the people the truth without any reservation. This has enabled the people to face the difficulties squarely and try their best to overcome them. They are prepared for the hardships ahead, and preparedness averts peril. From this good work style of stressing practicability and avoiding sham enthusiasm, the people have come to better understand that the goal of "quadruplication" was set after making an overall analysis of all the possibilities and that it takes into consideration the favorable as well as unfavorable conditions. Thus they are ideologically prepared to cope with the difficulties ahead, to overcome them with high resolve and to struggle heroically for the realization of the grand goal.

The Measures Are Solid and Effective

The previous slogans and goals, such as "building a dozen or so daqing's" and producing 60 million dun of steel and 700 to 800 billion jin of grain for the nation by 1985, were themselves unrealistic, so there were no -- and there could not possibly have been -- appropriate measures taken to ensure the achievement of these goals. On the contrary, when the 12th CPC National Congress put forth the grand goal of "quadruplication," it simultaneously and explicitly laid down the three strategic points -- doing a good job in agriculture, energy and communications, and education and science to serve economic development. It also adopted the strategic plan of proceeding in two steps: in the first decade, aim mainly at laying a solid foundation, accumulating strength and creating the necessary conditions; and in the second, usher in a new period of vigorous economic development. In his report to the 12th CPC National Congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang also pointed out the necessity of correctly handling the relationships among the four important questions of principle -- the question of building key development projects and improving the people's living standards, the question of the leading position of the state economy and the development of diversified economy, the question of the leading role of the planned economy and the supplementary role of market regulation, and the question of self-reliance and the expansion of economic and technological exchanges with foreign countries. He reiterated that the principles and policies welcomed by workers, peasants and intellectuals will be upheld and perfected and presented many effective and realistic measures for strengthening party leadership and building spiritual civilization. It is no surprise that in their discussions, some cadres and masses said: The 12th congress has set a definite goal, charted a steady road of advance and adopted effective measures for achieving the goal. Act as it demanded and we will never be disappointed.

NEW PROGRAM FOR TAIWAN LISTENERS INAUGURATED

[Excerpts] Friends working in the military and government, how are you? I am (Liu Wei). I wish to extend my regards to you. Beginning today, my colleagues and I will bring you a program called the "Rambling Talk." We are quite willing to have sincere heart-to-heart talks and freely discuss some questions with you. Although we are separated from you by the Taiwan Strait, both are the Yellow Emperor's descendants whose hearts are always linked together. Our cordial talks and discussions through the radio should not be obstructed.

My colleagues and I believe that the most important thing presently before the compatriots on both sides of the strait is the question of reunifying the motherland. It was stated in the message to the compatariots in Taiwan from the NPC Standing Committee that the important task of reunifying our motherland, on which hinges the future of the whole nation, now lies before us all. It is an issue no one can evade or should even try to. If we do not quickly set about ending this disunity so that our motherland is reunified at an early date, how can we answer our ancestors and explain to our descendants? Reunification of the motherland is everyone's responsibility. I think that you, who work for the party, government and police organizations in Taiwan, must be aware of the situation and, of course, unwilling to lag behind in showing concern about the cause of reunifying the motherland and the future of our nation.

Friends, it has been almost 4 years since the NPC Standing Committee issued its message to the compatriots in Taiwan. The people's government has proposed a series of principles, policies and concrete measures for the peaceful reunification of the motherland and I think you are aware of them. As for the proposal of the Taiwan authorities to reunify China on the basis of the three principles of the people, you must be even more familiar with it. How should China be reunified? Whose plan and measures are more sincere and feasible and truly receive extensive support from our compatriots at home and abroad? What are the just demands of the people on the two sides of disunity concerning the realization of peaceful reunification? I hope to discuss these questions with you.

As you know, after the 1911 revolution, there were two influential political parties in China -- the Kuomintang and the Communist Party. Both played a significant role in modern Chinese history and will still do so in the great cause of reunifying the motherland. This is their historical mission. Is the Communist Party good or bad? What has it done to benefit the country and the people? What major policy decisions were made at the recent 12th CPC National Congress? Will these policy decisions last for a long time without change? What are the impressions gained by scholars at home and press circles abroad from this congress? I do not know if you are interested in these questions and if it is worthwhile to discuss them with you.

The CPC pays high respects to Dr Sun Yat-Sen. Some of his ideals have been realized. Others have been greatly surpassed and still others are being put into practice step by step on the mainland. This, I think, will be of interest to you. With regard to the construction work in various fields on the mainland, there are some reports in the Taiwan press. While we find that such articles are increasingly becoming objective, there are certainly quite a few strange ones, which people cannot believe. In sum, the Taiwan authorities try to mislead the people into believing that the mainland economy is about to collapse and that the mainland people cannot eke out a living. I think that you, working in military and government organizations, would not believe this kind of rumor. Since you may not be well aware of the real facts, my colleagues and I will honestly tell you the truth about these questions.

Your suggestions and comments on this "Rambling Talk" program will be appreciated. Please address your letters to P.O. Box 2105, Beijing. Thank you for listening to our program. Goodbye.

COMMENTARY ON TAIWAN'S POLICY OF SUPPRESSION

HK141328 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0919 GMT 14 Oct 82

["Commentary: The New Trend of Suppressing Island Compatriots by the Taiwan Authorities" -- ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE headline]

[Text] Beijing, 14 Oct ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE -- On the island of Taiwan, there is every indication that the Taiwan authorities are cultivating public opinion and seeking every excuse in a plot to further suppress our Taiwan compatriots. Thus the Taiwan compatriots must guard against this new trend of suppression on the island.

The newspaper CHUNG YANG JIH PAO has recently come up with such headlines as : "Raise Political Vigilance, Suppress Illegal Activities," "There Is Absolutely No Tolerating the Organization of a New Party at This Time in This Area," "Smash All United Front Plots of the Communist Bandits" and so forth. The newspaper has even clamored: "If Not Effectively Stopped, the Illegal Activities Conducted by a Small Number of Illegal Elements With Long-Harbored Schemes Will Inevitably Threaten To Spread" and "There Is Absolutely No Tolerating a Repetition of the 'Kaohsiung Incident' at This Time in This Area."

"The wind sweeping the tower gives a hint of mountain rains," as a Chinese saying goes. The Taiwan authorities are not just saber rattling or muscle flexing. They have started to act. The Taiwan garrison headquarters announced on 5 October that Taiwan businessman Du Shaoqi and Zhang Rongyi, an overseas Chinese from Thailand, had been arrested "on suspicion of engaging in an economic united front war on behalf of the bandits" and were "under investigation." This is ironclad proof!

Why should the Taiwan authorities be so full of fight at this time? First, the Chinese Communist proposal for the peaceful reunification of the motherland has left a deep imprint on the minds of the people on the island of Taiwan. More and more people have demanded peace talks, reunification and the realization of "three communications and four exchanges." Second, the dictatorial rule of the Taiwan authorities is becoming increasingly unpopular. People have strongly demanded the lifting of martial law, the removal of the bans on the formation of a party and on the press, and the release of political prisoners. They have called for "the gentlemen of the Central Committee to give special consideration" to the problem of the organization of a new party by non-Kuomintang persons. At present, the appeal for the peaceful reunification of the motherland and for democracy is having a powerful impact on the Taiwan authorities' defense line of "no contact, no talks and no compromise." This leaves the powerholders in Taiwan greatly disturbed. Therefore, they are trying by every means to suppress patriotic democrats in an attempt to resist the onrushing tide of history.

To suppress the Taiwan compatriots, the Taiwan authorities have now again come up with their customary inhibiting magic phrases: "bandits contacts" and "elements seeking the independence of Taiwan." There is no end to the charges that can be imposed! The imprisonmnet of Yu Dengfa and his son, the assassination of Chen Wencheng after his return to Taiwan, the arrest of those connected with Meilitao [5091 7787 1497], the innocent victims of the Kaohsiung incident -- which of these cases does not involve a victim to trumped-up charges? All these are still fresh in the memories of the Taiwan compatriots. A repetition of such incidents must not be allowed!

The Taiwan compatriots, with their glorious tradition of struggle, are not afraid of violence. No force can stop their just appeal. While the Taiwan authorities are stepping up their reactionary measures, the Taiwan compatriots still point out that "the reunification of China on the basis of the three people's principles" is only "a self-deceiving, hollow slogan." They also point out that "the problem of reunification is facing a crucial moment when there must be a breakthrough and when a breakthrough is also possible." "Peace talks between national reunification." The two sides of the strait "should deepen mutual understanding through trade." Just as an ancient Chinese saying goes, those rulers who follow the will of the people thrive while those who act against the will of the people perish. The Taiwan authorities resort to perverted measures, act against the will of the Taiwan compatriots and the people throughout China, purposely resist the Chinese Communists and refuse to have peace talks with them. They will end up lifting a rock only to drop it on their own feet. How can they not be on guard?

LIEN HO PAO WARNS REAGAN OF 'COMMUNIST TRAP'

[Editorial: "Who Has Misinterpreted President Reagan's 'Original Intentions'?"]

[Text] During a television news program a few days ago, many people in Taiwan witnessed an interesting scene showing an indignant U.S. President: On 6 October, while President Reagan was delivering a political speech to 65 Republic congressional candidates in the East Room of the White House, Republican Congressional candidate Arnold, from Monterey, California, suddenly stood up and censured the Reagan administration for betraying the conservative line, for increasing taxation by a big margin and for abandoning Taiwan. When Arnold interrupted his reply to the accusation, President Reagan, becoming furious, angrily told him to "shut up" and then said: "I want to tell all of you: Our policy toward Taiwan has not retrogressed. Our friends in Taiwan will continue to get all the weapons they need for self-defense.... We have told the Chinese Communists that the Taiwan Relations Act is a law of the United States and that we will enforce this law....If the Chinese Communists keep their promise of 'achieving reunification through peaceful means,' it is, of course, not necessary for us to continue to supply Taiwan with weapons. However, unless they keep their promise, or unless 'peaceful' reunification is really achieved, the United States will continue to keep its commitments to its friends and ally in Taiwan."

We understand very well why Arnold was so impatient in asking President Reagan about Taiwan. Since the issuance of the "joint communique" between the United States and the Chinese Communists in August this year, U.S. Government officials have reiterated U.S. commitments to Taiwan's security. Because of the ambiguity of the communique, the majority of Americans who support the ROC have been guessing in the dark, fearing that the U.S. Government may use it as a pretext to abandon the Taiwan Relations Act and end arms sales to our country. For example, at the emergency 17 August hearing of the U.S. House Foreign Affairs Committee in connection with the communique, many congressmen spoke out from a sense of justice, charging that the communique contradicts the Taiwan Relations Act. At another hearing by the Senate Judicial Subcommittee in connection with the same question, Senator East, chairman of the subcommittee, noted that the Chinese Communists' interpretation of the joint communique is that the United States promises to suspend arms sales to Taiwan. He said that if this interpretation were correct, it would mean that the U.S. administration had made a decision contrary to the law, which has not been amended. At the hearing, Senator Robinson pointed out that, as the joint communique is not an international agreement, it does not have the binding force on both sides as international law. In short, these facts and Arnold's questions fully reflect the concern and stand of the representatives of the American people and their constituents about the joint communique and arms sales to Taiwan.

We also understand very well why President Reagan was so furious with Arnold questions. Reagan himself views the joint communique as an "expediency" for strengthening U.S. relations with the Chinese Communists and not as an abandonment of the Taiwan Relations Act. It is natural for him to become very angry when public opinion, time and again, misinterprets his original intentions. How could he not be angry when Arnold openly challenged him?

We believe that any honest gentleman would react angrily when his original intentions were repeatedly misinterpreted. We also believe that the U.S. Government is really determined to enforce the Taiwan Relations Act. However, we have to point out that it is the Chinese Communist regime which has benefited most by intentionally misinterpreting President Reagan's original intentions. It is known to all that peace and force are the means constantly used alternately by communists to subdue their enemies.

To realize their scheme of ruling Taiwan, the Chinese Communists have resorted to many united front tactics, such as their call for "the exchange of mails, trade, air and shipping services" and for "academic, cultural and sports exchanges," "Yeh Chien-ying's nine-point statement" and "Liao Cheng-chih's letter." While calling on our side to hold negotiations with them, the Chinese Communists used a peace offensive to induce the United States to issue the "joint communique" which states that "U.S. arms sales to Taiwan will not exceed, either in qualitative or in quantitative terms, the level of those supplied in recent years since the establishment of diplomatic relations between the United States and China and that it intends gradually to reduce its sale of arms to Taiwan."

Having used the communique to bind the hands of the United States, the Chinese Communists have again begun a show of force against us: On 1 October, XINHUA announced that a missile will be launched sometime between 7 and 26 October into the sea somehwere east of Checaiang Province and about 300 kilometers north of Taiwan. According to foreign observers, the missile to be test-launched may be an intermediate-range guided missile and it would probably be launched from the Lop Nur area in the northeast region of the Chinese mainland. It has a range of 3,600 kilometers. This is an act with a hidden motive. China has vast territory and extensive territorial waters. Is there no other place to test the missile? But the Chinese Communists have selected an area 300 kilometers north of Taiwan as the target for its missile test. What is this, if not an armed threat? After the issuance of the "joint communique," U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Holdridge told the Congress that a U.S. reduction of arms sales to Taiwan is based on the continued implementation of a "peace policy" by the Chinese Communists. He noted that if they change their policy, the United States will reexamine its stand. Now the Chinese communists are indulging in sabre-rattling and a show of force. Shouldn't the United States reexamine its stand?

President Reagan became angry because his intentions wre misinterpreted. This shows that he is an honest gentleman. An old Chinese saying goes: "The honesty of a gentleman is often exploited." The Chinese Communists are trying to trap him with the "joint communique" by exploiting his honesty and then will use force to make Taiwan accept their "program for reunification." We hope that President Reagan will take note of public opinion and the trends in the United States, see through the Chinese Communists' schemes of murderous intent, show them the "presidential anger" and free himself from the fetters of the communique.

'SECRET RADIO' REPORTS OUSTER OF PRC'S GENG BIAO

[Text] The CHINA TIMES reports from Washington that Communist China's defense minister, Geng Biao, has been removed from his post and will be succeeded by Wei Guoqing, first commissar of the Red Army. This information was originally contained in a report emanating from a secret radio station operating on the China mainland picked up by a U.S. monitoring agency.

The secret radio station, identifying itself as Ba Yi -- or August 1, the Communist Chinese armed forces day -- said Geng lost his position because he was disliked by somebody, a thinly veiled reference to party strongman Deng Xiaoping. The monitored broadcast also said underhanded methods used to dismiss Geng could well lead to dissatisfaction among high-ranking cadres in the communist military.

Geng Biao had already lost his title as vice premier and was ousted from the Politburo at the party congress in September, retaining only a position in the Central Advisory Committee. Peking, however, has not announced Geng's removal from the defense post.

The broadcast said Wei Guoqing resigned from his job as top commissar in preparation for his promotion to the post of defense minister. This report contradicts speculation that Wei was fired because he authorized the publication of an article attacking Deng's policies on the eve of the party congress. Wei, who offered Deng protection after he was purged for the second time, is one of the old guard of the Red Army who still reveres Mao Zedong as the unblemished hero of the communist revolution.

CHINA POST EDITORIAL ASSESSES PRC-USSR TALKS

[Text] The forthcoming talks between Peiping and Moscow after an interruption of over two years constitute another blackmail move by the Peiping regime aimed at the United States.

There are no indications as to the agenda of the talks which were broken off over two years ago after the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. But Peiping insisted that the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, Vietnamese intrusion of Khamer [as published] and the Soviet stationing of more than a million troops along its border remain to be the main obstacles preventing Peiping to improve its relations with the Soviets.

The cool relations between Peiping and Moscow were gradually changed into cordial relations as a result of Peiping's failure to get complete satisfaction from the United States over the arms sales issue to the Republic of China. Peiping sent some trade delegations to Moscow and Moscow also reciprocated by sending delegations to Peiping. The latter also sent a large delegation to Peiping to take part in its October 1 anniversary observance.

But judging from the wide difference of views over many issues, a quick overall solution is not likely. However, it must be noted that as both regimes have shared common ideology and are striving in communizing the world, there is always the possibility for them to rejoin their forces to threaten and harm the Free World. It is imperative, therefore, for the free nations to beware of such a possibility and refrain from assisting any of them in economic, financial, and military fields which might be used against the Free World.

All the free people should realize the insidious and treacherous nature of the Communists whether they may be Chinese Communists or the Soviet Communists. A plague on both seems to be the best attitude to adopt toward them.

Chao denied a report that the government has decided to set up the projected free trade zone in Changhua in central Taiwan.

SHANGHAI PUBLICATION CITED ON HONG KONG ISSUE

HK110810 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 11 Oct 82 p 2

[Special dispatch: "Shanghai Publication Writes on Hong Kong Issue"]

[Text] Beijing, 11 Oct -- Today's issue of the Shanghai SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO, just received here, carries an article discussing the Hong Kong issue. It says that every word of the two phrases of the principle put forward by China -- that it will recover sovereignty over Hong Kong and preserve Hong Kong's prosperity and stability -- is right to the point and extremely clear. During Mrs Thatcher's recent visit to China, the Chinese and British leaders agreed to hold talks through diplomatic channels in the future, based on the aim of preserving Hong Kong's prosperity and stability. This move represents a good start and has defined the aim and method for making progress.

This special dispatch from Hong Kong, carried on the front page masthead, says that another trend has also emerged. Mrs Thatcher's words about the validity of the old treaties caused unease and investor turmoil and evoked protests from patriotic students and media circles in Hong Kong. This is quite natural, because Mrs Thatcher's words were untimely and did not help the search for a rational solution to the issue and also represented a deviation from the positive results achieved in the Sino-British talks.

The article says that the investor turmoil whipped up in Hong Kong before the Beijing talks and the renewed investor turmoil after the talks were certainly not simple market fluctuations. Who can whip up turmoil in the investment market? It is evident that Beijing's solemn and just stand concerning the recovery of sovereignty over Hong Kong certainly cannot be shaken by unequal treaties that have long ceased to exist, while its effort to preserve Hong Kong's prosperity and stability cannot be shifted, no matter how great investor turmoil may be.

The article says: As for Britain's repeated assertions that it "bears a moral responsibility" to the inhabitants of Hong Kong, this is even more of an overestimate of its abilities. The cries of protest from Hong Kong's patriotic students and media circles have provided incontrovertible proof of this, not to mention the ironclad fact that it is solely the PRC Government that has the right to say that it bears sovereign responsibility for the Chinese inhabitants of Hong Kong. It is also an ironclad fact that the Chinese inhabitants of Hong Kong lean toward the motherland.

The article praises the editorial of the Thai SING SIAM YIT PAO which advocates that China and Britain seek a way to take care of the interests of all parties in a manner that violates neither China's sovereignty, damages current British interests nor causes panic among Hong Kong's inhabitants and implement it together. China will certainly satisfy the desires of Hong Kong's inhabitants and their demands regarding the system and way of life.

CHENG MING ON 12th CPC CONGRESS ELECTION

[Article by Lo Ping [5012 0393]: "Inside Story About the 12th CPC Congress Election"]

[Text] One Era, Two Photographs

On the front stage, the 12th CPC Congress announced: "The creation of a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization" has begun.

Backstage, the 12th CPC Congress announced: The Deng Xiaoping era has formally begun.

The two photographs, which appeared in RENMIN RIBAO on 11 and 12 September, figuratively explained that Deng Xiaoping has officially become the nucleus of the CPC core.

The photograph published on 11 September was "The Picture of Two Stars and the Moon." Deng appeared in the center wearing a complacent smile; Hu was on the left and Zhao was on the right facing him with the expression of one asking for instructions and waiting for orders from a superior. Ye Jianying, Chen Yun and Li Xiannian were seated behind. Therefore, this photograph could also have been titled "The Picture of Five Stars and the Moon."

The photograph carried on 12 September was "The Picture of the Junior Person Being Instructed." Deng Xiaoping appeared to be stretching out his right hand and pointing directly at Hu Yaobang's chest. This is the classic pose of giving instruction and guidance. Hu Yaobang appeared to be standing respectfully and listening carefully. Similar "Pictures of the Junior Person Being Instructed" could also be seen in the party organs of the Mao Zedong era. But never has there been such a clear line of demarcation in the relationship between the junior person and the senior person.

Can these two photographs show that the power of the Communist Party of China is centralized in Deng Xiaoping? Is intraparty democracy an empty phrase?

Outwardly, if the 12th CPC Congress is not more democratic than the 11th, 10th, 9th and 8th party congresses, it is not less democratic. In essence, I am afraid it is about the same.

A False Alarm: The Present Is Not as Good as the Past

The election is an outstanding example. The election of the 12th CPC Congress is divided into the primary election and the formal election. The namelist of candidates produced in the primary election is based on the namelist proposed by the presidium of the congress as a result of consideration and discussion. Formal voting is based on the namelist of candidates. The namelist is printed on specially prepared computer cards. There is no margin in the namelist (210 names are printed on the namelist of candidates for the Central Committee and the number of committee members elected is also 210). From this we can see the limitations of democracy. However, during the election you can delete the names of people you do not approve and put in the names of other people outside the namelist. This more democratic method of election was adopted at the 7th CPC Congress but this "democratic tradition" was not carried forward from the 8th to the 11th CPC Congresses.

Judging from the method of election adopted by Deng and Hu, we can see that they have great confidence in their prestige and influence. In the Mao Zedong era after the founding of the People's Republic, is it possible that the reason why Mao Zedong did not adopt this method of election in 1945 was because of the worry that he could not control the congress?

During the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, Deng and Hu also had a false alarm. Because, during the election of the party chairman, they actually discovered some people had written in the name of Peng Zhen outside the namelist of candidates. Some people had also voted for Huang Kecheng. People familiar with the climate of Zhongnanhai know how things stand. Peng Zhen and the top people in Zhongnanhai at present are not on very intimate terms. Who actually could be behind Peng Zhen's nomination and could there be any hidden motive? This affords much room for thought.

Is "Peng Zhen's Three Threes" True or False?

A strange thing happened prior to the 12th CPC Congress. There was a rumor circulated in Beijing society about "Peng Zhen's three" things:

Peng Zhen has "three" villas in Beijing. One of them is the Changguanliu villa in the zoological garden. He later complained that the toads in the pond were too noisy and moved away.

Peng Zhen has also changed his lighting fixtures "three" times. He finally dismantled the beautiful lighting fixtures of the Xiangshan Hotel for installation in his own home before the matter was closed.

Peng Zhen has "three" luxury cars.

People in Hong Kong have interpreted "Peng Zhen's three threes" as "Peng Zhen is doing well," for "three threes" is a "very good omen." However, this rumor is extremely unfavorable for Peng Zhen. Is it possible some people deliberately spread the rumor to attack Peng Zhen during the 12th CPC Congress? Or is it an unconcealable fact? The writer has no means of verifying this at the moment.

After the 7th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, Deng and Hu were able to set their hearts at ease about the matter of "additional candidates" in the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. Their doubts had disappeared and they were not afraid of any unforeseen circumstances during the election. Why do we say this?

Deng Asked the Delegates To Vote for Hua Guofeng

The most amusing thing in the 12th CPC Congress was that Deng and Hu actually urged the delegates to vote for Hua Guofeng during the election of Central Committee members.

Perhaps some people are likely not to believe this information. However, this is the absolute truth. The writer interviewed three friends working in leading organs and they said that the unit leaders who recently transmitted the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress have all said this: "The responsible comrades of the Central Committee, during the preliminary informal discussion of the namelist, carried out a great deal of work on the delegates" to let Hua Guofeng remain in the Central Committee (but not the Political Bureau).

Before the opening of the 12th CPC Congress, some of the people in the CPC had asked Hua Guofeng to make a public examination of his leftist mistakes at the 12th CPC Congress. Deng Xiaoping said: This is not necessary. At the preparatory meeting of the 12th CPC Congress, Hua Guofeng actually made a speech. He refused to make a thorough self-criticism and also said: This formulation of "practice is the sole criterion of truth" is incorrect. The reason I did not express an attitude regarding this formulation in the past was because I did not agree with it. Communist society has still not been established in the world and this means it has still not been tested. However, Communism will certainly be realized; for it is the ultimate goal of struggle of the Marxists. When he said that, everybody was startled. The delegates immediately started talking and objecting. This theory of "practice is the sole criterion of truth" was not invented by Deng Xiaoping but was the weapon he used to oppose and defeat the faction of the "two whatevers." The fact that Hua Guofeng actually dared to take an opposing stand means he still maintains the whateverist viewpoint. This placed Hua Guofeng in a very unfavorable position in the election. Therefore, Deng Xiaoping and Hu Yaobang had to "carry out a great deal of work" in the Congress to get Hua Guofeng elected as a member of the Central Committee.

Wang Dongxing Also "Heavily Favored"

Even more amazing is the fact that Deng Xiaoping still tried to keep Wang Dongxing's position in the Central Committee. This point was also mentioned by the leading organs when transmitting the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress.

Why did Deng Xiaoping so heavily favor Hua Guofeng and Wang Dongxing, both leaders of the whateverist faction?

This is not a sign of "heavy favor," there are other reasons.

The reasons are:

1. Keeping two or three "political opponents" in the Central Committee serves as living proof of his acumen as a politician. He learned this trick from Mao Zedong. This secret has been discussed in Volume 5 of the "Selected Works of Mao Zedong."

2. Silencing Hua Guofeng's "supporters who are out of office," so that their feelings will not get out of control and they will not have an excuse for creating such rumors and lies as "Hua Guofeng has been elbowed aside by Deng Xiaoping."

3. Preserving stability and unity.

There is another reason for keeping Hua Guofeng in the Central Committee. Hua Guofeng has been suffering from a very serious cardiac ailment and is still in the hospital. Had he lost the election and suffered a stroke or even died as a result, Deng Xiaoping would probably have been attacked by Hua Guofeng's supporters.

In the preliminary informal discussion of the namelist proposed by the 12th CPC Congress Presidium, both the names of Hua Guofeng and Wang Dongxing were included. In the primary election, Hua Guofeng received more than half of the votes but Wang Dongxing received less than half. The congress stipulated that those who received more than half of the votes could become official candidates for the Central Committee while those who received less than half of the votes had lost the election. Accordingly, Hua qualified and his name was included in the namelist of candidates. Wang had failed to qualify and his name was put up in the preliminary informal discussion of the namelist for alternate members of the Central Committee. Under the condition of "a great deal of work being carried out by the responsible comrades of the Central Committee," Wang Dongxing barely managed to receive half of the votes in the primary and formal elections for alternate members of the Central Committee and his name appeared at the bottom of the list.

The alternate members of the Central Committee and Political Bureau and the alternate members of the Secretariat are listed in the order of the number of votes, whereas the Central Committee members, members of the Advisory Commission, the Commission for Discipline and Inspection, the Political Bureau and the Secretariat are listed in the order of the number of strokes in their surnames. Why is there this distinction?

The reason alternate members of the Central Committee and the Secretariat are listed in the order of the number of votes is because if a vacancy occurs in the Central Committee, the post is filled by the next candidate in line on the namelist.

A Secret in the Sequence of Listing

Why are the official namelists of Central Committee members and members of the Advisory Commission, the Commission for Discipline and Inspection and the Political Bureau not listed in the order of the number of votes but in the order of the number of strokes in the surnames? This is a "secret" they are not willing to make public. It is probably because they want to spare the feelings of certain important persons. For example, should a certain super bigshot receive fewer votes than an ordinary bigshot and his name not appear on the very top of the list or even in the upper section of the list, then would the prestige of this super bigshot be weakened? According to reports, some people in the CPC Central Committee proposed that all namelists should be listed in the order of the number of votes but the proposal was overruled for this reason.

When the namelists of the Central Advisory Commission and the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau were announced, one individual, surprisingly, was absent from both namelists. This caused astonishment both at home and abroad. Even now the foreign reporters in Beijing still cannot find the answer to this riddle.

People were only slightly surprised when the name of Hua Guofeng did not appear in the namelist of Political Bureau members. The newly elected Standing Committee of the Political Bureau has only six members. They are: Hu Yaobang, Ye Jianying, Deng Xiaoping, Zhao Ziyang, Li Xiannian and Chen Yun. This is the only namelist among the many namelists announced by the 1st Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee in which the basis for the sequence of listing has not been clearly given. What people find particularly strange is that the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau has an even and not an odd number. This "wonder" has never appeared before in Chinese Communist history. What will happen if a vote on a certain agenda item stands at three against three?

We De, Ji Dengkui, Chen Xilian and Chen Yonggui

Beijing has two versions regarding this strange phenomenon. One version claimed that in the election of members for the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau, Hua Guofeng lost the election because he failed to receive more than half of the votes. However, the super leaders also failed to agree on a suitable choice for the time being, so that gave rise to the "wonder" of "seven minus one."

Why did Hua Guofeng lose the election? Naturally, it was becase of the lack of popular support. But a more direct factor was because he failed to make an earnest self-criticism at the 12th CPC Congress.

The two leaders of the whateverists were disappointed at the 12th CPC Congress. What about the others? The name of Ji Dengkui has not appeared in any of the namelists. According to reports, Deng and Hu originally considered sending him to the lower level as vice governor of a province but later decided to keep him on. Wu De was a member of the Central Advisory Commission this time. There is "hearsay" about Wu De being Li Dazhao's son who was entrusted to the care of another during the early period of the revolution and that he is the brother of Li Bachua. This would explain why they have taken very good care of him for many years. Although he had made serious mistakes and incurred the greatest popular indignation when he was mayor of Beijing, for a relatively long time his position was still very secure. The present election of Wu De to the Advisory Commission is believed to be the best arrangement.

The two Chens have also been a focus of attention. Chen Xilian has also entered the Central Advisory Committee. Chen Yonggui's name does not appear in any of the namelists. Although there were reports that he had been "sent home" to Shanxi to work on the farm in Dazhai, according to recent reports the CPC Central Committee has finally decided to keep Chen Yonggui in Beijing. He is now living in his minister's apartment and being looked after.

Ye Jianying and His Elder Son

The failure of Ye Jianying to enter the Advisory Commission is a thing which greatly surprised people at home and abroad. Regarding this riddle, the writer is prepared, after thoroughly studying the situation, to reveal the answer to the riddle in the forthcoming issue of CHING MING. Here, the writer will only mention in passing that Ye Xuanping, a son of Ye Jianying, was elected an alternate member of the Central Committee at the 12th CPC Congress. This vice governor of Guangdong Province was reported to have an unsavory reputation in economic matters. Now, he has presumably profited from the "misfortune."

From the namelists of the three commissions, the Political Bureau, and Standing Committee of the Political Bureau, the general secretary, the members of the Secretariat and the chairman and vice chairmen of the Military Commission, we can see that people with close ties to Lin Biao and the "gang of four" have all been ousted. The forces of the whateverists have also been completely routed. Some old cadres who came into conflict with the Deng Xiaoping line have also been purged from important leading bodies and posts.

Deng Xiaoping's Objective Achieved

On the other hand, large numbers of outstanding middle-aged and young cadres who supported the Deng Xiaoping line have entered the Central Committee. In the leading bodies of the Political Bureau and Secretariat, the forces of the Deng and Hu organization have also been strengthened. The 12th CPC Congress may be described as an organizational reshuffle. The outcome of this reshuffle is a unified party under Deng Xiaoping. The objective pursued by Deng and Hu has been achieved.

Some people abroad have said that Deng Xiaoping suffered a total defeat at the 12th CPC Congress. This interpretation is contrary to the facts. All indications, from the reshuffle of personnel in leadeing CPC bodies to all concrete manifestations in propaganda, have proved: Deng Xiaoping has been successful. The Deng Xiaoping era has formally begun!

REAGAN SAYS U.S. TO SELL MORE GRAIN TO USSR

[Text] Washington, October 15 (XINHUA) -- President Ronald Reagan announced today that he has decided to offer a total of up to 23 million tons of grain to the Soviet Union this fiscal year from October 1, 1982 to September 30, 1983.

He announced the decision from the White House over a special hook-up with radio stations across the farm belt where a new record grain harvest is anticipated. He said two weeks from now U.S. representatives will meet with the Soviets in Vienna for talks concerning additional grain purchases.

This new offer is 15 million tons more than the Soviet Union is allowed to buy under a current agreement, and 11.2 million tons more than it bought in the crop year that ended on Sept. 3.

In addition, the U.S. decision provides further supply assurances for the amounts beyond the limit of 8 million tons. Reagan said he has authorized the secretary of agriculture to extend to the additional purchases the same assurances of "reliable delivery" that the 8 million tons are afforded under the existing U.S.-Soviet grain agreement. The five-year agreement was signed in 1975 and extended twice in 1981 and 1982, each time for one year.

In his radio speech, Reagan described as "mistaken" the U.S. grain embargo, imposed in January 1980 after the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. He lifted the partial grain embargo in April 1981.

Reagan told his audiences that "we can't guarantee the Soviets will make these purchases, but we know they're shopping and they still have large needs." In the past fiscal year the United States offered the Soviet Union 15 million tons, but the Soviet Union bought only 13.9 million tons.

As Reagan's announcement came at a time when the mid-term elections of senators and house representatives are approaching, analysts here believed that his decision is aimed at winning support from the grain-producing states, where the Republican dominance is facing strong challenges from the Democrats.

Moreover, experts said the decision shows that the Reagan administration is managing to ease the domestic economic recession by dumping overproduced goods outside the country.

Because the United States has banned European firms from selling gas pipeline equipment to the Soviet Union earlier this year while increasing grain sales to it, the experts said, Reagan's announcement is expected to arouse further criticism from the U.S. allies.

Present at the meeting were Lin Hujia and He Kang, minister and vice-minister of agriculture, animal husbandry and fishery; and Arthur W. Hummel, U.S. ambassador to China.

Lin Hujia gave a banquet for the guests this evening.

PENG CHONG MEETS U.S. EX-ATTORNEY GENERAL

OW152000 Beijing XINHUA in English 1518 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, October 15 (XINHUA) -- Peng Chong, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, met here this afternoon with Benjamin Civiletti, former attorney general of the United States.

Peng Chong briefed the guests on China's legal system. He said the system is being steadily developed and he hoped ties between the legal circles of the two countries would be strengthened.

Civiletti said China's success in building a legal system had left a deep impression. The legal system has many areas from which the United States might learn, he said.

The problem U.S. society faces is too many cases and trials, he said. His delegation is very interested in studying the experiences of mediation in China.

Present at the meeting was Zou Yu, vice-minister of justice.

HU YAOBANG DISCUSSES TALKS WITH ILICHEV

OW170454 Beijing XINHUA in English 0427 GMT 17 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, October 17 (XINHUA) -- "The Chinese side sincerely hopes that the obstacles to the normalization of the relations between China and Soviet Union will be removed so that the relations between the two countries will embark on the road of healthy development," said Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee here today in answering questions raised by French correspondents.

Hu Yaobang asked the correspondents if they knew that Soviet Vice-Foreign Minister L.F. Ilichev is now in Beijing to conduct discussions with Chinese Vice-Foreign Minister Qian Qichen. As the two sides had agreed not to disclose the contents of the discussions, "I will not violate the agreement," the general secretary said.

When asked whether the discussions will be continued, Hu Yaobang said "yes", and that the two sides had agreed through consultation that the discussions will be held in Beijing and Moscow in turns.

The meeting took place in a spacious hall in Zhongnanhai, site of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee. Dressed in deep grey clothes, Hu Yaobang, amidst glaring vacuum lights and the sound of cameras and TV cameras, answered questions raised by French correspondents sitting around him. The correspondents came to China accompanying the delegation of the French Communist Party Central Committee on its visit.

Asked about the Soviet Union's domestic and foreign policies, Hu Yaobang said: "We have pointed out time and again that the Soviet leaders have been pursuing a hegemonist policy for a considerably long period. We are against it. As for their domestic questions, we have ceased to express our views for many years, and that's what we ought to do."

A reporter from the French television station Number One asked, "The Chinese party condemned the French Communist Party for clinging to the Soviet Communist Party when the Chinese and French parties suspended relations in 1965. What's your view now?"

Hu Yaobang replied: "There is a famous saying in China, 'Don't get entangled in historical issues. Look ahead of you.' One should be magnanimous and disregard the minute details in dealing with historical issues. Our two parties have resumed relations with great satisfaction."

"We believe that the Chinese and French parties will act in accordance with the agreed principles of complete equality, independence, mutual respect and non-interference in each other's internal affairs and see to it that their friendly relations and cooperation will develop smoothly," he added.

When asked whether those parties that are maintaining close relations with the Soviet Communist Party can develop relations with China, Hu Yaobang said: "I think they can, because one of our principles is not to interfere with other parties' internal affairs. Any party, whether a worker's party, communist party or nationalist party, if it is willing to be friendly with us, we are willing to establish relations with them."

When asked whether China has different attitudes towards the Soviet and U.S. hegemonists, Hu Yaobang said: "We oppose any hegemonism in the world, because hegemonism is the main manifestation of sabotage to world peace. All shapes of hegemonism are bad."

The [word indistinct] giant socialist opponents resumed talks in Beijing early last week after a three year interruption.

"We sincerely wish to remove the barriers standing in the way of normalisation of relations between China and the Soviet Union," Hu told French journalists here.

"We've reached agreement on holding the talks alternatively in Beijing and Moscow," he added.

AFP: PRC REJECTS PROSPECT OF IMPROVED USSR TIES

[By Charles-Antoine de Nerciat]

[Text] Beijing, Oct. 16 (AFP) -- China still rejects the possibility of any real improvement in its relations with Moscow despite the resumption of Sino-Soviet talks 11 days ago, diplomats said here today.

The diplomats, quoting Chinese officials, said that Beijing had ruled out any significant rapprochement with its Communist rival because the Soviets had rejected China's bottom-line conditions for such a move.

Yet it was not clear if the Chinese were saying that the Soviets explicitly refused to meet the conditions during the talks that started October 5 or if they were generally referring to Moscow's positions, said the diplomats, who requested anonymity.

Before the discussions between Deputy Foreign Ministers Leonid Ilichev and Qian Qichen opened to end a nearly three-year break in the Sino-Soviet dialogue, Beijing cited three obstacles to an improvement in relations.

They were the massive presence of Soviet troops on their common border, Moscow's intervention in Afghanistan and its support for Vietnam's occupation of Cambodia -- all of which Beijing said threatened its security.

On the eve of the exploratory discussions, Chinese leaders stressed to visiting dignitaries that profound differences still existed between the two Communist goliaths which have been at odds for two decades. But the Chinese also suggested that a reduction of tensions was possible.

The ultra-secret Sino-Soviet talks have entered a new phase with a review of specific problems after a general outline of the two countries' respective positions, diplomats said.

There has been virtually no word on the substance of the discussions, officially termed "consultations" by the Chinese, which marked a resumption of the dialogue that Beijing broke off in January 1980 to protest Moscow's Afghan venture.

But the Soviet Union is apparently refusing to discuss Vietnam or Afghanistan, insisting that it will not include questions involving third countries in the talks with China, the diplomats said.

They said the Chinese officials noted that Beijing returned to the negotiating table only on the insistence of Moscow, which has stepped up its bid to improve ties with China in the last year.

Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev made two public appeals for an improvement in relations between the two countries, whose feud has occasionally flared into border clashes.

Yet although the Chinese officials stressed Moscow's role as the initiator of the new talks, Beijing's top leader Deng Xiaoping recently said that the Sino-Soviet dialogue was normal and necessary.

AFP: HU YAOBANG COMMENTS ON PRC-USSR TALKS

[Text] Beijing, Oct. 17 (AFP) -- Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the Chinese Communist Party, said today that ongoing Sino-Soviet talks will henceforth be held alternatively in the two nations' capitals.

Commenting on the coming to power of France's left wing, Hu Yaobang said "this is the result of choice by the French people. We are willing to develop our two countries' relations smoothly. There are broad prospects for cooperation between the two countries in the political, economic, scientific and technological and cultural fields. We are satisfied with the relations between our two countries since the establishment of diplomatic relations. We hope to see a better development of our relations."

On the Poland issue, Hu Yaobang said "our party has repeatedly stated that we hope Poland will solve their own problems through internal consultations and oppose any foreign interference."

FURTHER REPORTS ON XI ZHONGXUN'S VISIT TO DPRK

Gives Farewell Banquet

OW151945 Beijing XINHUA in English 1917 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] Pyongyang, October 15 (XINHUA) -- Xi Zhongxun, head of the Chinese National People's Congress (NPC) delegation,gave a farewell banque this evening at the Chinse Embassy in Pyongyang.

Speaking at the banquet, Xi Zhongxun said that "our current visit has brought still closer the relations between the Chinese National People's Congress and the Korean Supreme People's Assembly, and more important, it has enabled us to learn a great deal from you."

"The achievements and progress in Korea's post-war construction have left an exceptionally deep impression on our delegation," Xi Zhongxun said.

"The essential barriers today to the unification of Korea are the continued presence of U.S. troops in South Korea, the wanton interference by the U.S. in Korea's internal affairs, the fascist rule practised by the Chun Du Hwan clique and the divisive policy of creating two Koreas," Xi Zhongxun said. "No divisive plot can weaken the Korean people's firm resolve to unification, nor can it arrest the inexorable historical trend toward the unification of Korea. The unification of Korea is bound to materialize, and we are firmly convinced that it will be achieved."

The Chinese delegation leader went on to say that "in our journey ahead, the Chinese people will forever remain the close comrades-in-arms of the Korean people. We sincerely wish the Cinese-Korean friendship will last from generation to generation and remain everlasting."

Pak Song-chol, member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Korean Workers Party and vice-president of DPRK, said that "the days and nights that you have spent with us during your visit to Korea are significant days that have deepened the fraternal friendship between our two peoples and further strengthened the ties of friendship between Korea and China bound up by one fate."

"The fate of the Korean and Chinese people is linked together and it is the set policy of our people to carry forward from generation to generation, strengthen and develop the Korean-Chinese friendship."

The Korean leader continued to say that "whatever trials the Korean people may encounter in future, they will firmly defend the traditional friendship between Korea and China, sharing weal and woe and fighting side by side with the fraternal Chinese people."

Present at the banquet were Ho Chong-suk, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the Supreme People's Assembly and other leading members of the Korean Government.

KCNA Report

SK160437 Pyongyang KCNA in English 0410 GMT 16 Oct 82

[Text] Pyongyang, October 16 (KCNA) -- Comrade Xi Zhongxun, member of the Political Bureau and the Secretariat of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China and vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress of China, who is heading the delegation of the National People's Congress of China made a speech at the banquet he arranged on October 15 upon the conclusion of the visit of the delegation to our country.

He said: Korean comrades most perfectly organized our visit and sincerely looked after our life under the personal care of the great leader of the Korean people Comrade President Kim Il-song and the dear leader of the Korean people Comrade Secretary Kim Chong-il.

Despite much claims on his precious time with state affairs, Comrade President Kim Il-song, whom the Chinese people deeply revere, found time yesterday morning to meet and have a very warm and friendly conversation with us and cordially entertained us to a luncheon.

We were deeply moved by this.

All this showed that the peoples of China and Korea are as close as real brothers and one family members.

This again demonstrated the revolutionary friendship and militant unity sealed in blood between the two parties, two countries and two peoples of China and Korea.

We are greatly pleased with our visit this time.

With the parting just at hand, I, on behalf of the Chinese people and our delegation, extend most heartfelt thanks to the great leader of the Korean people Comrade President Kim Il-song, the dear leader of the Korean people Comrade Secretary Kim Chong-il and the Workers Party and Government of Korea, the Standing Committee of the Supreme People's Assembly of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the fraternal Korean people, our intimate comrades-in-arms.

Comrade Xi Zhongxun continued: Our visit made closer the relations between the National People's Congress of China and the Supreme People's Assembly of the DPRK. What is more important in this visit is that we have learned a lot of useful things from you. This will greatly help us in building socialist material civilisation and socialist spiritual civilisation in particular and carrying out the lines, policies and propositions of the 12th national congress of the party to open a new phase in socialist modernisation.

We have witnessed the radical changes brought about in Korea since the cease-fire and her new looks and the vigorous and dynamic spirit of constant advance in all parts.

We have also seen the stability of the situation in Korea and a firm faith and a high degree of political awareness of her people. The Korean people who voluntarily observe discipline and are civilised and courteous and in high spirits have made leaping progress in industrial and agricultural production and registered proud successes in the fields of science, education and culture and art.

We were deeply impressed by your great successes. This is a fruition of the wise guidance of the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song and the Central Committee of the Workers Party of Korea, I think.

Our delegation and the entire Chinese people are happy and proud of the fact that there are a great and outstanding leader, the hardcore of the revolutionary leadership and a courageous and industrious people in our close neighbour.

We sincerely hope with the sentiments of close comrades-in-arms that Korea, our brotherly neighbour, will further prosper and develop and the Korean people register brilliant successes in the struggle to carry out the decisions of the Sixth Congress of the Workers Party of Korea and capture a new higher peak of socialist construction.

Comrade Xi Zhongxun went on: The basic obstacle to the reunification of Korea today is the United States continued stationing of its troops in South Korea and wanton interference in the internal affairs of Korea and the Chon Tu-hwan clique's fascist terror rule and splittist policy aimed at creating "two Koreas." Such hegemonism of the United States and treacheries of the Chon Tu-hwan clique arouse bitter hatred on the part of the Korean people and run up against the resolute opposition of the world's peace-loving people.

The Korean people's struggle for the independent and peaceful reunification of the country is entirely just and the world's peace-loving people stand on their side. Neither the concrete wall nor any splittist maneouvres can break the firm will of the Korean people aspiring after reunification or bar the inevitable trend of history developing towards the reunification of Korea.

We are convinced that the reunification of Korea should and can certainly be realised.

The Communist Party and Government of China and the entire Chinese people fully support the proposal for founding the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo advanced by Comrade President Kim Il-song, resolutely demand the total withdrawal of the U.S. troops from South Korea and decisively oppose the "two Koreas" plot.

Under whatever circumstances in the future, the Chinese people will unshakably support the Korean people and remain their firm supporter till the complete reunification of Korea has been realised.

Comrade Xi Zhongxun declared: The China-Korea friendship will be brought into fuller bloom, greatly inspired and stimulated by the recent visit to China of Comrade President Kim Il-song which yielded satisfactory fruit. The Chinese people will always remain close comrades-in-arms of the Korean people in the future struggle. The militant friendship between the Chinese and Korean peoples initiated and nursed personally by Comrade Chairman Mao Zedong and Comrade Premier Zhou Enlai in their lifetime together with Comrade Presicent Kim Il-song is being further developed and strengthened today. The Chinese people greatly value the friendship and militant unity between the two peoples. Concluding my speech, I wholeheartedly hope that the China-Korea friendship will be handed down through generations and be everlasting.

Comrade Xi Zhongxun proposed a toast to the good health and longevity of Comrade President Kim Il-song, the great leader of the Korean people and an intimate friend of the Chinese people, and to the good health of Comrade Secretary Kim Chong-il, the dear leader of the Korean people.

ZHONGGUO QINGNIAN BAO VIEWS HONG KONG ISSUE

HK160530 Beijing ZHONGGUO QINGNIAN BAO in Chinese 9 Oct 82 p 3

[Report: "The Origin of the Hong Kong Issue -- Result of Unequal Treaties"]

[Text] The entire Hong Kong area has always been a part of Chinese territory since ancient times. During the Qing Dynasty, it was within the jurisdiction of Xinan County (today's Shenzhen Municipality), Guangdong Province. This area includes Hong Kong Island, Kowloon and the "New Territories," with a total area of 1,061.8 square kilometers and a population of 5.2 million, 98 percent of which are Chinese compatriots.

In the second half of the 18th century, foreign traders, especially British traders, gradually increased their opium trade with China year by year. They thus grabbed much money from China and poisoned the Chinese people. At the end of 1838, Lin Zexu, an imperial envoy of the Qing government who resolutely advocated banning the opium trade, was sent to Guangzhou. He ordered the British and other foreign merchants to surrender more than 20,000 chests of opium and burned them in Humen. After that, the British imperialists, who had long intended to open China's door by cannon, tried hard to seek an opportunity to provoke China. In June 1840, they dispatched an "eastward expeditionary army" to Guangzhou, attempting to surround this city. As Guangzhou had been fortified, the British bypassed it and attempted to attack Tianjin in the north in order to threaten Beijing's security. The corrupt Qing government was frightened and fell to its knees in surrender. It dismissed Lin Zexu and instructed the traitor Qi Shan to negotiate with the British troops. Beijing viceroy of Guangdong and Guanxi Provinces at that time, Qi Shan personally signed a "Draft convention of Chuanbi" with the British side, agreeing to cede Hong Kong Island and pay an indemnity. However, the invading British troops were not satisfied with this. They continued to invade China and reached the outskirts of Nanjing in July 1842. Sueing for peace, the Qing government was then forced to sign the first unequal treaty -- the Treaty of Nanjing -- on 29 August on the British man-of-war "Cornwallis." Thus, Hong Kong Island was formally ceded and five ports (Guangzhou, Fuzhou, Xiamen, Ningbo and Shanghai) were opened. This was known in the world as the First Opium War.

In November 1856, the British launched the Second Opium War on another excuse. With the French as its ally, the invading troops captured Guangzhou and then advanced northward to attack Beijing and Tianjin. The Qing government was once again forced to sign the convention of Beijing on 24 October 1860, under which the Qing government was forced to cede Chinese territory south of Boundary Street on Kowloon Peninsula.

Soon after the Qing government was defeated during the Sino-Japanese War, various imperalist powers did not hesitate in carving up Chinese territory. In April 1898, France demanded to "lease" the Guangzhou Gulf. On 9 June this year, Britain forced the Qing government to sign the "convention for the extension of Hong Kong" on the excuse that the lease of Guangzhou Gulf by France threatened Hong Kong's security. Under this convention, the Chinese territories north of Boundary Street on Kowloon Peninsula up to the southern part of the Shenzhe River, and the adjacent islets, that is, the so-called "New Territories," were "leased" to Britain for 99 years. In this way, Britain occupied the entire Hong Kong area through three unequal treaties. During the Pacific war, Hong Kong was once occupied by Japan. After the Japanese surrendered in August 1945, Britain took over Hong Kong again.

The Hong Kong problem is one left over by history. Recently, Mrs Thatcher came to Beijing and discussed this problem with Chinese leaders. Both sides respectively set forth their positions on this issue. With a common hope to maintain the prosperity and stability of Hong Kong, both sides agreed to hold further discussions through diplomatic channels.

In her remarks in Hong Kong on 27 September, British Prime Minister Mrs Thatcher stated that the three treaties involving the Hong Kong area were not "invalid" and must be "kept." We must point out that these treaties were products of British imperialism's "gunboat diplomacy" and invasion of China in the 19th century. They were unequal treaties which were forced upon the Chinese people. Therefore, they are absolutely unacceptable to the Chinese people. It is a sacred duty of the Chinese Government and people to recover China's sovereignty over Hong Kong.

TEXT OF PRC PROTEST OF SRV PROVOCATIONS

[Text] Beijing, October 13 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Foreign Ministry today sent a note to the Vietnamese Embassy in China strongly protesting against the armed provocations by the Vietnamese side and its instrusions into China's border areas during the period of National Day celebrations of the two countries.

The text of the note reads: The Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of China, with reference to the armed provocations made by the Vietnamese side during the period of National Day celebrations of the two countries, wishes to state as follows:

On 14 August, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam sent a note to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of China, proposing that both sides stop all hostilities in the areas along the Sino-Vietnamese border during the period of National Day celebrations of the two countries (27 August 1982 -- 7 October 1982). On 25 August, the Vietnamese side declared unctuously that it would "effect unilateral cease-fire" during the said period. The fact, however, is that the Vietnamese authorities continued to carry out armed provocations against China's border areas and send military aircraft to violate China's territorial air during the forty-two days from 27 August to 7 October. According to available statistics, the Vietnamese authorities carried out 109 incidents of armed provocations along the Sino-Vietnamese border during this period. Out of these, 102 incidents involved Vietnamese armed personnel firing into Chinese territory, three involved shelling into Chinese territory, two involved sending military aircraft to intrude into China's territorial air and two involved Vietnamese armed personnel intruding into Chinese territory for assaults and sabotage. The Vietnamese troops killed three Chinese border inhabitants and frontier guards and wounded eleven persons during these incidents.

The above facts suffice to show that the Vietnamese so-called proposal of "stopping hostilities" during the period of National Day celebrations of the two countries and Vietnam's announcement of "unilateral cease-fire, are sheer hypocrisy designed for the sole purpose of deceiving public opinion both in and outside Vietnam so as to cover up Vietnamese deliberate acts of constantly creating tensions in the areas along the Sino-Vietnamese border.

The Chinese Government hereby once again lodges a strong protest with the Vietnamese authorities against their repeated armed provocations against and intrusions into China's border areas and demands that the Vietnamese side stop such armed provocations and intrusions and abandon its anti-China policy.

DK FORCES SAID TO WIN VICTORIES IN RAINY SEASON

[Text] Beijing, October 18 (XINHUA) -- Democratic Kampuchean forces put out of action 13,000 Vietnamese aggressors in the rainy season from May to September, radio Democratic Kampuchea reported today.

Quoting a communique of the general command of the Democratic Kampuchean National Army and guerrillas, the radio reported the victories won during the season. The Democratic Kampuchean forces overran and destroyed 262 Vietnamese strongholds. They recovered and liberated nine communes and 122 hamlets. A total of 907 puppet troops surrendered.

During the same period, the National Army and guerrillas cut off or destroyed enemy-occupied highroads in 430 places and railroads in 278 places, exploded or damaged 70 bridges and culverts, destroyed 123 Vietnamese military trucks, three trains and damaged or sank 14 boats.

The communique said that the Vietnamese aggressors were beset with military, political and logistics difficulties. Their morale was so low that 20 to 25 per cent of their new recruits from Vietnam defected.

The communique said that the military quality of the Democratic Kampuchean forces improved further in the rainy season. They became more flexible fighting guerrilla warfare in groups and squads and even penetrated deep into areas under Vietnamese occupation. It urged persistent efforts to close their ranks with the people of various nationalities to fight the Vietnamese aggressors and drive them all out of Kampuchea.

DK RADIO HAILS UN ACCEPTANCE OF CCDK CREDENTIALS

[Text] Beijing, October 9 (XINHUA) -- The acceptance by the U.N. Credentials Committee of the credentials of the representative of Democratic Kampuchea marked a fresh defeat for Vietnam and the Soviet Union in their attempt to deprive Democratic Kampuchea of its U.N. seat, says radio Democratic Kampuchea today.

The Soviet representative challenged the credentials of Democratic Kampuchea during the committee meeting, but this attempt was thwarted by most of the representatives, the radio says.

The radio expresses conviction that the current session of the U.N. General Assembly will see more countries supporting Democratic Kampuchea's legitimate seat in the United Nations, as more and more countries have come to recognize it as a necessity in safeguarding the U.N. Charter and the norms of international law as well as the world order.

The support for Democratic Kampuchea's U.N. seat has greatly encouraged the people and the Government of Democratic Kampuchea in their struggle against the Vietnamese aggression and for national salvation, the radio stresses.

The radio expresses the hope that more countries would come forward at the 37th session of the U.N. General Assembly to force Vietnam to implement the U.N. resolutions and withdraw all its troops from Kampuchea.

[Text] Beijing, October 17 (XINHUA) -- General Mohammad Ziaul Haq, president of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, and Begum Haq arrived here by special plane this afternoon on a state visit to China at the invitation of the Chinese Government.

Pakistan is a friendly neighbor of China. President Haq has visited China twice before.

At 1630, the Chinese Government held a grand ceremony at a plaza east of the Great Hall of the People, giving a red-carpet welcome to President Haq on his third visit to China.

The national flags of China and Pakistan flew over the plaza and colorful bunting decorated the Changan Avenue in the Chinese capital today.

Premier Zhao Ziyang presided over the ceremony. When President and Begum Haq drove to the plaza, Zhao Ziyang stepped forward to greet them with warm handshakes. Young pioneers presented President and Begum Haq with bouquets.

The ceremony began with the military band playing the national anthems of Pakistan and China. Accompanied by Zhao Ziyang, President Haq reviewed a guard of honor made up of men from the three services of the Chinese People's Liberation Army.

Then, the president walked over to meet the welcomers. More than 200 brightly-dressed children waved flowers and colorful steamers and shouted "Welcome, Welcome, A Warm Welcome".

President Haq smiled and waved in achnowledgement.

Attending the welcoming ceremony were Huang Hua, state councilior and minister of foreign affairs, and his wife; Wu Xueqian, vice-minister of foreign affairs; Fu Hao, adviser to the ministry; He Zhengwen, deputy chief of the General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army; Zheng Tuobin, vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade; Lu Zhixian, vice-minister of culture; and Wang Chuanbin, Chinese ambassador to Pakistan, and his wife.

Also present were members of the president's entourage: Khawaja Mohammad Safdar, chairman of the Federal Council; Sahabzada Yaqub Ali Khan, minister for foreign affairs; Ghulan Ishaq Khan, finance minister, and his wife; Mahmud A. Haroon, interior minister, and his wife; Begum Viqarun Nisa Noon, adviser to the president on tourism; Lieutenant General K.M. Arif, chief of staff to the president, and his wife; and Maqbool Ahmad Bhatty, Pakistan ambassador to China, and his wife.

After the ceremony, Premier Zhao Ziyang, President and Begum Haq, and other distinguished Pakistan guests filed into the Hebei hall in the Great Hall of the People. The hosts and guests had a cordial conversation.

Feted by Zhao Ziyang

OW171717 Beijing XINHUA in English 1635 GMT 17 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, October 17 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziuang said here this evening "it is the set policy of the Chinese Government to strengthen our unity and cooperation with other Third World countries and develop and consolidate Sino-Pakistani friendship."

Zhao Ziyang made this remark at a banquet he gave in honor of General Mohammad Ziaul Haq, president of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, and Begum Haq.

Zhao Ziyang said the Chinese Government and people will, as always, resolutely support the Government and people of Pakistan in their just struggle to resist threats and interference from outside and defend national independence and state sovereignity.

Zhao Ziyang expressed satisfaction with the continuous development and consolidation of friendly relations between the two countries.

He said: "This is because our two countries, friendly to each other, have consistently abided by the five principles of peaceful coexistence, and we respect and trust each other. We are not overstating when we say that the friendly relations and cooperation between China and Pakistan have stood the test of time."

Zhao Ziyang said: "Both belonging to the Third World, China and Pakistan are faced with the common tasks of safeguarding independence and sovereignity and developing the national economy of their respective countries."

"We are willing to work together with our Pakistani friends to make up each other's deficiencies, help supply each other's needs and, on the basis of equality and mutual benefit, further develop the friendly relations and cooperation between our two countries. In the political, economic, cultural, scientific-technological and other fields."

He said: "The development of Sino-Pakistani friendly relations is conducive not only to the prosperity of our two countries, but also to the maintenance of peace and stability in Asia and the world at large.

Referring to the international situation, Zhao Ziyang said: "Since my visit to your country a year ago, the international situation has become even more turbulent and unstable, and the Afghan question remains unsolved.

"The Afghan question stems from a superpower's military invasion of Afghanistan. Therefore, a genuine settlement of this question can be reached only when that superpower withdraws all its troops from that country.

"On the Afghan question, the Government and people of Pakistan, upholding justice and adhering to principles, have worked tirelessly for a just solution and provided generous humanitarian aid to the three million-odd Afghan refugees now in Pakistan. This just stand held by Pakistan has won widespread commendation and support from the people the world over as well as the deep admiration of the Chinese people."

Zhao Ziyang praised Pakistan for pursuing a foreign policy of independence and non-alignment.

He said: "Pakistan endeavors to strengthen its unity and cooperation with other Third World and Islamic countries, works hard to improve and develop its relations with other countries in south Asia and supports the people of various countries in their just struggles, thus making important contributions to the maintenance of stability in the region and peace in the world. The Pakistani Government and people have also achieved marked successes in defending national independence and state sovereignty and developing the national economy."

President Ziaul Haq praised Sino-Pakistani friendship, saying it "has stood all tests and become the envy of many countries despite the vicissitudes of the international situation. Such friendship is not only in the interests of the both countries but also is conducive to regional and world peace."

He said that Sino-Pakistani friendship is not aimed against any country, but is established on the principle of peaceful coexistance. Such friendship will help enhance the struggle of the Third World for a new international order.

The president said he agrees with Zhao Ziyang's views on the world situation. Both Pakistan and China wish to promote world peace and international cooperation and believe such peace and cooperation should be based on equality, sovereignty, noninterference in other countries' internal affairs, independence, regional security and mutual benefit.

"We have strictly abided by the principles of the U.N. Charter. Both our countries hope to establish such a system in the world -- countries, big or small, strong or weak, can live a peaceful and tranquil life according to their own ways of life."

Haq strongly condemned Israel's invasion of Lebanon. He stressed a fair and comprehensive solution to the Middle East problem, saying Israel must withdraw from all the occupied territories including Jerusalem and let the Palestinian people exercise their rights and establish their own state on their homeland. Only by so doing, can peace and stability be restored in the Middle East.

"In this regard, we support the 8-point plan adopted by the Fes summit of the Arab countries," he said.

Haq said the solution of the Afghan problem lies in creating conditions in Afghanistan so that Afghan refugees in Pakistan and other countries can return to their homeland decently and safely. This can be realized only when all foreign troops are pulled out of Afghanistan.

In Kampushea, as in Afghanistan, internationally acknowledged principles are trampled on, and regional stability and peace have been undermined, he added. Kampuchea, a nonaligned country, suffers under military intervention.

"We demand all foreign troops pull out of Kampuchea. We hope the freedom and sovereignty of Kampuchea and Afghanistan will be restored as soon as possible and their peoples be provided with the opportunity to decide their own destiny without outside pressure," he said.

He called on Iran and Iraq to end their war at once and settle their dispute peacefully. Haq said Pakistan wishes to establish unstrained relations with India.

"To strengthen mutual trust, Pakistan has suggested a nonaggression agreement. We'll do our best to conclude such an agreement so that the relations between Pakistan and India can be improved, and regional peace and stability strengthened," he said.

He voiced Pakistan's support to the proposal for regional cooperation in South Asia.

Haq expressed his belief that through his talks with Chinese leaders mutual trust and cooperation between the two countries will be further strengthened.

Present at the banquet were members of the president's entourage and Pakistani Ambassador to China Maqbool Ahmad Bhatty and Mrs. Bhatty.

Also present were Ngapoi Ngawang Jigme, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress; Chen Muhua, state councillor and minister of foreign economic relations and trade; Yang Dezhi, chief of the General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army; Zhou Jiannan, minister of machine-building industry; Mu Qing, director general of the XINHUA NEWS AGENCY; Wu Xueqian, vice-minister of foreign affairs; leading members of other government departments, the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries and Beijing Municipality, and Chinese Ambassador to Pakistan Wang Chuanbin and his wife.

["Speech by Hu Yaobang at Beijing Banquet for PCF Central Committee Delegation"]

[Text] Beijing, 14 Oct (XINHUA) -- The following is the text of Comrade Hu Yaobang's speech at the banquet for the French Communist Party [PCF] Central Committee delegation:

Respected Comrade General Secretary Georges Marchais, respected comrades of the PCF Central Committee delegation, comrades, friends:

We are extremely happy this evening to get together with the PCF Central Committee delegation led by Secretary General Georges Marchais. Comrade Marchais is the first PCF secretary general to visit China; this makes us especially happy. Now, on behalf of the CPC Central Committee, the entire membership of the party, and the Chinese people, I would like to extend our warm welcome to the PCF delegation.

The French people are a great people cherishing freedom and progress. The French proletariat founded the Paris commune, which was considered by Marx to be the dawn of a great social revolution for the emancipation of mankind, leaving behind an indelible, glorious monument in the history of the communist movement. The French Communists, who carried forward the cause of the Paris commune, wrote a heroic chapter in the history of the anti-fascist resistance movement. Today, the PCF is working unremittingly to win and safeguard the rights of the laboring people, explore a road to socialism with French characteristics, oppose the threat of war, safeguard world peace and fight for the progress of mankind. The PCF is a party with a glorious revolutionary tradition, and enjoys extensive popular support. When we recall the heroic struggles waged by the French working class and communists, our hearts are invariably filled with revolutioanry sentiments and profound admiration.

As early as in the 1920's, our two parties and two peoples already established friendly ties and supported each other in our struggles. Zhou Enlai and many other Chinese proletarian revolutionaries of the older generation went to France in their youth to study, seek revolutionary truth and carry out revolutionary activities. In the 1940's, the two parties and two peoples supported each other during the struggles against the fascist occupying forces to win independence and freedom for their motherlands. Since the founding of the PRC, Jacques Duclos, Waldeck Rochet and other PCF leaders have also successively visited China.

The shadow that was once cast upon the relations between our two parties is now gone. Now, motivated by the spirit of looking forward, our two parties have again joined hands. This is in keeping with the strong desires and fundamental interests of our two parties and two peoples.

We are all wholeheartedly satisfied and happy with this new and important development in the relations between the Chinese and French parties.

This afternoon, the PCF Central Committee delegation led by Secretary General Georges Marchais began talks with us on some issues of common interest. We are convinced that the full exchange of views and comradely discussions will certainly enhance our mutual understanding and friendship, and give a powerful push to the smooth growth of relations between our two parties on the basis of the principles of independence, complete quality, mutual respect and noninterference in each other's internal affairs.

Dear Comrades, China is a developing socialist country. Although New China has scored great achievements in various fields since its founding, its economic and cultural levels are still very low. Now that you have come from afar to visit our country, we hope you will see with your own eyes the actual situation of the struggle of our party and people in building the motherland and striving for the realization of the great goal put forward by our party's 12th national congress, and have a look at the new appearance of our country.

In conclusion, I would like to take this opportunity to extend our cordial wishes to the great French people, the French working class and all French Communists. I wish them constant new successes in their struggle for a bright future!

I now propose a toast to the complete success of the visit of the PCF Central Committee delegation headed by Secretary General Georges Marchais, to the health of Secretary General Georges Marchais and Madame Marchais, to the health of all comrades of the PCF Central Committee delegation, to the health of all comrades and friends present, and to the friendship between our two parties and two peoples!

["Speech by Georges Marchais at Beijing Banquet in Honor of PCF Central Committee Delegation"]

[Text] The following is the text of Comrade Georges Marchais' speech at the banquet in honor of the French Communist Party [PCF] Central Committee delegation:

Dear Comrade Hu Yaobang, Dear Comrades:

First of all, please allow me, on behalf of the PCF Central Committee delegation, to thank most cordially once again the leaders of the CPC and all Communists throughout the PRC for inviting us here.

All the comrades of our delegation and I are especially grateful for the reception of accorded to us.

When arriving in Beijing this morning, I emphasized the view that our current visit to your country is of very great significance.

First of all, it is because, as I have pointed out before, this is the first visit by a PCF general secretary to China.

But, in particular, it is because this visit, as well as the talks which have been begun and will be carried on between us, will enable us to keep in direct touch with the reality of your country, the socialist society which your people are building and the achievements you have scored. In this connection, we naturally devote tremendous attention to your 12th national congress and the important decisions you adopted at the congress.

This morning, I also mentioned that, apart from the significant differences which distinguish the French people from the Chinese people, both peoples have long revolutionary traditions.

Since the announcement of this visit, we have felt, we have the satisfaction and wishes of the laboring people of our country. If one recalls that the French Communists and the French people warmly hailed the victory of the Chinese revolution with respect and admiration in 1949, one will find that such satisfaction and wishes are entirely understandable.

This great victory won by the Chinese people under the leadership of the CPC liberated China from the oppression of the semifeudal semicolonial system. It was an outstanding contribution to the struggle waged by the people's groaning under imperialism and colonialism. Since that victory, the Chinese people have scored important achievements by following a unique road to socialism.

To be sure, just as you, yourselves, pointed out at the 12th congress, the history of your country in building such a new society was not free from mistakes and tragedies which brought you serious aftermaths. Nevertheless, China still achieved great successes in building socialism and in the struggle to oppose abject poverty, starvation, chronic diseases, and oppression and humiliation which men and women were suffering from; whereas many developing countries are still groaning under these disasters. In short, no one can deny that the livelihood of the Chinese people, who make up one-quarter of humanity, has improved markedly.

Therefore, although China is still a developing country, it has effectively overcome the fiercest disasters facing humanity by following the socialist road. And now, the Chinese people can look forward to bright prospects with full confidence.

The construction you are undertaking is a pioneering human effort, which is indeed complex and stupendous as well as soul stirring. It has no precedent in China or elsewhere. More and more people have embarked or are embarking on this road. They should invent, innovate and open a new road by themselves. There is no, nor can there be, a readymade "model" of socialism for various peoples to copy indiscriminately. Therefore, for all liberation forces which are active in the world and for our own struggle, the more and more obvious diversification of experiences in socialist construction is a precious treasure fraught with hope.

We French Communists are fighting to build a unique society in France. French society is now undergoing a profound crisis which simultaneously affects its economic, social, political and cultural life as well as behavior and moral values. This crisis is rocking the structure of the capitalist system to its foundation. Only by changing the old structure and building a new society can this crisis be resolved.

It is in this sense that we assert that socialism has been put on the agenda of France.

It is also in this sense that we state that this socialist society will be typically French in its entirety. Such a society, which is to be built in response to the specific demands of French society should only be devised in light of the reality of our country and according to the will and interests of our people.

In order to build this society, we have also laid down a brand new road which is consistent with the reality of our nation. This French road is a road to respect at every moment the will of the majority, which is to be shown by universal suffrage based on definite goals and choices. This is a road of coalition and struggle for the people's movement. Aiming at preventing bourgeois violence by transforming step by step the relationship between society and political forces, this people's movement is pushing ahead step by step along the road of building a new society.

Of course, we are completely true to our unique strategy and to the independence and the total freedom in action of our party. Recently, I repeated that we cherish all these things as we cherish our own eyes.

However, this does not mean that we are not concerned with those countries which are building their socialism. On the contrary, we realize that these countries have made irreplaceable contributions to the progress of mankind.

Their experiences, including both achievements and mistakes, should not be neglected. We should make a clearheaded appraisal of these experiences, rather than treating them with a bystanders' attitude. It is just as we have stressed in our party congress: We express support for those ruling communist parties and peoples of various countries who are carrying out their socialist construction.

This shows that we have great interest in this visit. We firmly believe that our understanding of the unique socialist practice pursued by the Chinese people will be helpful in enriching our thinking.

Our visit is also carried out on the basis of friendship between our two countries.

Indeed, relations between France and the PRC are a matter of primary importance. There exist practical possibilities for developing our links in various aspects, including economics, politics, culture and so forth on the basis of the common interests of our two countries and respect for one another's salient features. We are now marching in this direction and are determined to achieve marked and significant results in this respect.

Dear comrades: Our standpoints are not always identical with regard to every problem and a divergence of views exists between us on certain issues. This is no secret. We have started and will continue our talks in these few days to present our stands and exchange our views on all important problems in a friendly and candid atmosphere. We do not doubt that we will achieve success in these talks and that mutual understanding and cooperation between our two parties will be promoted.

My above-mentioned belief is based in our common viewpoint: Relations between communist parties are established on the basis of equality, mutual respect, independence, recognition of differences and refraining from hampering friendly relations.

It is beyond doubt that this is a guarantee for our effective cooperation and common action aimed at attaining the great objectives of peace, disarmament, justice, social progress, unity, democracy and socialism.

Now, I propose a toast: To the health of my dear Comrade Hu Yaobang and all leading comrades of the CPC; to the success of our talks which conform with the interests of our two parties, two countries and two peoples; and to the highly effective development of the friendship between our two parties!

Visit Mao's Tomb

[Text] Beijing, October 16 (XINHUA) -- General Secretary Georges Marchais and the French Communist Party Central Committee delegation he is leading today went to the Chairman Mao Memorial Hall and paid respects to him.

Marchais, his wife and other members of the delegation, accompanied by Qian Liren, deputy head of the International Liaison Department of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, observed a silence in front of Chairman Mao Zedong's statute and again before his remains.

Interviewed by a group of French journalists on the square south of the memorial hall, Marchais said the delegation attached importance to this event.

He gave two reasons: One, Chairman Mao Zedong made great contributions to the revolutionary cause and was a great revolutionary in China and the world as a whole; two, the Chinese Communist Party has reached a correct evaluation of Chairman Mao's activities.

Discussing the talks between the Chinese and French Communist Parties, Marchais said he was highly satisfied because the two sides conducted a real dialogue with a forward-looking attitude.

Asked about his first impressions of China, Marchais said China has made remarkable progress politically and economically since the decade of turmoil was ended in 1976, and especially since the Third Plenary Session of the 11th Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party was held in December 1978.

The people's livelihood has improved considerably and the situation is stable, he said. The Chinese people, particularly the younger generation, are making an all-out effort to reach a new stage of development, he added.

Hu, Marchais End Talks

[Text] Beijing, October 17 (XINHUA) -- The talks between Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, and Georges Marchais, general secretary of the French Communist Party ended here this afternoon.

The two sides agreed to restore the relations between the two parties, suspended since 1965, on the principles of complete equality, independence, mutual respect and non-interference in each other's internal affairs, and to develop the friendly relations of cooperation between the two parties.

It was learned that during the three rounds of talks, which were permeated with a sincere, candid, friendly and comradely atmosphere, each side explained its theoretical basis for socialist revolution and construction and its line, principles and policies on domestic and international issues. The two sides exchanged views on the international situation. Each side expounded its stand on the situation in general and on some major issues. Neither side concealed its points of view or tried to impose its views on the other.

The talks show that the Chinese and the French Communist Parties share identical views on many issues though differences still exist on some issues due to different circumstances. However, the two sides held that these differences would not affect the comradely and friendly cooperation between the two parties.

At the conclusion of the talks, the two sides agreed to work out a concrete plan for the cooperation. General Secretary Marchais invited a Chinese Communist Party Central Committee delegation to visit France. Hu Yaobang accepted the invitation on behalf of the C.P.C. Central Committee. The date for the visit will be decided on through consultations between the two sides.

Launch Described

["China's Carrier Rocket Launching Test Described" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, October 16 (XINHUA) -- Following are highlights of China's successful submarine-based carrier rocket launching test:

It was a day when golden sunlight played on the surface of the sea. A submarine put out to sea under the escort of warships and observation vessels. It dived under water.

When the moment for launching was nearing, the launching cabin was all quiet. The young operators were closely watching the blinking of red and green signals, looking calm and steady though their foreheads were perspiring.

With [as received] the lights indicated all conditions were ready for launching, there began the countdown "... twenty... ten... five... four... three...." Then, at the order the commander, the operator pressed the button. Immediately a rumbling was heard, followed by a slight tremor, and the rocket broke through the sea surface with the force of a thunderbolt.

Observers on board the vessels a thousand meters away rushed onto the deck to cheer the rocket breaking out of the water.

A XINHUA reporter at the control center saw on the T.V. screen the image of the rocket monitored by precision optical instruments. As the rocket flew farther and farther, it became a light spot on the screen, trailing a column of smoke.

The computer system in the control room processed thousands of data from all sides into information to guide the measuring and surveying equipment and instruments to keep a close track of the target. When the rocket was in flight just for a few minutes, the automatic recording pen already marked the final landing spot it had calculated on the map. This information was immediately sent to the surveyor vessels waiting in the area where the rocket was to land.

The command post was situated on a seaside hilltop. And the entire operation was directed by a commander and his deputy sitting at a control console.

The rocket was flying fast towards the designated sea area. The escort vessels were patrolling around, and observation helicopters took off from the carrier.

The moment the rocket came down with a splash, the measuring personnel used a variety of means to make accurate measurements while the helicopters took pictures of the actual site.

"The rocket has splashed down in the designated sea area," reported the commander of the surveyer fleet.

[Report by XINHUA correspondent on the launching of a submarine-based carrier rocket from under water; "Breaking Through the Blue Waves, Soaring Into the Azure Skies"]

[Text] Beijing, 16 Oct (XINHUA) -- The October sun shone upon the surface of the sea, lighting the crystal clear waves. It was time for our country to carry out a submarine-based carrier rocket launching test.

A submarine loaded with the carrier rocket put out to sea under the escort of teams of surface ships and observations vessels. It dove under water.

When the final moment for the launch was approaching, the launching cabin seemed especially quiet. Before the work stations of the launching system, lined with red and green signal lights, the young operators, their bright eyes wide open, were closely watching the signal lights blinking one by one. Behind their gaze and the slight perspiration on their foreheads, the reporter could see that they were so excited and yet so calm.

"Separate the test plug!" "Open the safety pin!" the last two signal lights on the launching control console came on, indicating that all conditions were ready for the launch, and the commander promptly began the countdown; "...twenty...ten...five...four...three...." each number was like a sledgehammer striking at people's heartsrings. The launch operator was seen putting his right thumb on the button, his body motionless in his seat before the launch control console. "Fire!" the commander ordered. Holding his breath, the operator pressed the button. Immediately a rumbling was heard from the launch tube, like the noise of fireworks shooting into the skies on a festive day. Then, the rocket was heard shooting out of the launch tube and through the deep sea with the force of a thunderbolt. It broke out of the water and flew into the blue skies. A water column several dozen meters high was pushed up and stood like a pagoda on the mirror-like surface of the blue sea. With the noises, the submarine shook slightly and quickly steadied itself again.

"Launch accomplished!" All faces broke into happy smiles.

Observers onboard the vessels 1,000 meters away rushed on deck. Pointing forward, they yelled together: "The rocket broke out of the water!" They forgot the seasickness and fatigue brought on by hours of continuous rocking and pitching at sea. Everyone, with eyes wide open, gazed at the sea and sky trying to catch everything in this exciting historic scene. This "marvellous spectacle on the sea" which lasted only an instant represented the utmost effort and painstaking labor and many days and nights of anticipation on the part of an unknown number of scientists, workers and PLA fighters.

The cream-colored "dragon" burst out of the tall water column and thin mist, covered entirely with a water curtain. As the rocket flew upward, the water curtain fell down like a waterfall in the air. Drops of water sparkled in the sunlight like crystals and jadeite. Like a perpetually revolving torch, the orange-red flame of the rocket gave the blue sea and sky a splended green and golden hue. A massive air wave forced the rising water column to split open and turned it into a enormous white lotus flower on the blue water. Then the people, too, were delighted from the bottom of their hearts as they cheered the slowly rising "dragon."

The rocket flew toward the horizon, trailing a long column of smoke, as if it were the goddess of the moon waving good-by to the sea with a white silk kerchief.

The flying rocket could no longer be seen by the naked eye. At the survey and control center, the reporter saw the image of the rocket on the television screen, monitored by precision optical instruments. The pointed nosecone of the rocket was clearly visible. It was exciting to see its majestic appearance and piercing momentum as it flew upward. As the "shutoff" [guan ji 7070 2623] report was heard, the rocket, propelled by its fierce jet flame, flew farther and farther onward and finally became a light spot on the screen, trailing a huge column of smoke.

In the survey and control room electronic computers were running at full speed, processing the thousands of data per second received from all sides into various kinds of information and transmitting them to various places. The computers also guided all the measuring and surveying equipment to keep a close track of the target. Repeatedly from the loudspeaker came reports that "tracking is normal." When the rocket was in flight for only short while, the automatic recording pen had already marked on the map the final landing spot it had calculated. At the same time, electronic computers sent this information to the surveyor vessels waiting in the area where the rocket was to land to guide them in capturing the "dragon" from far away.

Electric waves from the Beijing command post closely linked the sea launch area and the designated landing area of the rocket. The reporter walked into the general launch command post located on a seaside hilltop. The general command console was placed facing the window, and on it were rows of buttons and crisscrossing circuits of all kinds. Behind the general command console sat the commander and deputy commander, who had overall responsibility for the launch, and commanders of each of the different systems. It was from here that the submerged submarine from which the rocket was launched, the observation stations along the rocket's flight path and the landing area several thousand li away were connected into an organic whole. Every command issued from here strictly followed predetermined scientific procedures, allowing not the slightest error. The entire course of the rocket's flight was under their watch and control.

The rocket flew toward the designated landing area. All kinds of measuring and surveying equipment on the surveyor vessels deployed in the designated circular sea area had closely watched the boundless sky and accurately followed the track of the rocket. The escort ships strengthened patrolling and security in the landing area of the rocket. Aerial observation helicopters took off from the decks of their carriers.

Suddenly, a bright spot appeared on the radar screens on the surveyor vessels. "Target discovered!" The operators could not refrain from shouting. In an instant a fireball came out of the clouds and splashed down into the boundless expanse of waves, stirring up a towering column of water. A coloring agent spreading out from the nosecone turned the sea water an emerald green, forming a round colored area. Seen from the air, it was like a huge lotus leaf, bright green and magnificent.

The moment the rocket came down with a splash, the measuring personnel used a variety of means to make accurate measurements while the helicopters took pictures of the actual site.

"The rocket has splashed down in the designated sea area!" the commander of the surveyor fleet reported the good news to the motherland in his sonorous voice.

[Station reporter's report: "It Is Delightful To See the Splendid Scene of the Successful Launching of the Underwater Carrier Rocket" -- portions recorded]

[Text] [Reporter] On an October day, we visited the launching site at sea. The blue sea was calm and tranquil with bright sunshine. The underwater launching test of the carrier rocket was to be conducted there.

Attention everyone! 1 hour! Standby! [end recording]

[Reporter] After the command post issued the 1-hour standby order, a mighty fleet arrived at the test area amid the roar of ship's engines. Patrol vessels were the first in view trailing wakes as they passed. Next came the meteorological ship and the hospital ship. They dropped anchor at designated positions in an unhurried way. A submarine carrying the carrier rocket appeared last. Like a giant whale, it sailed to the designated surface area and then dived slowly. Soon a helicopter was hovering in the area. Launch time was near. Suddenly, a bright red dot, marking the spot from which the rocket would emerge from the water, appeared on the sea indicating that it was 2 minutes before launch time. At that moment, all tracking equipment on land, ships and helicopters began operating, ready to receive the data on the rocket at each moment during its flight.

[Began recording] Attention all units! 1 minute! Standby! [end recording]

[Reporter] It was 1 minute before launch time. The launch cabin on the submarine was filled with an intense, combat atmosphere. (Lu Yuezhong), an operator, calmly stood at the control station, waiting for the launch order.

[Begin recording] Count down! Five, four, three, two one, fire! [end recording]

[Reporter] Acting on the order, (Lu Yuezhong) resolutely pushed the launch button. Amid rumbling, the carrier rocket emerged from the sea. People could see orange flames jetting out of the tail of the rocket causing snow-white sprays resembling a giant lotus flower blooming on the blue sea. Soon, the rocket began to rise higher and higher and the tail flame began longer and longer, like a huge dragon breaking out of water and flying away. The rocket flew higher and higher becoming smaller and smaller. Finally, only a tiny bright dot was visible in the sky before it faded away into distant space. [cheers and applause] People cheered the successful underwater launching of our carrier rocket with tears of joy and hailed it as a spring thunder sounding the struggle by the whole party, the whole army and the people throughout the country to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

After the test was completed, we asked (Wang Huique), a responsible person of the command post in the launching area, to comment on this test. He said excitedly: [begin recording] In this launch test, the carrier rocket was launched from a submerged submarine. The launch was very successful and the rocket flight was flawless. The rocket splashed down in the designated sea area. All tracking stations did a good job, obtained all reference data and attained our planned goal. This is the result of our implementation of the principle of self-reliance, as well as the result of the close cooperation and unity among the workers, engineers, technicians and PLA commanders and fighters who participated in the test. We are determined to continue our efforts and make still greater contributions to the development of China's astronautics under the guidance of the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress. [On-the-spot report on the splashdown of the PRC carrier rocket launching test by station reporter on a surveyor vessel in the rocket landing area -- recorded]

[Text] [Reporter] Hello, listeners. The following is an on-the-spot report on the splashdown of our submarine-launched carrier rocket.

[Submarine crewman] Five, four, three, two, one, fire!

[Reporter] This is the underwater launching order from the submarine which we hear over the radio on the surveyor vessel. The large electronic computer in the mid-section of the ship has begun operation. Among various shipboard measuring and surveying equipment, the computer is the control center leading various electronic and optical tracking equipment in keenly searching the target.

[First surveyor ship crewman] Target discovered by telemetry! Target seen on the screen!

[Second surveyor ship crewmember] Target discovered by telemetry, seen on the screen! Target discovered by radar!

[First surveyor ship crewman] Radar track! Radar track!

[Reporter] These exciting reports one after the other have broken the silence in various departments. On the light yellow radar screen, a jumping bright dot was soon caught and placed at the center of a cross by the operater. This shows that radar has arrested the target. The radar immediately keeps feeding the trajectory data into the central computer. The operator of a laser theodolite, located aloft on the deck, is searching for the target with an optical sighting device according to data supplied by the computer. He found a fireball streaking out of a mass of white clouds like a shooting star.

[First surveyor ship crewman] Splashdown!

[Second urveyor ship crew member] Fly over splashdown spot!

[Reporter] Listeners, at this time we see a helicopter over the splashdown spot, taking precision measurements and photographs of the spot which has been colored by fluorescent dyes released by the rocket at the moment of splashdown. [Music of PRC national anthem and ship's whistle] The commanders and fighters are sounding the whistle. The loudspeaker is playing the national anthem. All the personnel participating in the test swarm onto the deck, cheering and jumping for joy. We have seen many comrades in tears of joy. They shake hands and embrace each other. The underwater launching test of our submarine-based carrier rocket is successful! [PRC national anthem fading into applause]

Radio Comments on Test

[Station commentary: "Warm Congratulations on the Successful Launching by Our Country of a Carrier Rocket on the Sea"]

[Text] At a time when the armymen and civilians of the whole country are earnestly studying and implementing the guidelines laid down by the 12th party congress, the heartening news has come that our country has successfully launched a carrier rocket on the sea. We extend warm congratualations and high regards to all scientists, engineers, technicians, workers, cadres and PLA commanders and fighters who took part in the carrier rocket research, manufacture and launching test.

This successful launching test marks a new development of our country's carrier rocket technology. It is of great significance for promoting the four modernizations and strengthening of our national defense capabilities. In addition to the efforts of a large number of cadres and people engaged in science and technology for national defense and those in the national defense industry, this test was conducted with the vigorous support and close coordination of various localities, departments, PLA units and fronts. This is a vivid expression of the superiority of the socialist system. It is because of this superiority that our country, despite its lower level of modernization, has been able to join the ranks of the advanced in the world in sophisticated technology for national defense. This test has profoundly enlightened us on this: It is most important to arouse the high enthusiasm for work of people in their hundreds of millions in order to achieve the grand goal of modernizing our country and to bring the superiority of the socialist system into full play. People in all trades and professions throughout the country should carry forward the communist spirit, unite and cooperate with one another and to work hard to contribute more to bringing about a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

This successful launching test was conducted with the inspiration of the guidelines laid down by the 12th party congress. The 12th party congress called for us to adhere to the policy of independence and self-reliance in the course of undertaking socialist modernization and, on this basis, to actively import some advanced technologies suited to our country's conditions.

All preparations for this test, from the research and manufacture to the launching of the carrier rocket, from material preparations to the training of technical personnel, were made through our own efforts. This shows once again that the party's policy of independence and self-reliance is entirely correct. As long as we unswervingly implement this policy, we can advance from victory to victory.

Newsletter on Launch

[Newsletter by RENMIN RIBAO and XINHUA reporters: "A Sudden Clap of Thunder Shakes the Sea and Sky -- Notes on the Underwater Launching of a Carrier Rocket From a Submarine of Our Country"]

[Text] Beijing, 17 Oct (XINHUA) -- One day in October 1982, a tremendous rumbling shook mountains and caused turbulent waves in the sea. A carrier rocket broke through the surface of the sea and soared into a blue sky. Then, it splashed down accurately in a designated sea area.

This was another [as received] successful launching of a new type of carrier rocket from a submarine after our country succeeded in launching a land-based carrier rocket into the South Pacific.

This successful launching marks a new development of our country's carrier rocket technology.

Waiting for the Order

The golden autumn is a season for a bumper harvest. The date for launching a new type of carrier rocket was drawing nearer and nearer, and the long-awaited day would soon come. All personnel, from the chief designer to every scientist, technician, PLA commander and fighter, were very excited. Giving up their Sundays and other holidays, they went all-out to make preparations for the launching. On high mountains and islands designated as testing grounds, sets of modern observation equipment were precisely corrected and readjusted to aim at rocket-simulation aircraft. On the rolling sea, escort and observation vessels repeatedly and seriously conducted "precombat" training together with the submarine which was to launch the carrier rocket. On a large technical base, researchers were conscientious and meticulous in conducting the final check on the rocket. All personnel threw all their enthusiasm and energies into their work in order to ensure the success of the launching test.

Some of them repeatedly tested and checked on tens of thousands of rocket parts, and others repeatedly trained themselves hard all night long in order to become the most efficient instrument and equipment operators. Some young men and women got acquainted, fell in love with each other and got married during the research and manufacture of the equipment. The second day after their marriage, they asked on their own to come to the launch ground, participating in the launching test of the new type of rocket. A young worker of the general rocket assembling plant postponed his wedding day three times in order to make preparations for the launch. He and his fiancee agreed that happiness would be added to their wedding if they waited until the rocket was launched.

An old general who had led scientific research for national defense for more than 20 years and a responsible naval comrade of the National Defense Scientific and Technological Commission came to the front line. Crossing mountain after mountain and cruising the sea on naval vessels, they were travel-weary and had visited every position on the launch ground to check on the pre-launch preparations.

In briefing the old general, the chief rocket designer said: During the final test, our criterion for judging the preparatory work is not "basically good" but the success of the launch test must be ensured. To do so, all personnel participating in the test laid down a rule for themselves: "We would rather test it a hundred times than let a single doubtful point slip." The old general highly praised this strict, meticulous style of work.

Most of the sailors on the rocket-launching submarine were in their twenties. The old general wanted to test them personally.

The conference room was filled to capacity. The old general, the chief designer, the chief engineer and the rocket experts were listening with rapt attention to a briefing by the commander of the submarine on the pre-launch preparations. After briefing them item by item on the various types of equipment on the submarine and the mental attitude and technical levels of its sailors, the commander of the submarine confidently said: Now we are only awaiting the order. Once the order is issued, we can put to sea in no time to accomplish the launch task.

While listening to the briefing, the old general raised a series of questions on the submarine's navigation and sighting systems, underwater communications and other aspects. Knowing every aspect of the subject, the commander of the submarine gave definite answers to all the questions one by one.

Thus, the old general felt relieved. Full of zest, he then wrote with a brush an inscription for the participatants of the launch test: "Despite the fierce winds and turbulent waves, let a sudden clap of thunder shake the sea and the sky."

The "Giant Dragon" Leaps Out of the Blue Sea

"Submerge to launch depth!" Accompanied by the rhythmic sound of the seawater, the rocket-launching submarine submerged to the required depth.

In the command cabin, we met Commander Shi Zhongli of the submarine. One of the first generation of graduates of our Naval Institute of Higher Learning with a major in submarine-to-land missiles, he had longed for many years to personally launch a carrier rocket developed and manufactured by the motherland itself. Now this day finally came. His heart throbbed as excitedly as the rolling sea. With a heroic bearing, he stood before the instrument panel and the television screen and kept issuing orders through a microphone. He sometimes directed the chief navigator to adjust the speed and sometimes told the boatswain to hold the rudder steady in order to make sure that the submarine was on course during submersion.

Suddenly the submarine was swayed by a strong current.

"Captain, our course is at XXX degrees," the steering signalman reported.

Shi Zhongli calmly but quickly ordered: "Right full rudder. Keep the course at XXX degrees!"

"Yes sir, right full rudder. Keep the course at XXX degrees."

Before the signalman finished his words, the submarine had crossed the strong current and returned to its designated course.

Underwater carrier rocket launching requires firm grasp and control of the various elements of the submarine's motions, such as the depth of its course, the gradient and the extent of its swaying motion. Under You Zongli's command, every requirement was met with precision.

The rocket launched control post was a medium-size cabin installed with numerous modern instruments and equipment. Standing at the control center was Li Ouiren [2621 2710 0088], the stoutly built head of the rocket launch department. He came to the submarine unit in 1965 after graduating from college and had since manned the post for 17 consecurive years. He ardently loved the specialty to which he dedicated himself and gave no thought to personal gains or losses. He always said: "My greatest pleasure is to send our mother-land's rockets to the blue sky through my hands." There were 17 different specialties in the rocket launch department. Besides having an intimate knowledge of every specialty, Li Guiren skillfully used his modern scientific know-how to "hammer" the various specialities into an organic "launch machine."

The time for the launch was approaching. As we observed, Li Guiren shouted out the last pre-launch checkup order after receiving and issuing almost 100 operational orders. The operators at the various specialty posts immediately fed into computers the submarine's last position and movement data and quickly rectified the last targeting direction. Gao Xinru, a young sailor at the measuring and controling tower completed 13 movements in one breath, including 4 which must be 3 seconds apart. All the movements, including checking electric voltage and current 6 times and making a report 5 times, took 29 seconds. Coordination of his ears, eyes, hands and mouth truly reached a degree of "automation."

When the needle of the timer pointed to "zero," Li Guiren ordered: "Fire!" and the carrier rocket broke through the blue water surface like a giant dragon.

A Trajectory Mark of Victory

The rocket flew rapidly along its designated trajectory, leaving behind a streak of white smoke looking like trajectory mark of victory.

A research cadre told us that the propulsion unit of the launched carrier rocket used the world's new technology, fuel and materials.

The observation post was so silent that one could almost hear one's heartbeat. Exciting reports were repeatedly sent out from the command post. "The propulsion unit is functioning normally!" "The rocket is flying normally!" "The nose section is separating!" Some of the research personnel on the spot jumped in joy. Others shed tears, forgetting to wipe them off because of their joy. Still others silently walked to the corner profondly thinking of their comrades in arms who had sacrificed themselves for today's victory. The victory was not easily won!

We interviewed Gui Guoliang [1508 0948 5328], who was in charge of developing the new model propulsion unit. When he and his comrade in arms were given the research task, there were very few reference materials for them to consult. They were taken to the research base by train. The base was simply furnished and life there was hard.

They lived in adobe houses and ate steamed corn and sorghum bread with salted vegetables. However, they did not complain of hardship or suffering. Gui Guoliang even pursuaded his wife, who was working in Beijing, to come to the base to work with him.

In spite of the severe cold of winter, the intense heat of summer, yellow sand blown against their faces or the fierce wind and turbulent waves on the sea, Cui Guoliang and his comrades in arms persisted in conducting tests on the testing ground year after year. Even during the "10 years of turmoil," he did not relax his efforts at research -- he lived in an adobe house to study mechanics, materials science, technology, chemistry and dynamics, thus making much preparation for the research and manufacture of the rocket. Cui Guoliang finally made an important contribution to the motherland's space technology.

At the conclusion of the motor thrust stage, the nose of the rocket flew normally along its orbit coasting. Now the rocket was under control, on behalf of man's will, by a small and exquisite box containing inertial equipment installed in the instrument cabin. It is Lu Yingxiang who was responsible for the research and manufacture of such inertial equipment.

Lu Yingxiang wore glasses for nearsightedness on his white and clear face. Through his glasses, we could see his blood-shot eyes. After returning from abroad with an associate doctorate degree, he volunteered to leave his office in a big city for a factory in the mountains. After years of hard work, he and comrades in arms finally produced such inertial equipment, thus turning a new page in the inertial control and guidance of the carrier rocket. The flight of the rocket was stabilized. However, Lu Yingxiang suffered from Meniere's Syndrome as a result of doing research late into the night all year round. With all his energies and even his life, he wrote a new chapter on the development of the carrier rocket in our country.

Thousands of new-type instruments and devices sent the rocket into a blue sky. Our thoughts and feelings also flew upward with it. As early as 500 or 600 years ago, our forefathers already know how to propel an object into flight with powder. On display in history museums in many localities are such flying objects propelled by rockets called "flying crows with magic fire." China is developing vigorously today. Now our new-type of modern carrier rocket has roared into the sky again. There are no difficulties that can stop us from following our own road. Let us scale heights in socliast modernization.

Remote Survey of Places Beyond the Sky and Clouds

Here was the computer center. Various types of home-made precision instruments and meters forming complete sets of equipment with computers were installed all around in one spacious room after another, and colorful indicator lights kept flashing. They accurately received various kinds of information from the sky, the ground and observation vessels on the sea, handled it and transmitted messages back to them.

The data collected during the flight of the rocket are of great significance for the further development of our country's space undertakings. However, the submarine launching of the rocket was from underwater while in motion and the rocket was flying as fast as a shooting star. People can gather that it was very difficult to collect the data about the rocket at the instant when it broke through the sea's surface. However, no sooner had the rocket burst out of the water than we saw that all lights on the control board were on. This was the signal that a refitted radar had locked on the target.

Almost at the same time, an excited, almost uncontrollable voice was heard over the loudspeaker: "No, XX [as received] presumably XINHUA substitute for actual identification number] has spotted the target." Immediately all indicator lights at the control tower lit up, indicating that the electronic computer was automatically guiding all the measuring and surveying equipment at the post to swiftly follow and lock in on the target according to the radar "report".

Research personnel observing the launch whispered and looked respectfully at the middle-age scientist sitting at the control tower. He was a responsible person of the measuring and controlling center.

On a hilltop by the ocean, we had observed the radar and interviewed him. Since carrier rocket launching tests needed a new radar for measuring and surveying, he led people in drawing up blueprints, working day and night with factory workers and finally came up with a new radar by refitting an ordinary one to meet the needs of rocket launching tests.

People love to use "backbone", "especially good at fulfilling their fighting tasks" and other such words of praise to describe the middle-aged and young intellectuals. They are truly the "main force" who are giving us a bright future of hope.

At the measuring and controlling tower's central hall we met another middle-aged science cadre of such caliber. He was Li Fucai [2621 4395 2088], responsible person of the mathematics programming office of a certain research institute. According to the political commissar of the institute, Li Fucai took up and discharged an exceptionally heavy responsibility. Led by him, our comrades developed the software -- the crystallization of modern science which gives the electronic computer the superior ability to compute -- and recorded all testing data for processing. The complex calculation program used involved the use of the theories of a dozen or so disciplines, including geophysics, geodesy, cybernetics, flight mechanics and applied mathematics.

At the end of 1978 it was decided that the carrier rocket launching test should be speeded up. There was a lack of qualified personnel for developing software. Li Fucai resolutely took up the overall difficult task of designing the software. People who were familiar with the difficulties asked him in surprise: "Are you the only one to take up the responsibility? You cannot exptect to fulfill it even if you worked 24 hours around the clock." To this he replied: "This is a time to charge forward. I will not quit on the eve of the battle." With full vigor and energy, he tirelessly studied and worked and fulfilled the task on schedule.

Thanks to Li Fucai's design, the electronic computer operated extremely smoothly. Along with its fast operation, we were able to observe from the huge screen at the central hall the position, condition and speed of the rocket at different times and to acquire from the different shaped curves on the sidescreen the true picture of rocket flight. This is what we call "sitting within the command hall but grasping conditions over the skies."

Who Is To Be Given the Flowers?

The rocket accurately splashed down in the designated sea area and the test was successfully completed. The observation site was a scene of joy.

While we were celebrating the victory, we recalled an episode about "the poet's flower presentation."

Just one day after we arrived here, we were visiting the rocket testing ground. A poet in our group picked a bunch of purplish red flowers from a mountain slope and wanted to give them to the comrades in arms who contributed to the launching of the new-type carrier rocket.

In the inspection workshop, we saw a cream-colored "giant dragon" lying in the middle of the shop. Working around it were scientists, engineers, technicians, workers and young fighters. They were working busily but methodically. Juding by their accents, we knew that they were from various parts of the country. An engineer told us that the new-type carrier rocket was the crystallization of modernization of China's industry, science and technology, as well as the fruit of the great unity and cooperation among many army and local units.

The poet was at a loss and did not know to whom to give his flowers. He had to take the flowers back to his quarters.

During our visit for 1 month or so there, we took note of many things concerning unity and cooperation to guarantee a successful launching. One day, the scientific research personnel found that an electric cable for rocket launching needed to be changed. As soon as the scientific research department requested the change, the industrial department concerned specially assigned a person to organize the production. The factory, racing against time and adhering to the qualitative demand, produced the cable ahead of schedule. By that time, a special boat dispatched by the harbor administrative bureau was already waiting at the dock, preparing for the transport. After the cable arrived, the workers of a local shipyard and a naval ship's repair plant immediately started the installation, including welding to connect the plugs. The engineers, technicians and scientific researchers tested the cable overnight. The change of a section of electric cable thus involved more than 10 factories and research institutes of various departments. What the comrades of various departments said was the same: We don't want the "train" of the new-type carrier rocket launching test to be delayed at our "station."

The chief designer of the rocket told us that hundreds of scientific research organizations, plants and PLA units made contributions to the development, production and launching of this new-type carrier rocket. He said that every part of the rocket was "a result of collective effort." He said that instead of a trademark, we could only put "Made in China" on the rocket.

Then, who should be given the flowers of victory? The poet, overflowing with emotion, said: To the great motherland, the great party and the fine sons and daughters of the Chinese people who contributed to the development, production and launching of the new-type carrier rocket!

AFP: PRC AIR FORCE MAJOR DEFECTS WITH PLANE

Lands in ROK

OW162318 Hong Kong AFP in English 2306 GMT 16 Oct 82

[Excerpt] Seoul, Oct. 17 (AFP) -- A Chinese Air Force major piloting a Chinese-made MiG-19 combat fighter landed at an airport outside Seoul yesterday seeking political asylum, reliable sources said today. It is not yet known if the defecting plane came from North Korea or from mainland China.

The South Korean Defense Ministry ordered a total blackout of the news immediately for certain security reasons.

The name of the alleged defector was not disclosed. [Hong Kong AFP in English at 0728 GMT on 17 Oct reports the air force majors is "surnamed Wu."]

The South Korean Government is said to be unwilling to have any diplomatic trouble with China with whom Seoul wants rapprochement. However, diplomatic quarters said it is possible that the alleged defector could be accepted by Taiwan.

This is the first time a Chinese MIG plane flew to South Korea in a defection bid.

Plane May Be MiG-21

OW170914 Hong Kong AFP in English 0810 GMT 17 Oct 82

[Excerpt] Taipei, Oct. 17 (AFP) — Taiwanese authorities here are negotiating with the South Korean Government to help a Chinese Communist Air Force defector to come to Taiwan, official sources said here today.

The defector, who is yet to be identified, flew to a South Korean airbase south of Seoul yesterday afternoon possibly from Shandong Province, in China.

The South Korean Defense Ministry ordered a total blackout of the news immediately for security reasons, a report from Seoul said.

A military officer here, who declined to be identified, said the objective of the defector was apparently Taiwan, therefore, he should be helped to get what he set out to do.

A spokesman of the Foreign Ministry said the government was contacting South Korean authorities. So far there had been no confirmation one way or another, he added.

Initial reports said the unnamed defector flew to South Korea aboard a MiG-19, the same type of aircraft as Fan Yuan-yan brought into Taiwan on July 7, 1977. Informed sources here said, however, the aircraft could be a more advanced MiG-21.

Spokesman Says Plane Missing

[Excerpts] Beijing, Oct. 18 (AFP) — An official spokesman here today confirmed that a Chinese military aircraft was missing but did not comment on reports that it had been flown to South Korea by a pilot seeking political asylum. The Chinese spokesman said only that "on October 16, one of our military aircrafts lost contact with us while on a training flight over the seas."

Diplomatic sources said that the plane might have taken off from Dalian, a large industrial center and port in northeast China.

[Text] Beijing, Oct. 17 (AFP) — A young Chinese girl was forced out of a car driven by a French diplomat and taken away by a score of unidentified Chinese, usually reliable sources said here today.

A cyclist blocked the car of French Embassy Second Secretary Sylvie Bergmann in central Beijing last night, the source said. Several people immediately surrounded the vehicle, demanding the Chinese girl passenger should get out of the car.

No details were immediately available on the identity of the girl or the people who took her away.

OFFICIAL PREDICTS RECORD GRAIN HARVEST

[By CHINA DAILY reporter]

[Text] China's total grain output this year will be a record unless there are extraordinary natural calamities in the coming two months, Jiang Xi, deputy minister of commerce, predicted yesterday. In an exclusive interview on the eve of "World Food Day," he told CHINA DAILY that despite serious floods in some regions and drought in others, the nation had had a bumper harvest.

It will exceed the year's target and surpass the grain output of 1979 record of (332.1 million tons).

He pointed out that China is a developing country with a quarter of the world population but less than 7 percent of the globe's total arable land.

Jiang, 59, said: "Although China ranked second in the world with its grain output of (325.2 million tons) last year, its per capita output of grain reached only 326.5 kilogrammes.

"Compared with some developed countries, this is a low figure. Our policy is to spare no effort to promote grain production based on the guideline of the nation's economic work: 'Feeding the people first and building the country second'."

To meet the needs of industrial expansion and to raise living standards, it is not enough just to increase grain production, the deputy minister said. "We should also develop diversified undertakings and secure an all-round development of forestry, animal husbandry, sideline occupations and fishery."

"Meanwhile grain consumption for each city resident dropped to 215.5 kilogrammes in 1981 from 240.5 kilogrammes in 1952.

The deputy minister attributed the changes in diet to the raising of the people's purchasing power as a result of the expansion of urban employment and increased incomes of the peasants.

He said that every year China imported about 15 million tons of grain. "This grain is mainly used to help readjust the structure and rational distribution of our agriculture," he said.

"The imported grain only makes up 5 percent of our annual grain output. We rely on our efforts to feed the 1,000 million people," he said.

Referring to the work of the FAO, Jiang said he appreciated its efforts to expand world food and other agricultural production and world-wide co-operation. "As a member of the organization, China takes an active part in its activities. [quotation marks as published]

GOOD AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTION EXPECTED IN 1982

[Text] Beijing, October 16 (XINHUA) -- More late rice than last year is expected in southern China if there is no bad weather in coming weeks, according to a recent meeting appraising late rice output in the growing provinces southern parts of the country.

China's total farm produce this year is expected to surpass 1981. The yields of wheat, early rice and middle-season rice are bigger and the autumn crops in most areas are growing well. Industrial crops are estimated to exceed last year.

China has implemented policies to boost its agriculture in recent years to stimulate the rural economy. The total output value of China's agriculture between 1979 and 1981 rose at an average annual rate of 5.6 percent, compared with an annual average of 3.2 percent between 1952 and 1978.

China's agriculture now can basically satisfy the needs for food and clothing of its 1,000 million people.

Though China had good harvests in recent years, the proportion of the state tax has gone down year by year. In 1981, agricultural tax paid in kind accounted for only 4.2 percent of the total annual agricultural net income.

China still imports a certain amount of grain to help restructure the rural economy and develop forestry, animal husbandry and other sideline undertakings. Some of the grain will be used to help badly eroded areas to reafforest barren hills.

Last year, per capita grain consumption in rural areas averaged 250.5 kilograms, an all time high. In most areas, peasant families have grain in storage. A State Statistical Bureau survey on 18,500 rural families in 28 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions showed per capita peasant income in 1981 was 60 percent higher than that in 1978. The growth rate is faster than any other three-year post-liberation period.

Farming areas are supplying the light and textile industries with growing quantities of cotton, wool, flax, sugar and tea.

Growth of peasants' purchasing power provided a vast market for the light and textile industries. In 1981 the total retail sales in China's rural areas were 63.4 percent over 1978, outpacing the 37 percent increase registered in the cities.

China has also undertaken agricultural technical cooperation and exchange with more than 80 countries and introduced advanced farming machines and fine breeds of livestock. China's fine crop seeds as well as fine breeds of poultry are now in use in a dozen countries.

HU YAOBANG VIEWS COUNTRY'S POLITICAL SITUATION

[Text] Beijing, October 17 (XINHUA) -- General Secretary of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee Hu Yaobang said here today: "Six years have elapsed since the gang of four was smashed in China. Foreign correspondents often raise the question whether the political situation in China is stable and whether there will be turmoils.

"On this question, our party and state leaders have stated at least once or twice a year that the political situation in our country is tranquil and stable. Today I'd like to assure our French friends that our country will become more stable year after year."

Hu Yaobang made this remark after he met with French newsmen and answered their questions here this morning.

He said: "As you friends know, we have instituted a contracting system in the Chinese countryside. On this question, I may as well sign a 'contract' for a term of, say, ten years with our French friends."

The Chinese leaders' assessment on the political situation in China, he added, is more objective, closer to reality and more reliable than the speculations of some foreign reporters.

HONGQI: 12TH CONGRESS WILL LEAD TO VICTORY

HK160912 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0827 GMT 16 Oct 82

["HONGGQI Publishes Commentator's Article Pointing Out That the 12th CPC Congress Will Lead Construction to Victory" -- ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE headline]

[Text] Beijing, 16 Oct (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- HONGQI published today has quoted Deng Xiaoping's remarks expressed when he met Kim Il-song recently: "The role of the 12th CPC Congress is the same as that of the 7th CPC Congress. The 7th CPC Congress led the revolution to victory whereas the 12th CPC Congress will lead construction to victory." This journal believes that Deng Xiaoping's remarks were a correct appraisal of the historical significance of the 7th and 12th CPC Congresses.

The HONGQI commentator's article entitled "The 12th CPC Congress Will Lead Construction to Victory -- on Understanding and Mastery of Laws" says: "With regard to the understanding and mastery of the law of socialist construction, we have undergone the process of knowing nothing to knowing something and incorrect understanding to comparatively correct understanding. We have experienced both victory and defeat in this respect and have summed up both positive and negative experiences. More and more of our cadres and people have understood and mastered this law to varying degrees. In practice, we have gradually understood the law of socialist construction in general and the special law governing Chinese socialist construction. We have a more definite and complete general line and have worked out a series of guiding principles, policies and methods suitable to various fronts, quarters and work. All of this is a guarantee that we will win still greater victory in our cause."

The article maintains that law is invisible and untouchable and we can understand and master it only in practice. If we act in accordance with law in practice, we will win victory. This will be beneficial to our understanding and mastery of the law. If we run counter to law in practice, we will suffer defeat. This will also help us understand and master the law. In a country like China which is populous and has a long and complicated history, while leading revolution and construction, we cannot but make repeated comparisons of victory and failure in order to understand and master the law of revolution and construction. Only thus can we complete the process of knowing nothing to knowing something and from incorrect to comparatively correct understanding.

While quoting Chen Yun's remarks to leaders in charge of economic work, the article points out: "The party Central Committee itself is a collective. Due to the fact that Comrade Chen Yun has been engaged in economic work for a long time, it is appropriate to say that he is one of the first persons to understand the law governing important problems in socialist economic construction. The speech delivered by Comrade Chen Yun at the 8th CPC Congress in 1956 was extensively praised inside the party. However, after the campaigns of the 'Great Leap Forward' and 'opposing right deviations,' his correct ideas on economic problems no longer worked. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, some strategic decisions and important measures proposed by Comrade Chen Yun have been accepted by the central authorities and have been proved to be more and more effective in practical work. Thus, most of our comrades profoundly realize that they should learn from Comrade Chen Yun's methods for observing economic phenomenon and handling economic problems."

In conclusion, the HONGQI commentator's article says: "At present, our party, our party Central Committee and most of our cadres have a deeper understanding of the law governing our country's socialist construction compared with the period of the Eighth CPC Congress. Thus, we may conclude that the view that the 12th CPC Congress will lead construction to victory is expressed on a completely scientific basis."

BA YI RADIO RAPS REPRESSION, SABOTAGE OF PLA

[Text] In his report to the 12th CPC National Congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang said that our army must not only be a great wall of steel to safeguard the socialist motherland, but also an important force in building socialist material and spiritual civilization. This principle was warmly acclaimed by the broad masses of commanders and fighters in the armed forces. This is to say that the party has acknowledged the fact that the armed forces and all of the officers and men are important forces in the state's political life and in our motherland's socialist construction.

At the same time, however, certain people have also disregarded the resolution of the 12th party congress and continued to resort to various means to sabotage the armed forces' prestige in an attempt to place the armed forces in a secondary position in the political life of the party and state. For example, certain people are now planning to cut the number of deputies the armed forces are allowed to send to the National People's Congress. Of the current 3,500 NPC deputies, 490 are from the armed forces, or 14 percent of the total number of NPC deputies. Now, certain people want to cut the number of military deputies in half. To put it simply, these people want to reduce the number of military representatives in the state's highest power organ by as many as possible, and restrict the comrades from the armed forces to discussions and decisions on our country's domestic and foreign policies.

Furthermore, we cannot help expressing our concern for the situation regarding JIEFANGJUN BAO and other journals of the armed forces. The fact is that the newspapers and journals of the armed forces are now unable to express their views on the most pressing issues about which the whole army and the whole nation are most concerned. For example, in a recent article published by JIEFANGJUN BAO, a veteran comrade of relatively high prestige in the armed forces presented his views on certain issues with which the armed forces are concerned. However, this article infuriated and immensely disturbed certain people in the central authorities. They attacked the article as harboring an ulterior motive, distorting facts, propagating erroneous thinking and views, spreading leftist poison, indiscriminately attacking the central leadership and attacking the party's guiding ideology by insinuation. Subsequently, the editorial department of JIEFANGJUN BAO, under pressure from the higher authorities, had to make a clean break with the article and denounce this totally correct and important article for having committed ideological and organizational errors.

By resorting to such measures, certain people in the central authorities apparently want to rebuff the traditional spirit displayed by the newspaper of our PLA of openly struggling against the erroneous tendencies and repress the other newspapers and journals of our armed forces. Such deeds run counter to the resolutions of various previous party congresses and the 12th CPC National Congress. However, no matter how strong the pressure may be, it can never stop our army from carrying forward its revolutionary traditions of being loyal to the people and safeguarding the interests of the state and the people.

BEIJING REVIEW ON REUNIFICATION WITH TAIWAN

HK151303 Beijing BEIJING REVIEW in English No 41, 11 Oct 82 pp 19, 20

[Article: "The Nine-Point Proposal: One Year Later"]

[Text] Although people in Taiwan officially are still cut off from the mainland, the contents of the nine-point proposal have been widely publicized by private individuals. Their outcry for peace talks and reunification is a forceful opposition to the obstacles put up by the Taiwan authorities, that is, "no contacts, no negotiations and no compromise."

The nine principles for the return of Taiwan to the motherland and peaceful reunification of the country put forward by Ye Jianying, chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, on September 30, 1981 have evoked widespread repercussions in Taiwan and throughout the world.

Over the past year, speeches by Taiwan compatriots who have been back to the mainland or gone abroad, numerous letters from Taiwan compatriots, Taiwan province newspaper and magazine reports and overseas Chinese publications in other countries have all reflected appreciation and support for the nine-point proposal. Many people in Taiwan think that the nine principles and policies are generous and specific, are considerate of Taiwan's interests and represent the Communist Party's honest desire for a peaceful solution of the Taiwan problem. Someone said: "I felt reassured when I heard about the nine-point proposal."

Old men who left the mainland to live in Taiwan often urge each other to take care of themselves so that they can return to their hometowns and see their families and friends. Their descendants and other Taiwan compatriots who have never been to the mainland are curious about the real situation there, as is evidenced by the increasing popularity of mainland broadcasts. Earlier this year, large audiences watched foreign-made films and TV documentaries about the mainland.

Intellectual circles have been the most active since the announcement of the nine-point proposal. They have ignored all taboos, actively discussed reunification through various channels and put forth all kinds of concrete suggestions.

In November last year, a magazine in Taiwan solicited articles on the theme of "how should China be reunified." The response was "unprecedented" both in Taiwan and the rest of the world. By May this year, when awards were announced, the editorial department of the magazine had received more than 400 articles. The magazine said that the common theme in these articles was "obvious national feelings." Of the 20 articles selected, "there is not one opposing peaceful negotiations and making contacts."

Ye Jianying's nine-point proposal also received active response from many Taiwan compatriots residing abroad. Yu Aihua, a former senior Kuomintang official now residing in New York, recently published an article in PEIMEI NEWS, saying: "All Chinese compatriots residing abroad are Chinese, and we all have relatives or friends in Taiwan or the mainland. For the sake of their personal interests we long for the peaceful reunification of the motherland. It is also our desire to free our compatriots residing abroad from racial discrimination and let them feel proud of their own country, so we eagerly hope for a peaceful reunification of the motherland at an early date and wish to have a genuinely independent, unified, stable, powerful and prosperous China."

Patriotic Chinese nationals residing in New York set up the Society for Promoting China's Peaceful Reunification with the aim of promoting exchanges, mutual understanding and peaceful talks between people from the two sides of the Taiwan Straits and striving for an all-round reunification of China.

The Western economic recession has brought great difficulties to Taiwan's economy, enhancing the desire among industrial and commerical circles in Taiwan to do business with the mainland. One Taiwan business said that shipping and trade between Taiwan and the mainland would be beneficial to the economic development of both sides, and to Taiwan in particular.

Many non-Kuomintang people have changed their attitudes towards Taiwan's future and the reunification of the motherland. One said that Taiwan belongs to the Chinese nation and cannot be separated from the mainland, the "Mother's body." Another wrote, "We believe that talks between the Chinese Communist Party and the Kuomintang on a reciprocal basis through peaceful means is a step towards the only way to resolve the contradictions between the two sides along the Taiwan Straits."

Not all members of the Kuomintang upper strata are sticking to the stand of "no contacts, no negotiations and no compromise." Some members of the Legislative Yuan (committee), some state policy advisors are leading members of the propaganda department in Taiwan have said openly that peaceful talks between the Chinese Communist Party and the Kuomintang should be regarded as a means for the reunification of the country and that there is no harm in trying them. Some think that the problem of reunification is facing a crucial moment and that the final resolution of the Chinese issue could come in the 1980s.

GUOSHI PINGLUN (REVIEW OF AFFAIRS OF THE STATE), a Kuomintang biweekly, last July pointed out that it is not appropriate to refuse peaceful talks again and again. This does no good to either the country or the people, and, indeed, could harm them. The article added that turning pale at the mention of peaceful talks is only an admission of an expectation of failure in the talks with the Communist Party. "If we do not change our policies we will face the dangerous consequence of a complete collapse on this tiny island," it said.

OFFICIAL ON PRC ROCKET LAUNCH, PILOT DEFECTION

[Text] Taipei, Oct. 17 (CNA) -- Dr. James C.Y. Soong, director general of the Government Information Office of the Republic of China, responding to queries from foreign correspondents regarding Beijing's launching of a carrier rocket into waters north of Taiwan and also to the freedom flight of a Chinese Communist pilot to South Korea, made the following comments Sunday:

1.. The Chinese Communists have always been bellicose and have never given up their intention to seize Taiwan by force. Their recent launching of a carrier rocket into sensitive waters 300 nautical miles north of Taiwan poses a serious threat to the peace and security not only of the Taiwan, Penghu, Kinmen and Matsu area, but also to the Western Pacific and even the whole of the Asian-Pacific region.

They are demonstrating their military strength in effort to solve their international disputes and mitigate their internal turmoil.

We must point out that should Taiwan, Penghu, Kinmen and Matsu fall into communist hands, the loss would not be limited to the freedom and well-being of the 18 million free Chinese of the Taiwan area. The Chinese Communists also would be encouraged to bring their blackmailing efforts to bear against other countries.

2. Beijing's launching of the carrier rocket at this time is an effective answer to those who say that the Chinese Communists are using draft animals to transport their weapons and that they pose no military threat to Taiwan. The Free World should not underestimate the intentions and aggressive capability of the Chinese Communists. The Free World should increase its cooperation so as to maintain peace and security.

3. The flight to freedom of a Chinese Communist pilot to South Korea in a MIG-19 as reported by the foreign press is only one of a series of similar incidents that have taken place on the Chinese mainland recently. From this evidence we can judge that the people of the mainland have completely lost faith in the communist system. Their desire to fight for freedom and democracy is no longer merely a wish but has reached the stage of concrete action. It is our conviction that additional incidents are sure to follow. We wish to express our sincere admiration for freedom fighters who risk their lives for liberty.

The international community has expressed support for the Solidarity movement in Poland. At the same time, it has now shown equal concern for the Chiense youths who are risking their lives for freedom. Actually, the Chinese Communist regime is far more oppressive than the Polish Communists. The number of people who fell victim to Chinese Communist persecution during the Cultural Revolution alone was far greater than the total population of Poland. Any attempt to curry favor with the Chinese Communists impairs the principle of justice and is an act to aid and abet the Chinese Communist tyranny but also constitutes a heavy blow to the people on the Chinese mainland. [sentence as received] These people are fighting for freedom and human rights against the oppression and tyranny of communist rule

According to a wire service report, a military spokesman here expressed that the Republic of China will give the pilot a cash reward of U.S. dollars 2 million if he will fly the plane to Taipei. REPORTAGE ON SUN REMARKS IN LEGISLATIVE YUAN

Denies 'Taiwan Problem'

OW151451 Taipei CNA in English 1426 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] Taipei, Oct. 15 (CNA) -- Premier Sun Yun-hsuan reconfirmed Friday that the problem of China can only be solved after the reunification of China under the three principles of the people.

In answering an interpellation at the Legislative Yuan, the premier said solemnly that there is no so-called "Taiwan problem," but only the problem of China. "The relation between China and Taiwan should not be divided" he said, stressing that an action of trying to "preserve Taiwan" without taking mainland China into consideration would only cause serious setback.

To establish a peaceful and democratic society here, he said, what the people should do is to cooperate with each other, but not to instigate any bad feelings that would create conflicts and dangers here.

He went on to say that freedom-loving Chinese people living in Taiwan, mainland China and other countries should take responsibility for keeping the constitution of the Republic of China which has been legally worked out by respresentatives of Chinese everywhere. "After all, the constitution provides the cement keeping all Chinese together," he said.

In past years, the government had placed its effort on the establishment of a peaceful and democratic society here, the premier said. However, he continued, Communist China has not given up attempting to attack Taiwan. It is in such a dangerous sitatuion that the government is obliged to maintain martial law. "To abolish the law will only be throwing ourselves into the sea" the premier said.

Conditions for Reunification

OW161029 Taipei CNA in English 0946 GMT 16 Oct 82

[Text] Taipei, Oct 16 (CNA) -- Reunification of China under the three principles of the people is the common will of all Chinese people, Premier Sun Jun-suan said Friday.

If the Chinese Communists are serious in thinking over the unification issue, they will soon discard the so-called "four persistences" of Marxism and Leninism and join the free forces under the banner of the three principles of the people, Premiser Sun said.

The all the compatriots on the mainland will regain their freedom and enjoy a free and prosperous life as the people in Taiwan have, he stressed.

Making the remarks in answering an interpellation at the Legislative Yuan, Premier Sun pointed out that peace talks are actually another form of warfare for the communists. Their real purpose is to get what they cannot win with military forces.

The nine-point peace proposal of the communist rulers is another trick as they threatened the United States not to see weaponry to this nation at the same time as they were making their peace proposal, the premier said.

Premier Sun called on the people never to forget the painful experience of peace talks with the communists before the mainland was usurped nor the communist deceit in annexing Tibet and the tragic history of the fall of Vietnam.

Since the recent "12th Communist Party Congress" the Peiping powerholders have been pushing their united front plot on this nation. During this time of emergency, all the people must keep alert to avoid falling into the communist trap, Premier Sun exhorted.

The issue of China's unification is not a struggle between political parties or for special powers, it is a struggle for the right doctrine, social system and way of living. All Chinese nationals should realize the serious nature of the question and choose the just thoughts and system that will meet all the requirements of the people and show concern for the future of Chinese culture and well-being of our descendants, the premier said.

Denounces Independence Union

[Text] Taipei, Oct. 16 (CNA) -- Premier Sun Yun-suan Friday expressed his welcome to all patriotic Chinese at home and abroad to join the task of national reconstruction.

In replying to questions at the Legislative Yuan, the premier said, "Except for a few people who openly support the Peiping regime, and make attempts to subvert the Republic of China and change its constitutional system, any organizations and free Chinese who are loyal to and support the cause of this nation are welcomed to take part in the national reconstruction work".

Premier Sun emphasized that a line must be drawn between those loyal Chinese and the minority of subversive elements.

"I consider the absolute majority of Taiwanese residing overseas as patriotic but the so-called Taiwan Independence Union is a subversive organization which tries to change the Republic of China's political system through illegal means," the premier said.

OFFICIAL, PRESS REACTION TO HOLDRIDGE TRANSFER

[Excerpts] The CHINA TIMES reports official sources in Washington as estimating the new appointment of Assistant Secretary of State John Holdridge as the U.S. ambassador to Indonesia will trigger heated debate in the State Department over U.S. policy to the Republic of China.

Meanwhile, the UNITED DAILY NEWS reports that, according to responses given by State Department spokesman John Hughes, the White House has reportedly deliberately transferred Holdridge out of the State Department to make room for a new official to take his place. Sources point out that the White House has an ample supply of ambassadorial condidates. Therefore, Holdridge's new assignment was not determined out of sheer necessity. It is reported U.S. conservatives believe Holdridge's transfer indicates President Reagan's dissatisfaction with the assistant secretary of state's implementation of his foreign policy. Some conservatives also reveal that they have been against Holdridge for a long time. With Holdridge gone, say the conservatives, Secretary of State George Shultz can put the man of his choice into this position. Sources add that Holdridge had never expressed great ambition for the Indonesian ambassadorship.

In Taipei, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs has declined to predict who will succeed Mr Holdridge. However, informed sources have emphasized the important role the new assistant secretary of state will play in terms of future relations between the Republic of China and the United States.

It is hoped that the new assistant secretary will have a thorough understanding of matters related to the Republic of China and help stabilize future ties between Washington and Taipei.

Moreover, spokesman Hughes has announced that Holdridge's transfer does not represent a change in U.S. policy toward the Asia and Pacific region.

FOREIGN MINISTER HUANG HUA'S ADDRESS TO UN

HK151403 Beijing BEIJING REVIEW in English No. 41, 11 Oct 82 pp 14-18

["China's Position on Current World Issues -- Foreign Minister Huang Hua's Address to UN General Assembly, October 4"]

[Text] On this occasion each year, we gather here to review major world issues of the day. We are all concerned about the changes in the world situation as a whole and we all follow the developments in various countries. Before I proceed to elaborate on China's views on current world affairs, I would like to say something about a recent event of major importance in the political life of the Chinese people.

As you know, the Communist Party of China held its 12th national congress in Beijing earlier last month. This congress was an important milestone in the history of the People's Republic of China. It summed up our experience in achieving great successes over the past six years. A grand programme for China's socialist modernization was put forward and new central leading bodies of the party were elected. China now enjoys political stability and unity, and her economy is growing steadily. She has entered a new era in her efforts to create a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. Under the leadership of the Communist Party, the Chinese people are determined to make gigantic efforts on the basis of self-reliance in order to achieve, step by step, modernization in industry, agriculture, national defence and science and technology before the turn of the century, and transform China into a culturally advanced and highly democratic socialist country. We intend to blaze a path of our own and build socialism with Chinese characteristics. We know that this is going to be an arduous task and will be no plain-sailing. But we are fully confident of achieving our goal and of the bright future of our country.

In his report to the 12th National Congress of the Communist Party of China, the general secretary of the Central Committee, Comrade Hu Yaobang, has given a comprehensive and profound explanation of China's foreign policy. We adhere to an independent foreign policy. In developing relations with other countries, we are always guided by the five principles, namely, mutual respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity, mutual non-aggression, noninterference in each other's internal affairs, equality and mutual benefit, and peaceful coexistence. More particularly, we will unite with countries of the Third World and join hands with all other countries and forces working for peace to combat hegemonism and maintain world peace.

Our independent foreign policy proceeds from the fundamental interests of the people of China and the world as a whole. The founding of the People's Republic of China has removed the social causes of China's submission to foreign aggression and those of any possibility that China might commit aggression abroad. In the 33 years of the People's Republic, we have shown by deeds that China never attaches herself to any big power, or group of powers, nor yields to pressure from any big power. We Chinese people cherish our own independence and sovereign rights which we won only after protracted struggles. We are firmly opposed to hegemonism. At the same time we declare to the whole world that under no circumstances will China seek hegemony.

In our international relations we have always abided by the five principles of peaceful coexistence. Conforming to these principles, our government has established co-operative relations of peace and friendship with a great number of countries in the past three decades and more, and settled many boundary questions and other issues left over from history. In the future we will continue to be ready to solve outstanding issues in our relations with some countries on the basis of the same principles. The Chinese Government is willing to develop normal relations with any country as long as it truly respects China's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, abides by the principles of equality, mutual benefit and mutual respect, that it is not hostile to China and does not threaten China's security. Our modernization programme is based on the principle of independence and self-reliance.

At the same time we will continue to adhere firmly to our policy of opening to the outside world. We are ready to develop trade ties, economic cooperation and scientific-technological exchanges with all countries on the basis of equality and mutual benefit.

The people of all countries eagerly desire peace. China's modernization programme can be realized only in an international environment of enduring peace and stability. In the common interests of the people of the world, we are ready to work together with all peace-loving countries and peoples for the maintenance of world peace and international security and for the advancement of the cause of human progress.

There are many pressing issues of universal concern on our agenda. Allow me to state here the basic position and views of the Chinese delegation.

I. The Question of Maintaining World Peace and International Security

The international scene is far from being relaxed, but has become more turbulent and tenser during the past year. While wars of aggression against Kampuchea and Afghanistan have not ceased in Asia, naked and savage aggression against the Lebanese and Palestinian peoples has been going on without letup in the Middle East. In southern Africa, the racists are wantonly carrying on brutal repression, military occupation and armed provocations. In Latin America, outside intervention has exacerbated the turmoil in the Caribbean region. Even the hitherto relatively calm south Atlantic has witnessed a war of the strong bullying the weak. Wranglings over the deployment of intermediate-range nuclear weapons have intensified the military confrontation in Europe. Faced with a continued economic recession, the developed countries are trying hard to shift the consequences of their economic crises on to others. This has badly hurt the developing countries and added to their economic woes. Stalemate on the question of global negotiations has seriously hampered the improvement of North-South relations. Disarmament is another issue of universal concern. Here again, no progress could be made owing to the intensified arms race between the superpowers. The recent second special session on disarmament has been a disappointment. In short, while the hitherto unresolved old issues of the world have become more complicated, new problems keep cropping up on the horizon. One cannot but feel gravely concerned and disturbed about the present international situation.

The menace to the peace and security of the world today originates mainly from imperialism, hegemonism and colonialism. The quest for hegemony by the superpowers and the resultant global rivalry between them are the main source of the unrest and turmoil in the world. In their contention for spheres of influence and world supremacy, the superpowers have accelerated the expansion of their armaments and stepped up their strategic deployment. They have openly or covertly subjected other countries to their aggression, intervention or control by direct or indirect use or threat of force. While the focus of their global strategies remains in Europe, the developments in recent years indicate that the main sphere of contention between the superpowers is in the Third World. This fierce rivalry has constantly rocked the world and increased the danger of a world war. Therefore, the overriding task of the people of the world is to combat hegemonism and maintain international peace. The heroic struggles waged by the peoples of Afghanistan, Kampuchea and southern Africa and by the Arab people against aggression demonstrate that the people can, by means of unremitting struggle, upset the superpowers' strategic plans and land the aggressors in deeper and deeper difficulties. We are convinced that so long as the people of the world are truly united and wage resolute struggles, world peace can be preserved.

II. The Question of Safeguarding the Independence and the Right to Existence of Nations

World peace and security can be maintained only if the rights to independence and existence of nations are firmly safeguarded. These two aspects cannot be separated. The question of Afghanistan and the question of Kampuchea have not yet been settled and have again been inscribed on the agenda of the current session. This is because the Soviet Union and Soviet-suuported Vietnam have continued to subject Afghanistan and Kampuchea under their respective military occupation and refused thus far to withdraw their aggressor troops therefrom.

Not long ago, the three Kampuchean patriotic forces resisting Vietnamese aggression agreed among themselves and formed the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea headed by Prince Norodom Sihanouk. This government enjoys the support of the Kampuchean people as well as international recognition and endorsement. This is an encouraging major development in the Kampuchean situation. The Kampuchean people have persevered and won important victories in their war of resistance agaist Vietnamese aggression, thus landing the aggressors in a deepening quagmire. In order to extricate itself from this predicament, Hanoi has resorted to trickeries. It has launched a new "peace offensive" designed to soften and divide the international forces opposing Vietnamese aggression against Kampuchea. Vietnam is the aggressor in Kampuchea and the menace to the peace and security of Southeast Asia, and yet it has fabricated a so-called China "threat" in an attempt to divert public attention and spread confusion.

But this is completely futile. The five ASEAN countries and the great majority of the member states of the United Nations emphatically call for the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the declaration of the international conference on Kampuchea, which demand the total withdrawal of Vietnam's aggressor troops from Kampuchea so that the Kampuchean people may build a peaceful, democratic, neutral and non-aligned state of national union free from any outside interference. This demand is fully justified. Since the question of Kampuchea has resulted from Vietnam's armed aggression, there can be no genuine settlement of this question until Vietnam withdraws all its aggressor troops from Kampuchea. Any "political solution" that accepts the status quo created by Vietnam's aggression at the expense of Kampuchea's independence and sovereignty would be contrary to the United Nations Charter and the norms of international relations and, therefore, is inadmissible.

The same applies to the question of Afghanistan. The Afghan people have not been cowed by their formidable enemy, but have fought valiantly under the sacred banner of safeguarding their national independence and have frustrated the aggressors' cherished plan of bringing the war to a quick conclusion. Soviet armed aggression against Afghanistan constitutes a gross violation of the Charter of the United Nations and a grave threat to peace in Asia and the world. None of the pretexts put forward by the Soviet Union to justify its continued presence in Afghanistan is tenable. We maintain that the resolutions of three consecutive sessions of the General Assembly calling for the withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan must be strictly implemented. The Soviet Union must unconditionally pull out all its troops from Afghanistan. The Afghan people should be allowed to determine their own destiny free from any outside interference. Afghanistan must regain the status of an independent and non-aligned state. That is the only feasible way to settle the question of Afghanistan.

The situation in Lebanon has aroused serious worldwide concern during the last few months. How the Lebanese situation and the Palestinian question are treated involves respect for a state's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity and recognition of a nation's rights to existence and self-determination. This is also a question bearing on peace in the Middle East and international security as a whole. The Israeli aggressors have flagrantly invaded and occupied large tracts of Lebanese territory and attempted to wipe out the Palestinian revolutionary armed forces.

They perfidiously entered Beirut again and savagely massacred Palestinian and Lebanese civilians. The United States cannot shirk its responsibility for this since it has always shielded and abetted the Israeli aggressors. China joins all other countries in voicing strong condemnation of the acts of aggression and the inhuman atrocities committed by the Israeli authorities. We firmly support the Palestinian, Lebanese and other Arab peoples in their struggle against Israeli aggression and expansion. The question of Palestine is at the core of the Middle East issue.

Although the Palestinian people have suffered a temporary setback, their forces will never be wiped out because they are fighting for a just cause. The Palestine Liberation Organization is recognized by more than one hundred countries as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people. Any proposal or formula designed to exclude the PLO from the settlement of the Middle East question would be wrong and unworkable. The plan put forward at the 12th Arab summit conference held recently in Fes, Morocco, provides a good basis for a fair and reasonable settlement of the questions of Palestine and the Middle East. In our view, to achieve peace in the Middle East, Israel must evacuate the Arab territories it has occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem; the Palestinian people must regain their national rights, including the right to return to their homeland, the right to self-determination and the right to establish their own state; and the rights to independence and existence of all countries in the Middle East should be respected. The most urgent task now is to stop Israel's aggression against Lebanon. The United Nations organization and all the countries and peoples who cherish peace and uphold justice should act promptly and take effective measures to compel Israel to withdraw all its troops from Lebanon immediately and unconditionally.

In southern Africa, with the backing and connivance of a superpower, the south African authorities have intensified their racist policies. They have continued their illegal occupation of Namibia and made repeated armed provocations against the military incursions into neighbouring countries, thereby posing a direct threat to the security and stability of the region. People are deeply concerned about the situation in southern Africa and, in particular, about the independence of Namibia, which will affect the historical process of the final liberation of the entire African continent.

We maintain that according to the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, Namibia should immediately achieve genuine national independence on the basis of territorial integrity and national unity; South Africa's apartheid system should be completely abolished; and the international community should apply effective comprehensive sanctions against the South African authorities. The Chinese people firmly support the just struggle of the African people, particularly the Namibian and South African people, until they win final victory.

The military conflict over the Malvinas Islands earlier this year also aroused general concern. The question of the Malvinas Islands remains unsolved despite the termination of the war. It is a reminder that although the cause of national liberation has won great victories throughout the world in the postwar period, the process of decolonization has not yet been completed. We support the request of Argentina and other Latin American countries for consideration of the question of the Malvinas Islands at the current session of the General Assembly. Argentina's claim to sovereignty over the Malvinas Islands should be respected by the international community. Together with other Third World countries, we sincerely hope that the parties concerned will seek a just and reasonable solution to this question by peaceful negotiations.

I would now say a few words about the Korean question. The Democratic People's Republic of Korea has made important contributions towards a reasonable settlement of the Korean question and the maintenance of peace in east Asia and the Pacific region. The Chinese Government firmly supports the positive proposals put forward by the Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea for the independent and peaceful reunification of Korea. We firmly support President Kim Il-song's proposal for establishing a Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo. We always hold that in order to achieve a peaceful settlement of the Korean question, the "United Nations command" must be dissolved immediately in accordance with Resolution 3390b adopted at the 30th session of the General Assembly, all U.S. military forces must be withdrawn from South Korea, and the Korean armistice agreement should be replaced by a peace agreement through negotiations between the parties concerned.

III. The Economy and Development of the Third World Countries

At present, many Third World countries are faced with deepening economic difficulties. Certain major developed countries have tried to shift their own economic difficulties on to the Third World countries and have cut back their development assistance, thus further straining North-South economic relations. The developing countries have pressed for the launching of global negotiations with a view to improving North-South relations and establishing a new international economic order. The General Assembly has long since adopted a resolution pertaining to this question and the group of 77 has also put forward a reasonable draft resolution. All this has provided a constructive basis for launching global negotiations as soon as possible.

Last year's meeting at Cancun gave expression to the common desire of the great majority of nations for launching global negotiations. At the meeting, Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang gave clear-cut support to the demand of the Third World for the establishment of a new international economic order. Owing to obstruction by a major power, no agreement on the launching of global negotiations has yet been reached. This state of affairs has caused deep disappointment and resentment among developing countries and also among quite a few developed countries.

The international community faces the important task of improving North-South economic relations through global negotiations. The economies of all countries are closely interrelated. The developed countries cannot achieve economic growth without the rich resources, vast markets and economic prosperity of the developing countries. All countries, whether rich or poor, north or south, must abide by the principle of equality and mutual benefit if they are to carry out fruitful economic exchanges and co-operation. The existing unreasonable, unfair and outdated international economic order must be restructured. The developed countries' economic aid to the developing countries conforms to their own interest and is by no means a charity. This has been recognized by more and more far-sighted people in the West. We hope that the current session will surmount obstacles and make real progress towards the launching of global negotiations.

While striving to improve North-South relations, the Third World countries also exert great efforts to promote "South-South cooperation" among themselves. The developing countries have industrious people, rich natural resources and a vast market. They share the common objective of developing their national economies. There are unlimited potentials for developing inner-Third-World co-operation. This will be highly beneficial. This kind of co-operation is an important means for the developing countries to strengthen their self-reliance both individually and collectively. It has also a vital strategic role of helping to break down the existing inequitable international economic relationship and replace it with a new international economic order.

The restructuring of the old international economic order is a demand of the times which the Third World countries are bound to raise after they have won political independence. Political independence cannot be consolidated or sustained without economic independence. Regardless of all the obstructions from imperialism and hegemonism, the Third World countries will persist in the just struggle to restructure the old international economic order until final victory.

The emergence of the Third World on the international arena after World War II is an event of primary importance of our time. In recent years, the numerous countries of the Third World, united in a common struggle, have effectively defended their national independence and state sovereignty and made major contributions towards restructuring the old international economic order as well as maintaining international peace and security. Their joint struggle has, to a great extent, changed the situation in which the superpowers could arbitrarily manipulate the destiny of the world. Events show that unity means strength.

We are convinced that so long as we Third World countries can seek a reasonable settlement to our own differences and disputes through peaceful consultations in a spirit of mutual understanding and accommodation and of seeking common ground while reserving the differences and so long as we can close our ranks and work for our common cause, we will be better able to control our own destiny and promote progress of world history. As a member of the Third World, China will continue to play her part by further expanding her friendly co-operation with other Third World countries and peoples.

Faced with increasing troubles and turmoils in the world scene, one is entitled to expect that the United Nations will uphold justice and play a greater role in maintaining world peace and international security and in promoting the growth of world economy. However, events over a period of time indicate that the role of the United Nations has been eroding. This is chiefly because certain countries have abused their veto power, by-passed the United Nations on a number of issues or refused to implement its resolutions.

In his report on the work of the organization, the secretary-general has pointed to the problems and difficulties confronting the United Nations, and has made some suggestions to uphold the principles of the charter which merit our consideration. We appreciate and support the efforts of the secretary-general and also hope that certain permanent members of the Security Council will show a more cooperative approach.

We believe that provided the overwhelming majority of the member states make common efforts to uphold the charter and wage a resolute struggle against any force that jeopardizes world peace and international security, this organization will not disappoint the people of the world, but will perform its noble duty of maintaining world peace and promoting human progress, thereby fulfilling the historical mission entrusted to it.

XINHUA CORRESPONDENT VIEWS UN GENERAL ASSEMBLY

[Text] United Nations, 15 Oct (XINHUA) -- Roundup by XINHUA correspondent Yu Minsheng [0060 3046 3932]: "A World Beset With Crises -- Sidelights on the General Debate of the 37th UN General Assembly."

The general debate of the 37th UN General Assembly ended this afternoon after a 3-week session. Heads of state or government and cabinet members from 157 nations appealed from the UN forum for efforts to alleviate the current turbulent situation in the world, oppose war and defend peace.

The world situation, as the Austrian foreign minister put it, is characterized by a "worldwide political crisis, economic crisis and organizational crisis." This is not alarmist talk. It mirrors the reality in the world today.

Representatives from various countries eloquently presented facts to show that the world is really beset with crises. The Malaysian prime minister pointed out: "Power has become the only self-evident truth. Weak countries like Afghanistan, Kampuchea and Lebanon are trodden upon by boots of invading armies. Small and weak countries live in fear, worrying about their independence, happiness and even their own survival."

Accompanying the world political crisis is the world economic problems, which caused deep concern. Some speakers from other countries pointed out that the world is facing the most serious economic crisis since the Great Depression in the 1930's. This worldwide economic crisis and recession have affected almost all countries, besetting the developing countries most seriously. The Pakistani foreign minister warned in his speech that "stagnation, recession, inflation and the daily-increasing foreign debts are like fast-spreading malignant tumors afflicting the economy of the whole globe with all ills." According to this year's UN economic publications, the growth rate of gross domestic product in the developing countries has fallen to 0.6 percent from the average rate of 5.5 percent in the 1970's. About 1 billion people in the developing countries live in abject poverty.

What has caused the current worldwide political and economic crises? Representatives from many Third and Second World countries said the policy for hegemony adopted by the two superpowers is "a permanent factor contributing to instability in the world." The Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, its support of Vietnamese invasion of Kampuchea, the U.S. support of Israeli invasion of Arab countries and its support of the South African racist regime, and the intensified arms expansion by the Soviet Union and the United States in their contention for spheres of influence -- all this is "undoubtedly the main reason for the great disorder under heaven today."

On the world economic disorder and dislocation, almost all the Third World countries pointed out that the developed Western countries, headed by the United States, bear responsibilities that cannot be shirked. Even the French premier pointed out: "In the West, there is a major power taking advantage of the chaotic situation in the international monetary system for its own interests. It formulated its own budget and monetary policy without taking into any consideration the possibility that its doing so might affect other countries."

However, the United Nations, which was set up to safeguard world peace and security, has proved incompetent in face of serious world political and economic crises. Even the UN body itself is also in crisis. Such a situation certainly worried representatives of many countries who pointed out the UN's authority has become questionable since its resolutions have failed to be implemented.

In recent years, people have seen that the principles of the UN Charter have been repeatedly violated with the aggressors going scot-free. The Soviet Union and Vietnam have refused to implement UN resolutions of the past 3 years which call for their immediate, complete and unconditional withdrawal from Afghanistan and Kampuchea respectively. Israel, backed by the United States, has all along refused to implement the UN resolutions urging it to stop its aggression against the Arab countries. The United Nations is unable to use its authority to tackle such issues as Namibian independence, disarmament, global economic negotiations, the Iran-Iraq War and the Malvinas conflict, hence causing the serious UN crisis of confidence.

Under these circumstances, many representatives criticized certain countries for seeking selfish interests in defiance of their commitments to the UN Charter. In their speeches, the representatives demanded that urgent measures should be taken for restoring the UN role in defending world peace and security.

The current world situation beset with crises has made the representatives reminiscent of the past: The great economic depression and political tension in the 1930's, developed to the point of becoming uncontrollable, had finally led to a world war ravaging the whole world. If the current world crises remain uncurbed and effectively unchecked and are allowed to develop, these crises might cause another holocaust for mankind.

Based precisely on this understanding, representatives of many countries at the general debate of the 37th UN General Assembly unanimously called for world unity to oppose the hegemonistic policies of the superpowers, eradicate the root cause of the world tension and safeguard world peace and security. They also called for an immediate convocation of global negotiations to establish a new world economic order, and expected the United Nations to play its bounden role in face of the turbulent world situation in upholding justice and righteousness, in safeguarding world peace and international security and in promoting the world economy.

RENMIN RIBAO COMMENTS ON U.S. UNEMPLOYMENT RATE

["Newsletter From America" by RENMIN RIBAO reporter Yuan Xianlu [5913 0341 4389]: "The Long Beach Ceremony and 'Political Football Games'"]

[Text] Long Beach in California is a busy port on the west coast of America.

On 8 October, a new type of container ship, "Sealand Explorer," was berthed at the wharf. Television reporters and cameramen were busily working there, for President Reagan was holding a ceremony to sign the "Export Trading Companies Act."

This ceremony was originally scheduled to be held in the White House on 6 October. But it was hastily decided that the ceremony be postponed and the place changed. There was not even time to notify anyone of this change. Why the hurry? According to a report on 8 October by THE WASHINGTON POST, "the intention was obviously to minimize the influence of the high unemployment figures announced today in Washington."

As expected, President Reagan mentioned the problem of unemployment in his speech at the ceremony. He said a piece of bad news had come on that day -- the unemployment rate had reached 10.1 percent. Then he asked people to guard against some people who would take advantage of this news to play "political football games". He said that the act he was signing could create hundreds of thousands of jobs and thus had drawn his close attention. He pledged that his government would help all those now unemployed to find jobs.

Recently, while attending campaign rallies in several states, Reagan repeatedly stressed that he attached great importance to the unemployment problem. Unemployment has become not only the prime economic problem in the United States but also the prime political problem.

The U.S. unemployment rate has been rising month after month since July last year and has topped the postwar record. This has aroused great anxiety among the U.S. public. The Reagan administration repeatedly explained that the unemployment rate would fall when the U.S. economy shook off the recession and began to recover. But the facts went against this prediction by official quarters; not only did the economy fail to recover during the spring and summer, but even now, the situation is still unpredictable. The high unemployment rate, emerging on the eve of the mid-term elections, is very unfavorable to the ruling party. Many Republican candidates have become very anxious. This is the reason why President Reagan has recently made repeated public statements on the issue of unemployment.

Before the press conference on 28 September, a U.S. reporter revealed that Reagan would not direct his speech at the unemployed, but would make use of the falling inflation and interest rates and target the currently employed as the people to win over. But these tactics now seem unworkable, because the official figures show that the unemployed in September numbered 11.3 million people. But if those "laborers who had lost faith" and failed to register as unemployed, and 6.6 million part-time people are included, the total number of unemployed is nearly 20 million people. If their families were also included, the number would be even larger. Many working people also fear that they will lose their jobs soon. It was because of this that Reagan changed his methods in his speech on 8 October and declared that he paid close attention to the unemployment problem, and even pledged to find jobs for every jobless person.

Many people in the United States do not believe in this pledge made by the President. Only a few days ago, Reagan said in a campaign rally that in the past, 4 percent was considered as a normal jobless rate, but due to the change in the economic structure, the current normal rate of unemployment should be 6 percent or even higher.

His purpose in saying this was to play down the gravity of the September jobless rate of over 10 percent. This gave people the impression that Reagan himself had conceded that there was no way of solving the unemployment problem. Many people also pointed out that there had never been full employment in U.S. history, and that the unrealistic pledge made by the President was just designed to pay lip service to the problem before the mid-term elections.

In recent speeches, Reagan blamed the high jobless rate entirely on the Democratic Party, but this did not call forth a satisfactory response. While the Democratic Party should bear some responsibility for unemployment, the generally recognized reason for the current high jobless rate is the high interest rate policies adopted by the current administration for restricting inflation which have caused the serious economic recession. As a result, Reagan changed his statement on 8 October. On the one hand, he stressed that the jobless rate when he took office was already very high. On the other hand, he said that if the Democrats recognized their responsibility, he would also recognize his.

This statement seems to be fairer than the previous ones. But, as some American reporters pointed out, while the President warned that some people would play a "political football game," the ceremony on 8 October itself was already a "political football game." The "Export Trading Company Act", which Reagan declared that he had taken very seriously, was jointly advanced by congressmen of both parties a few years ago. At that time President Carter was prepared to make it law after it was passed by Congress, but he failed to do so because he came to the end of his time in office. After assuming power, Reagan paid no attention to this act. Only when he knew that the jobless rate had broken the postwar record in late September did he decide to sign this act.

In U.S. politics, this practice is by no means strange. Now the problem is whether the Reagan administration can really solve the unemployment problem using this type of method.

REAGAN SAYS CRIME BECOMES EPIDEMIC IN U.S.

OW160801 Beijing XINHUA in English 0728 GMT 16 Oct 82

[Text] Washington, October 15 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan said that "crime today is an American epidemic" and "the power of organized crime reaches into every segment of our society."

In a speech at the Justice Department yesterday, the President announced some specific anti-crime measures, including: 12 new regional task forces to coordinate the fight against drugs and organized crime; 1,100 to 1,200 jobs for agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) and other federal organizations as well as a new national training center for them in Glynco, Georgia; eight million dollars in credits to expand 11 federal prisons to take in 1,260 additional prisoners and a 15-member Presidential Commission, including four congressmen, to coordinate the fight against organized crime on the national level.

However, observers here noted, the President avoided mentioning the root cause of the waves of crime in the U.S. -- the corrupt system of capitalism itself. The anti-crime measures he adopted are nothing but some recipes to treat symptoms but not the disease.

The President also said that crime "takes the lives of over 20,000 Americans a year, it touches nearly a third of American homes and results in about 8.8 billion dollars a year in financial losses." "Many Americans are losing faith," he said.

"The street criminal, the drug pusher, the mobster, the corrupt policemen or public official, they form their own criminal subculture," he said. "They need each other, they use each other, they protect each other."

He attacked what he called "a syndicate of organized criminals" whose power, he said, is now "reaching unparalleled heights".

Reagan continued that criminals "are confident that once their cases enter our legal system the charges will be dropped, postponed, plea-bargained away or lost in a maze of legal technicalities."

He called on the public to support his "effort to fight the drug menace, eradicate the cancers of organized crime and public corruption." But observers here held that few Americans believe that the fight will be a success.

XINHUA ANALYZES RESIGNATION OF JAPAN'S SUZUKI

["News Analysis: Suzuki's Resignation and the Political Situation in Japan" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, 15 Oct (XINHUA) -- In an unexpected move, Zenko Suzuki, president of Japan's Liberal Democratic Party [LDP], tendered his resignation as LDP president on 12 October and declared that he would not seek a second term as party leader. His decision has not only astounded both the ruling and opposition parties, but also taken the financial circles and mass media by surprise.

The 71-year-old Suzuki was elected 10th LDP president in July of 1980 and became the 70th prime minister of Japan where the political party with the majority seat in the Diet is the ruling party and its president automatically becomes the prime minister. Therefore, Suzuki's resignation means that the Suzuki Cabinet will come to an end when his tenure as the LDP president expires (on 26 November) and that a new LDP Cabinet will be formed after the next president is elected. Suzuki originally planned to seek a second term and continue at the helm of the party. His surprise resignation has caused dramatic changes in Japan's political situation and attracted worldwide attention.

Japanese public opinion believes that Suzuki's resignation was caused by mounting difficulties and formidable problems in the country. In his letter to the LDP expressing the intention not to seek a second term, Suzuki said: The situation at home and abroad is "becoming more and more threatening and difficult times lie ahead." After Suzuki took office, he put forward the administrative reform and fiscal rehabilitation program and regarded administrative reform as the "most important political tool." However, little progress has been achieved in simplifying the administration and reducing the expenditures, while financial deficits have been aggravated in his 2 years and 3 months in office. In the current economic recession, Japan's exports have declined and the total export volume in the first half of this year dropped 9.6 percent over the same period last year. Because of the failure to carry out the revenue plan, the country is facing a huge financial deficit. Recently, Suzuki declared that the government is in a "state of financial emergency." In view of the deficit in the current fiscal year (ending March 1983), which will total 19 billion dollars, the Japanese Government has been compelled to issue additional bonds to cover up the deficit. The opposition parties and some LDP circles have vehemently attacked Suzuki, accusing him of being indecisive in handling problems and failing to fulfill his promises.

The factional setup in the LDP has been rather complicated. Disputes and realignments frequently occur among the various factions. The Suzuki Cabinet has been supported by the Suzuki, Tanaka and Nakasone factions which form the mainstream and hold the majority LDP seats in the Diet.

However, the mainstream factions have been constantly challenged by the Fukuda, Komoto and Nakagawa factions -- the nonmainstream factions. According to press reports, at a recent meeting of the LDP Supreme Advisory Council, Nobusuke Kishi, Takeo Fukuda and Takeo Miki, three former prime ministers, and other party senior members and influential personages of the nonmainstream factions demanded Suzuki's resignation, which would inevitably cause a confrontation between the mainstream and the nonmainstream factions. Under such circumstances, Suzuki realized that even if he could win a second term as party leader, the "infighting with the LDP would escalate." Hence, Suzuki took the initiative to tender the resignation, thus accelerating the succession of the Cabinet and making way for other LDP leaders to assume the office.

Suzuki's resignation has created instability in Japan's political situation. The election of LDP president is held once every two years and 16 October is the day on which the LDP will announce the election of the next president. At present, LDP factions are maneuvering and organizing forces. It is still difficult to predict who will become the next LDP president. According to common practice in the past, the president must be from the mainstream factions. It is reported that to avoid confrontation and a stalemate, the new president may be elected through readjustment and consultations within the LDP. The financial circles hope that the ruling party will stop infighting in view of the current economic recession and difficult tasks of administrative reform and financial rehabilitation. They have also pointed out that the current political situation in Japan is at a crucial hour and that the LDP should elect a new president as soon as possible in order to "avoid the creation of a political blank" and solve problems facing Japan today.

PRC-FRG TRADE 'DEVELOPS RAPIDLY' SINCE 1972

[Text] Bonn, 8 Oct -- Since China and West Germany established diplomatic relations in 1972, the trade between the two countries has developed rapidly. The trade volume between the two countries in 1981 was $2,340 million, an increase of 750 percent over 1972, when the trade volume was $270 million.

In recent years, PRC-FRG trade has been kept at a fairly high level, though China's national economy is in a period of readjustment. In 1981, China's exports to West Germany totalled $780 million, an increase of 10.2 percent over 1980; while China's imports from West Germany were $1,560 million, up 17 percent from 1980. West Germany has become China's largest trade partner in Europe.

In the 10 years since the two countries established diplomatic relations, the commodity lineup in the PRC-FRG trade has changed somewhat. In the past, China's export goods to West Germany were primarily local and livestock products, grains, edible oils, light industrial goods and a small quantity of mineral and chemical products. In addition to those commodities, China's export goods to West Germany in recent years have also included industrial raw materials, such as coal, chemicals, oil products, heavy water and low-energy unanium. For many years, China has been importing from West Germany a large quantity of complete sets of equipment, machinery, rolled steel, chemicals, fertilizers, dyestuff and agricultural chemicals.

Interregional economic and trade relations between China and West Germany have also developed rapidly. The West Germany states of Hesse, Baden-Wuerttemberg and Lower Saxony have separately established economic ties with China's Jiangxi, Liaoning and Anhui Provinces respectively. In 1981, Baden-Wuerttemberg State held an industrial exhibition in Shenyang and reached an agreement with Liaoning Province on forming a coordination group for economic and technical cooperation, thus creating a favorable condition for their economic cooperation.

In May 1982, the Chinese delegation, headed by State Councillor and Minister for Economic and Trade Relations with Foreign Countries Chen Muhua, attended the second meeting of the Mixed Commission of Economic Cooperation between the two countries in Bonn. At the meeting, the two sides reached an agreement on setting up a PRC-FRG coal cooperation group. Both sides held identical view that their economic cooperation and trade have vast prospects.

FRG'S KOHL OUTLINES DOMESTIC, FOREIGN POLICY

[Text] Bonn, Oct. 13 (XINHUA) -- Chancellor Helmut Kohl, in his first government statement, today outlined his domestic and foreign policy. In his speech to the Parliament, the new chancellor said that the foundation of West German foreign and security policy is the North Atlantic Treaty Alliance and friendship with the United States which he will visit this year.

Kohl said his government's chief objective was to achieve the lowest possible military balance "through negotiated, realistic, just and verifiable means."

The new chancellor said he fully supports NATO's December 1979 decision to reduce medium-range arms, and the zero option, involving a withdrawal of all nuclear weapons from the European theatre.

Only when the Soviet Union realizes there will be American systems stationed by the end of 1983 can it be counted on in arms-reduction negotiations, he said. Kohl pledged to support the NATO decision to deploy U.S. cruise and Pershing missiles in Western Europe.

The chancellor appealed to the Soviet Union to give a positive reply to the Western proposal. The government pays special attention to its relations with the Soviet Union, but will not ignore the obstacles caused by the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and the development in Poland, especially the over build-up of Soviet military forces, Kohl said.

West Germany will continue to strengthen its economic relations with the Soviet Union and other members of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance, he added.

"We want a new impetus towards European unity. Our objective remains the political union of Europe," Kohl said.

West Germany will strengthen cooperations with Third World countries, the chancellor noted.

Kohl announced measures to combat the worst economic crisis in the history of West Germany. Unemployment could rise from 1.82 million last month to 2.5 million this winter. To combat record postwar unemployment and create new jobs, Kohl suggested stimulating private and public investment and easing the tax burden on small- and medium-size businesses.

The chancellor also announced that he will call early general elections in March next year.

SHULTZ MEETS WITH ISRAELI FOREIGN MINISTER

OW151340 Beijing XINHUA in English 1235 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] Washington, October 14 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz met Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhaq Shamir today to discuss plans for the withdrawal of foreign forces from Lebanon.

During the four-hour meeting, two hours longer than scheduled, Shultz and Shamir agreed to set up a U.S.-Israeli joint working group to "examine the Israeli proposals and the U.S. ideas."

Israel has put forward various conditions for the withdrawal of its forces from Lebanon. It demanded "security arrangements in Lebanon related to the withdrawal of all foreign forces" from that country. It also insisted on a security zone in south Lebanon to be policed by Lebanese authorities with a prominen role for Israeli-backed forces led by Major Saad Haddad.

The idea, however, is reportedly opposed by the new Lebanese Government of President Amin al-Jumayyil and the United States, because a continued role for the Israeli-backed Haddad's forces, they believe, will enable Israel to maintain control over south Lebanon. But the United States supported Isarel's demand for security, saying "Israel has to be satisfied" in that respect.

A statement of the State Department today said: "The secretary and foreign minister undertook these discussions in a spirit of consultation, discussing what each side thought, seeking as much common ground as possible."

Shamir told reporters after the meeting that he and Shultz "agreed that we have to make efforts to get a solution as promptly as possible."

"The goal is to get a withdrawal of all foreign forces from all parts of Lebanon, including the southern part of Lebanon," Shamir said.

In addition to Lebanon, Shultz and Shamir discussed in general President Reagan's Middle East initiative, which has been rejected by the Begin government.

Shultz and Shamir also agreed to meet again, probably this weekend, to review the results of the joint working group.

Shamir will meet Vice President George Bush and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger tomorrow.

[Text] Washington, 17 Oct (XINHUA) -- U.S. Secretary of State Shultz issued a statement on 16 October threatening that the United States would withdraw from the UN General Assembly if it votes to expel Israel.

Shultz said: As a result of Israel being denied of its credentials at the 26th International Atomic Energy Agency Conference last month, the United States has stopped providing funds to that agency. The United States will take similar action if Israel is expelled from the UN Telecommunications Union Conference in Nairobi or from other UN bodies.

The current UN General Assembly originally scheduled to take a vote on 18 October on the report submitted by the Credentials Committee. Shultz has appealed to various member nations to ignore the motion to expel Israel.

PERUVIAN PRIME MINISTER DISCUSSES VISIT

TV Interview

HK141242 Beijing Domestic Television Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 9 Oct 82

[Interview With Peruvian Prime Minister Manuel Ulloa Elias -- read by announcer]

[Text] [Question] Prime Minister Ulloa, first of all, I wish to welcome you on behalf of the listeners and viewers of the Chinese International Broadcasting Station and the Central Television Station. We also wish to congratulate you on the success you scored during your visit to China. It has been 11 years since China and Peru established diplomatic relations and you are the first head of state to visit China since the establishment of relations. We understand you had extensive and friendly talks with the Chinese leaders during your visit. Now we hope you could tell us something about the successes you have scored during this visit.

[Answer] The principal purpose of our visit to China is to seek to maintain a close, permanent and friendly relationship with the Chinese Government and the Chinese people. We discussed not only the political relations between China and Peru, but also the relations between China and Latin America. I feel that we fully agreed with each other in all the principal aims we wanted to achieve.

Our government is in favor of and encourages the wish of the Chinese for unification. We believe China and the people of Latin America will stand on the same side. We are now more united, especially after the occupation of the Malvinas by a foreign power. The governments and peoples of Peru and other Latin American countries fully support Argentina's lawful sovereignty over the Malvinas. We believe reason will eventually triumph in the settlement of this question and that Argentina will eventually regain her sovereignty over the Malvinas.

We are happy about the Chinese Government's support and friendly attitude toward the Peruvian Government headed by President Belaunde. Looking at it from this angle, we are very satisfied with the results achieved in this visit. Meanwhile, we were very happy to learn last night that Premier Zhao Ziyang said the Chinese Government also considered this visit a success. On the economic side, we agreed that we must step up the relations between us. We must study in greater detail how we can purchase more Chinese goods so as to achieve a balance of trade between our two countries. Minister Chen Muhua as well as Premier Zhao Ziyang felt that we should exchange delegations to decide on the way to promote trade between our two countries within a short time.

On the cultural side, I am glad that we had the honor to see for ourselves the great creations of the Chinese people, which are the result of their admirable efforts. We believe that all these efforts and work will be used to create a fairer world in the future. The Chinese people's efforts and sacrifices are for building a better future for China. We believe the Chinese people and their leaders will definitely achieve this aim. Our two countries will achieve good results in this respect. We have opened new channels, sowed the seeds and we will reap the fruits.

I think China is well experienced in agriculture and such experience, which is very important to Peru, will no doubt become even richer. Peru is also an old country with several thousand years of civilization and with a prosperous agriculture. I feel we can not only learn from your rich experience in this respect, but also purchase from you tractors, agricultural machinery and other things to develop our agriculture.

Politically, we have also scored this success: We agreed that China can become a locomotive to lead the Third World toward making a fairer world. China as well as Latin America have eliminated colonialism and have expressed our will for independence. We want a fairer and better world. It is of great historical significance that China and Latin America are getting closer to one another, because both areas will have a greater voice in the world in the days to come.

I believe there is a very important condition for our two countries to develop a closer relationship, that is, the two governments and peoples must understand one another. All other aspects are only the result of this condition. I feel we have made a great step forward in this area.

This time, we saw in Beijing many things which are important to you. For example, we saw the great works of art created by your ancestors and the efforts they made, which served only a small number of people in the past. But today, such efforts are used to create a great country, which no doubt will make people marvel in the future. We visited your Great Wall yesterday, and we understand that it was for defending your territorial integrity. This is of great significance. We can also see that the Chinese people today are also making efforts to maintain the country's territorial integrity.

[Reporter] Finally, please allow me to thank you on behalf of the listeners and viewers of the Chinese International Broadcasting Station and the Central Television Station for the interview you have granted us. Thank you.

ZHANG AIPING ON MODERNIZATION OF STRATEGIC ARMS

OW190429 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1238 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, 18 Oct (XINHUA) -- According to an 18 October JIEFANGJUN BAO report, Comrade Zhang Aiping, in an interview with a JIEFANGJUN BAO reporter, said: "During the period between our launching of a carrier rocket from the motherland's northwestern region to the South Pacific in 1980 and the recent successful underwater submarine launch, our technology underwent a qualitative change and leaped forward. It shows that our carrier rocket has attained a new level and our national defense capability has been further enhanced."

He pointed out that the recent successful launch is conducive not only to China's security but also to world peace.

Zhang Aiping told the reporter: Our development of strategic arms is not for the purpose of aggression against others. As we are constantly in possible danger of an enemy invasion, how can we hesitate to improve our weapons and equipment as soon as possible and accelerate the modernization of our national defense? In past armed struggles led by our party, we -- for a long period -- used inferior equipment to fight better equipped enemies. However, the party never overlooked the improvement of our arns and equipment. While making full use of our available arms and equipment, we always did what we could to improve and develop arms and equipment first to make them gradually closer to those of the enemies and then to make them better than the enemies'.

Zhang Aiping pointed out: Since the smashing of the "gang of four," particularly since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we have made efforts to improve our arms. Our conventional arms, particulary our army weaponry, are not much inferior to others' and we can depend on them to resist any enemy invaders. We have also established certain defensive capability in terms of strategic weapons. We may positively say that, with the development of our national economy, our arms and equipment will attain a new level of modernization within a short period. This will be done by our national defense scientific research and industrial workers under the guidance of the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress and with the attention and support of the whole party, the whole country and the whole army.

Zhang Aiping said that to improve arms and equipment and accelerate the modernization of our national defense requires science, technology and intellectuals.

He said: We should bring into full play the initiative, wisdom and talents of the national defense scientific researchers and industrial personnel. We should also organize all PLA commanders and fighters to strive to raise their scientific and cultural level while constantly raising their ideological and political consciousness and strengthening their military training. Only in this way can we accelerate the accomplishment of the glorious task to modernize our national defense.

Zhang Aiping said: The development of national defense scientific research and industries must be based on the national economy and done according to our capability.

He also said that the development of the most advanced science and technology for national defense will in turn promote the development of conventional weapons and promote the development of science and technology for national economic construction.

PLA GENERAL LOGISTICS DEPARTMENT HOLDS MEETING

Politics in Command Inaccurate

OW181138 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0738 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, 18 Oct (XINHUA) -- In his speech at an enlarged standing committee meeting of the party committee of the PLA General Logistics Department, Wang Ping, first secretary of the party committee and political commissar of the department, pointed out: In studying and implementing the guidelines laid down by the 12th party congress, it is necessary to correctly understand the relationship between politics and economics in order to ensure the realization of the strategic objective in economic construction.

Wang Ping said: The slogan of putting politics in command has been mentioned for many years and has been deeply imprinted on people's minds. Now that the emphasis of our work has been shifted to economic construction, it appears that this slogan can no longer give an accurate and scientific expression of the relationship between politics and economics. In his opening speech at the 12th party congress, Comrade Deng Xiaoping dealt with three major tasks for the 1980's and penetratingly analyzed the relationships among them. He clearly pointed out: "Economic construction is at the core of these tasks as it is the basis for the solution of China's external and domestic problems." Marxism holds that politics, which belong to the category of the superstructure, is determined by the economic base and serves the latter. The proletariat first wants to seize political power and then to improve it. It is in this sense that politics should be put in the first place. This is because there will be no socialist economic construction without political power. However, after shifting the emphasis of our work to economic construction, we should carry out economic construction as the central task and should no longer put politics in command. Now politics must be subordinate to economic construction and ensure the development of the economy. In the 10 years of turmoil, the sentence that politics cannot but have precedence over economics was repeatedly quoted, but it was quoted out of context. If this sentence is understood in terms of absolutes and held universally as if politics should be put in the first place at all times, in all places and under all circumstances, one will make mistakes. This is the ABC's of Marxism. However, this question has been confused under the influence of "leftist" mistakes. How should we straighten out this distorted idea?

Wang Ping also stressed: Not to put politics in command absolutely does not mean that political institutions and political cadres will have nothing to do. On the contrary, political work is very important. In his opening speech at the 12th party congress, Comrade Deng Xiaoping emphasized that from now on it is necessary diligently to do the following four things: "To restructure the administration and the economic set-up and make the ranks of cadres more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent; to build a socialist spiritual civilization; to strike at criminal activities in the economic and other fields that undermine socialism; and to rectify party style and consolidate the party organization on the basis of a conscientious study of the new party constitution. These will be the most important guarantee for our adherence to the socialist road and the concentration of our efforts on modernization." These four things are very rich in content and set ever more arduous tasks for us to carry out in political work. Only when we do these four things well will we be able to adhere to the socialist orientation and ensure the realization of the strategic objective in economic construction.

Wang Ping, Hong Xuezhi Speak

[Text] Wang Ping, first secretary of the party committee of the PLA General Logistics Department and political commissar of the department, and Hong Xuezhi, second secretary of the party committee and director of the PLA General Logistics Department, delivered speeches at a recent enlarged session of the standing committee of their department's party committee.

They emphatically pointed out: The guidelines of the 12th party national congress are the basis for, and guide to, all work of the whole party, the entire army and the people throughout the country. To fulfill those guidelines and make new contributions to the army's revolutionization, modernization and regularization, we should maintain a political unanimity with the party Central Committee, act in line with the guidelines of the 12th party national congress, and strive to create a new situation in all fields of our logistical work.

Comrade Wang Ping said: To maintain political unanimity with the party Central Committee, we must do the following three things: 1) It is necessary for us to have a real and firm grasp of the ideological theory and submit our organizations to the party Central Committee's line, principles, policies and resolutions. This is a minimal requirement. We can conscientiously implement them only when we gain a clear understanding. 2) We are required to integrate the party Central Committee's policy decisions with the concrete conditions in our own units and exert vigorous efforts to carry out those decisions and ensure positive results. 3) It is imperative to persistently combat all erroneous tendencies, eliminate interference from all sectors, continually do away with the influence of leftist ideas and ensure the correct implementation of the 12th party national congress line.

Comrade Hong Xuezhi put forward a five-point opinion on how to create a new situation in all fields of the army's logistical work under the guidelines of the 12th party national congress. He said: 1) It is necessary to have the spirit to create a new situation. Only when we have a complete new mental outlook, can we have a reliable ideological guarantee for creating a new situation. 2) We should have a leading group and the necessary competent personnel to create a new situation. While carrying out reorganization measures to simplify administrative channels, we should readjust the leading groups at all levels, take in fresh blood so that those cadres can shoulder the responsibility for creating a new situation. 3) We should have a structural system in the process of creating a new situation, gain a deep understanding of the importance and necessity of carrying out reorganization aimed at simplifying the administration, and set up simplified and rational organizations that have better work efficiency. 4) It is necessary to work out measures and plans to create a new situation and conduct investigation and study so that we can have a clear understanding of basic conditions. We should proceed from the realities to work out feasible plans for the task. 5) We should have the work style needed in creating a new situation, immediately start with ourselves, pay attention to practical results, adhere to principles and resist unhealthy practices.

On Studying Congress Documents

[Excerpts] Beijing, 18 Oct (XINHUA) -- The party committee of the PLA General Logistics Department recently held an enlarged meeting of its standing committee. At the meeting, the participants seriously studied the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress. They are determined to adhere to the guidelines of the congress in striving to create a new situation in PLA logistics work.

The meeting was held from 23 September to 17 October. It used Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening speech to the 12th CPC National Congress as a general guide and repeatedly studied the documents of the congress to thoroughly understand their guidelines. In consideration of the reality of the thinking and work of various units and individuals the meeting then summarized experiences, conducted criticism and self-criticism, and discussed and studied measures and plans for creating a new situation in all fields of the General Logistics Department.

The comrades present at the meeting unanimously held: The guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congress are the guide and basis for all work of the whole party, the whole army and the whole country.

Our first important task -- at present and for a period henceforth -- is to organize the study of the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress well. With the study as a basis, we should, in view of the actual situation of our thinking and work, use the guidelines of the congress to arm our minds, guide our actions and judge everything. We should always adhere to the guidelines. Practice is the sole criterion for examining truth. It is our deeds and achievements, not our words, which will show whether we have studied the congress documents well. To study the congress documents we must adhere to the Marxist fundamental principle of integrating theory with practice, truly identify ourselves ideologically and politically with the party Central Committee and constantly create a new situation in our work.

EDITORIAL DISCUSSES QUADRUPLING OUTPUT

HK181318 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 18 Oct 82 pp 1, 4

[Editorial: "Answering a Question -- Why It Is Possible To Achieve Quadrupling"]

[Text] In discussions on the 12th party congress documents, the question of how to achieve the quadrupling of total industrial and agricultural output value in the 20 years from 1981 to the end of the century is a hot topic. The whole country is talking about quadrupling, discussing the long-term prospects, establishing heroic ambitions and buzzing with enthusiasm. This is very encouraging.

However, there are a few comrades who ask: Is it possible to achieve quadrupling? Is this another "high target?" Another "adventure?" They are worried because in 1958 the slogan to "double steel output" was put forward, which developed into the "Great Leap Forward," and the result was 3 years of difficulties; and in 1978 slogans such as "build 10 Daqings" by the end of the century were put forward, for which there are still no valid arguments and which, far from stimulating economic development, increased the difficulties in economic readjustment. Will the proposal for quadrupling now put forward follow the same old disastrous road?

It is understandable that these comrades should put forward these doubts. Since some people (even though they are very few in number) have raised this issue, we have the responsibility to explain clearly the basis for the possibility of quadrupling total industrial and agricultural output value by the end of the century, to enable them to understand why the target of endeavor put forward by the 12th party congress can be accomplished, whereas certain slogans advanced in 1958 and 1978 could not be accomplished. In advocating serious study of the 12th party congress documents, we want to grasp these major issues and discuss them, so as to enhance people's ideological understanding and take the study deeper step by step. This is essential for unifying the understanding of the whole party, working in concert to implement the 12th party congress spirit and accomplishing our strategic goal.

Achieving quadrupling in 20 years means that the total value of industrial and agricultural output should rise by an annual average of 7.2 percent. This, of course, is no light matter, but is certainly not a "high target" incapable of accomplishment. In fact, from 1953 when China began its First 5-Year Plan, to 1981, the total value of industrial and agricultural production rose annually by 8.1 percent despite frequent sabotage done to economic development, and especially the serious sabotage done by the "Great Cultural Revolution." Of course, certain figures included false components during these years, but in general it should be affirmed that our speed was relatively fast despite the many twists and turns in our economic development. As for the 3 years 1979-81, this was a period of economic readjustment and our growth rate slowed down, yet the annual increase in total value of industrial and agricultural production still reached 6.7 percent. It is evident that envisaging an annual growth rate of 7.2 percent in industrial and agricultural output value from now until the year 2000 is not a "high target."

Looking at foreign data, total value of social production in the Soviet Union quadrupled in the 20 years from 1956-75, growing at an annual rate of 7.5 percent. The rate of growth of the Soviet economy has been described as not very fast, but the speed we are envisaging is lower than that of the Soviet Union. Japan's economic growth rate has been described as relatively fast; it quadrupled in just over 10 years, from 1957-70, growing at an annual rate of 10.4 percent. Later the speed declined due to the effect of the economic crisis of world capitalism. The speed we are envisaging is also lower than that attained by Japan. It is obvious that our plans are based on the actual conditions in China and are not "high targets."

These comparisons can explain the issue. We are not prepared to expound on the possibility of quadrupling from the fundamental issue of differences in historical conditions, as reference material for readers in studying and discussing the 12th party congress documents.

Marxism tells us that when analyzing any social issue it is essential to set it within a definite historical framework. The "Great Leap Forward" of 1958 was a product of "leftist" errors in the central leadership work at that time, and was put forward as an inevitable "high tide of economic construction" following the 1957 rectification movement. And it was precisely in that rectification movement that the antirightist struggle was seriously inflated; the whole country, taken by surprise, experienced a large-scale class struggle; and the democratic centralism of the party and state had already begun to be sabotaged. In these circumstances, the party's work focus was by no means placed on economic construction, and the "leap forward" in the national economy was proposed on the basis of political guesswork and requirements; there was a great lack of understanding of the laws of economic development and the basic stage of the country's economy. Although afterward the entire manpower and material of the country was mobilized for "a big battle for iron and steel," that was not serious economic construction. Of course the 1958 "Great Leap Forward" was by no means completely devoid of economic success, since many new industrial bases, departments and technologies started to emerge during the movement. However, it cannot but be admitted that actions such as the "big battle for iron and steel" were actually political movements involving high pressure and false reporting at many levels. When "organizing a new leap forward" was proposed at the beginning of 1978, this had not undergone any exposition and proof or any calculation; the demand was just set for "creating 10 Daqings" and for doubling steel output in 8 years, and even completely irresponsible empty slogans such as "basically accomplishing agricultural mechanization by 1980" were put forward again. These too were a reflection of the "leftist" guiding ideology of the principal central leading comrade at the time. The "gang of four" had then only been smashed 1 year or so, and investigatory work was still in progress; large numbers of miscarriages of justice had not yet been corrected or their victims rehabilitated; a whole series of issues of right or wrong in theory and policy had not been clarified; the party's democratic centralism had not yet been restored; and a new personality cult was underway. In these circumstances, the question of economic construction was by no means studied seriously, and the masses, especially the peasants, urgently needed rest and recuperation after the 10-year catastrophe. The state was unable to make a lot of capital available, nor could it suddenly expand its exports by a great volume or draw in large amounts of foreign investment for building a number of "big projects." Fortunately, the central authorities promptly discovered this error and put forward the principle of "readjusting, restructuring, reorganizing and upgrading" the national economy, with the result that no great losses were sustained in actual work.

The historical conditions under which the 12th party congress has proposed quadrupling are entirely different from those in 1958 and 1978. After the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the party started to carry out all-round, resolute and carefully considered work to bring order out of chaos, and achieved a great historical turning point.

The first hallmark of this turning point is that our party has, in ideology, resolutely broken through the serious bindings of dogmatism and personality cult which had existed for a long time and reestablished the Marxist ideological line of seeking truth from facts, with the result that vigorous creative forces have been gained in all fields of work. Our party has solved decisively and properly many major problems which had been wrongly handled for a long time and eliminated a whole series of major factors adversely affecting stability and unity, with the result that our state has entered a new era of political stability.

After carrying out essential readjustments in the organization and rectification of work style, inner-party life has been gradually normalized, the party's system of democratic centralism has been fundamentally restored and collective leadership has replaced individual, arbitrary decision. The focus of the party's various kinds of work has been resolutely and seriously shifted onto economic construction since 1979. From the central authorities to the local leading organs at all levels, major efforts have been made to study and solve economic problems, and "leftist" guiding ideology which existed for a long time in economic work is being rectified. Our country's economy has begun to proceed along a path which suits national conditions, progresses in an orderly way, stresses practical effects and develops steadily. In particular, our party has summed up the historical experiences of many past years, integrated Marxist general principles with the actual situation of our country and made promising steps in proceeding along our own path and building socialism with Chinese characteristics. It is under these new historical conditions that the CPC Central Committee put forth the proposal of quadrupling output. This idea was not the fantastic idea of an individual, but a decision discussed and finally adopted by the CPC Central Committee after summing up historical experiences and carrying out extensive surveys and investigations. Thus, we have strong grounds to say that quadrupling output is not a repeat of the reckless actions in 1958 and 1978, but on the contrary, is a practical target of struggle put forth after learning from the lessons of the two reckless actions. It does not mean "high quotas," "telling lies," or "empty talk," but is practical and feasible.

The various plans or tentative ideas for economic development put forth under completely different historical conditions certainly have many qualitative differences. Comparing the proposal of quadrupling output put forth during the 12th party congress with the "Great Leap Forward" in 1958 and the "10-year plan" put forth in 1978, we can see that the required speed of development is completely different. The 1958 plan called for doubling steel production, on an annual growth of 100 percent. Obviously, this was absurd. In 1978, it was demanded that total industrial output be increased by 10 percent annually, among which steel production was to be increased from 31.78 million tons in 1978 to 60 million tons in 1985, and oil production from 100 million tons in 1978 to 250 million tons in 1985. This manifested subjectivism and the demands were groundless. The idea of quadrupling output put forth at the 12th party congress has not proposed any groundless quotas for growth of products. For example, the output of raw coal and steel is only to be increased by 100 percent in 20 years, an annual increase of 3-4 percent. These cannot be regarded as high quotas because these speeds have been attained in the past by normal strenuous efforts and also can be attained in the future with the same efforts.

Another difference is that, in both 1958 and 1978, demands were not put forth in accordance with the law of planned and proportionate development. Quotas were proposed independently of each other, in an attempt to achieve a situation in which "once the headrope of a fishing net is pulled up, all its mesh opens," and making the miracle of "once a horse has taken the lead, the others will follow full steam." As a result, economic laws were violated, which were bound to punish us. Now, the departments in charge of planning are repeatedly achieving a comprehensive balance, not promoting "taking steel production as the key link," "taking grain production as the key link," or "advancing together in everything," or "quadrupling output of everything everywhere."

On the contrary, they have put forth different tentative plans in accordance with the interrelationship between various economic departments and the actual situation of our country's various economic departments. For example, by the end of the century, steel production and the total energy output are only expected to be increased by 100 percent over that of 1980; a higher growth rate is not expected; the output of the main products of the engineering industry is expected to increase by several hundred percent; and the newly established industrial departments such as electronics, communications, nuclear power, petrochemicals, modern materials and so on are expected to develop rapidly. This difference is sufficient to point out that the idea of quadrupling is not an arbitrary and subjective decision, but has been cautiously proposed in accordance with the economic laws and the actual situation and is practical and feasible.

Another difference is that the quotas put forth in the past emphasized figures in the accounting books, while the demands put forth today lay stress on incessantly improving economic returns. It was clearly pointed out in Comrade Hu Yaobang's report: "Strive to quadruple the whole country's annual industrial and agricultural output under the premise of incessantly improving economic returns." This is a very important premise. When talking about the speed of development being divorced from economic returns, speed is bound to be exaggerated. We will never do such silly things as harming both the people and the country by pursuing a high growth rate of output, filling up the storerooms with unmarketable goods and suffering losses in order to obtain undeserved reputation. It is exactly because of this that the 12th party congress put forth the idea of "shifting all kinds of economic work onto the path of improving economic returns," and appropriate measures. This is very important.

Still another difference is that the past economic plans did not give much consideration to improving the living standards of the people. The "Great Leap Forward" promoted in 1958 was carried out regardless of the people's living standards and greatly dampened the masses' initiative. Thus, it could not be realized. The current plans are drawn up in accordance with the fundamental principle of "food comes first, construction comes second." The 12th party congress takes incessantly fulfilling the masses' growing material and cultural demands as the fundamental goal of socialist production and construction. In view of the long-term situation, after the target of quadrupling output has been achieved, the income of the people in both the urban and rural areas in our country will be increased by 100 percent and they will be comparatively better off, with a higher standard in their material and cultural lives. In view of the short-term situation, in the wake of the state's economic improvements and, in particular the rapid restoration and development of the rural economy, living conditions of the urban and rural population have been improved and further improvements are also expected. The broad masses of the people more deeply feel that the socialist modernization cause is their own concern. This sense of being the master is one of the important guarantees for realizing the plan of quadrupling output.

Certainly, the quadrupling of output put forth at the present stage is still just a goal. However, this plan has not been made by inferring past figures. When the conditions of the times differ, the base will differ, and there will be different demands for quality and quantity, variety, return and distribution. Thus, although quadrupling output is feasible, we must make a series of cautious preparations in order to turn feasibility into reality and adopt a series of measures which are closely coordinated with various fields. The report of the 12th party congress did not just simply put forth a target of struggle, it also proposed what should be done to realize this target, the necessary deployment and questions of principle which must be solved.

The report of the 12th party congress also emphatically pointed out that it is necessary to unswervingly implement the principle of "readjusting, restructuring, reorganizing and upgrading" during the Sixth 5-Year Plan, extensively carry out technical renovation among the enterprises, gradually launch the reform of the system of business management and complete rationalization of the structural organization of enterprises and economic structure in various fields during the Seventh 5-Year Plan, and throughout the 1980's, carry out a series of essential capital construction projects in the areas of energy, transportation and so on, give publicity to education on primary obligations and develop education in various fields at all levels and "tackle" major problems in a series of significant scientific and technological projects. In light of this, we see that realizing the magnificient target of quadrupling in the next 20 years is not as empty and reckless as in 1958 and 1978, but is based on a great deal of practical and well-organized work.

After making an analysis of the different historical conditions and the qualitative difference of methods of economic work adopted under different historical conditions, we can see that the 12th party congress' proposal of quadrupling output is completely different from the "Great Leap Forward" in 1958 and the "New Leap Forward" in 1978. We should not be afraid of making long-term plans for economic development because we have made mistakes of "high quotas" in the past. One of the superior features of the socialist system is the implementation of a planned economy. If we divorce economy from planning, and divorce planning from long-term plans, will there still be a planned economy or will the superior features of a socialist system still exist? The reason for the past failures was not that there were plans, but that there was not a realistic plan. We must, by means of conscientious study and discussion, clearly understand that quadrupling does not mean "high quotas" of "reckless advance," but that it has a scientific foundation and is feasible. Each of our enterprises and each of our citizens should make arduous efforts for realizing this great plan. Undoubtedly, the great target put forth during the 12th party congress is not empty talk and will not be easily achieved. In the course of realizing this target, we are bound to encounter various difficulties. It is because of this that we must act according to the demands of the 12th party congress to fully popularize to the masses our strategic targets and strategic deployment so that people of various nationalities throughout the country will "more clearly see our prosperous future and will go all out to greet the era of new economic development," as laid down in the report of the 12th party congress.

HONGQI ARTICLE VIEWS WORKERS' CONGRESSES

[Article by Yu Yannan published in HONGQI: "Workers' Congresses Must Exercise Rights"]

[Text] In each of China's state-run enterprises, a workers' congress is encouraged to take part in management and to supervise, elect and dismiss the business administration. Since the provisional regulations concerning workers' congresses were issued by the party Central Committee and the State Council about one year ago, the number of congresses has reached more than 101,000. Congresses are found in nearly all large and medium-sized industrial enterprises in Beijing, Tianjin, Shanghai, Shenyang, Harbin, Guangzhou, Nanjing, and Chongqing -- China's major industrial cities.

So far, however, only a small percentage function well. Workers and staff members in many enterprises complain that the workers' congresses exist only in name, and that democratic management has yet to be realized in their units.

For instance, when the congresses in some enterprises are considering how to assign housing, members of the leadership still want to interfere.

Because they can do little that is practical for their co-workers, some congress representatives have lost their pride in being elected and no longer want to take part.

There is an urgent need to improve the system, enabling the multitudes of workers and other employees to enjoy their democratic rights.

Where little has been achieved by the workers' congresses, the leading administrators are mainly to blame. They fear their power would be limited by the congresses. In some enterprises, everything is still up to the party committee, and can be brought to the workers' congress only after the party committee has decide how to handle it.

Some cadres regard the workers congresses as their tools. Whenever they have problems they cannot solve by themselves, or they fear production targets will be missed, they ask the congresses to encourage the workers. But they are not interested in democratic management, thinking the voice of the masses would disturb the work of the factory director. Some cadres still refuse to grant workers management rights, believing that only the manager or director should be responsible for the business of state-run enterprises.

Workers' Rights

Socialist public ownership, under which the workers are the masters of the means of production, is not an abstract idea. It should enable workers and other employees to use various methods of managing their enterprises effectively. The people's rights include not only labour, education, social security and so on, but also the management of business, cultural and educational institutions. To implement democratic management, fundamentally, is to persist with the concept that the working class is the master of the means of production.

State-run enterprises belong to the whole nation, and employees of such enterprises are part of the nation. They are also directly responsible for the management of their enterprises. Because they have close relations with the means of production, with the production process, and with production results, they should have more say on how to use the means of production, to improve techniques, and to enhance economic results of the enterprises where they work.

The management of state-run enterprises manifests itself, on the one hand, through unified state plans, policies and decrees, through instructions from higher authorities, and through the direct function played by the directors of these enterprises. It is shown, on the other hand, through democratic management by the workers and staff of the enterprises in accordance with regulations and rules set by the state and higher authorities and through proper organizational forms. Therefore, the roles of the congresses and the directors are not contradictory. They should work together so as to connect the interests of the state, the collective and the individuals.

At present, the system of workers' congress is a fundamental one in guaranteeing that the working class will act as masters of our society.

Wishes

Suppression of democratic rights and disagreements between workers and their leaders are the main causes of workers' inactivity in both policis and production. Where the style of party leadership has not yet improved, where a few cadres are priviledged, where nepotism affects promotion and housing, where even corruption and economic crimes occur, there the masses yearn to replace unworthy cadres and to punish the corrupt. The workers' congresses provide them with a tribune to help them realize their democratic rights.

This is why they are eager to see the practical establishment of workers' congresses. Their aspiration is fully justified, and fully accords with the party's programme to achieve a high level of socialist democracy in China.

Each enterprise should perfect its own congress in adherence to the provisional regulations issued by the central government: Each should also follow regulations concerning factory directors' work in state-run enterprises and regulations concerning party organizational work in industrial enterprises.

Grassroots experience in establishing congresses should be carefully studied. Good experience should be recommended to other enterprises. In recent years, the most important thing done by workers' congresses is to comment on and appraise factory cadres. This merits much of our attention.

Workers' congresses have provided the masses with an opportunity to educate themselves. They should try to raise their managerial competence.

XUE MUQIAO IN HONGQI ON BUILDING SOCIALISM

HK160238 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 16 Oct 82 p 4

["Opinion" column article: "China Will Have To Go Her Own Way in Building Socialism"]

[Text] Great progress has been made under socialism in the 33 years since liberation.

But China is still a developing nation in which peasants constitute the majority, Xue Muqiao, the economist and vice-president of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, says in an article in the latest HONGQI (RED FLAG), [No 19] the official party magazine.

Xue says that for China to build a modernized, socialist nation with a high state of civilization and democracy, she will have to go her own way, working from the facts and constructing a socialist society with distinctive Chinse features. These will be evident in three areas.

The first is the system of ownership. China, because of the low and unbalanced production level, can neither establish a public ownership system for the whole society in line with Marx's theory, nor copy the state-collective ownership system advocated by Stalin.

Xue says we must base our system on a combination of state ownership and collective ownership augmented by other forms for as long as necessary. We also need to vary methods of management and administration according to circumstances.

In agriculture, especially in handwork, both collective and individual labour have proved valuable. We should seek not only unity of plan but also division of labour with various kinds of responsibility systems based on individuals, the family and groups.

State-run enterprises also need to adopt a system entailing different degrees of responsibility for their profits or losses.

In towns, collectively-owned enterprises, and some individually-owned ones which assume sole responsibility for profits or losses, should be encouraged. They are both necessary and supplementary to state economy.

The second area is the correct treatment of the relationships among agriculture, light industry and heavy industry. Each must develop according to China's situation, Xue says.

During the First Five-Year Plan (1953-57), we completed 156 major projects, mostly in heavy industry. But agriculture could not keep pace with the needs of industrial development and the needs of the people.

The disparity of agriculture, light and heavy industry became extremely serious after the "Great Leap Forward" (1958-60). The ten chaotic years of the "Cultural Revolution" plunged the national economy into a crisis characterized by this disparity.

Since the third plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee, we have steadily reduced investment in capital construction and readjusted the relationships among agriculture, light industry and heavy industry.

At the same time, we tried to improve the people's lives as much as possible. It is because of all these that the national economy has started to prosper. But there is still much to do.

As Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out in his report to the 12th party congress, we must adhere to the readjustment policy, practise economy and combat waste during the Sixth Five-Year Plan. We need to seek long-term economic effectiveness. We prefer to slow production growth rate in the 1980's but to make all-out efforts in seeking better economic results, Xue says. If this is done, the rapid growth in the 1980's will be ensured.

The third field is reform of the sytem of managing the economy.

Apart from some mandatory plans, which are especially suitable for key enterprises, we should also use economic levers as part of guidance plans for many enterprises.

It would be impossible -- and there is no necessity -- for the state to control production of various small commodities.

SMALL CONSUMER ITEMS PRICES ALLOWED TO FLUCTUATE

OW180317 Beijing XINHUA in English 1244 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, October 15 (XINHUA) -- Chinese industrial and commercial enterprises are now allowed to produce and supply 160 small daily necessities, hardware, stationery and electrical appliances for domestic use according to market demand, to overcome overconcentration of production and supply by the state -- a longstanding economic shortcoming of China's, the ECONOMIC INFORMATION reported today.

From now on, prices will be allowed to fluctuate according to supply and demand for products ranging from elastic cord, shoelaces, buttons, brushes and hairpins to some cooking utensils and bicycle parts -- products which are usually produced in great varieties but have a low output value.

Work will be done so that in two or three years, the same price policy will be applied to more small commodities whose control by state is now regarded as impossible and unnecessary.

Prices for small commodities will be fixed by the industrial enterprises or commercial departments, according to a State Council-approved report jointly prepared by the State Administration of Commodity Prices, the Ministry of Light Industry and the Ministry of Commerce. The authorities, on their part, will work out the principles for fixing the prices and policies for price differences between the town and countryside and between different areas, and in the course of commodity circulation.

Such prices, says the report, are different from those fixed by the state and the free prices seen at village and urban fairs. They are relatively "flexible" prices worked out under the guidance of state policies and planning.

China rejects the capitalist market economy and stresses the need for planned development of industry, agriculture, transportation and communications. Nevertheless, it now deems it impossible and unnecessary to control small consumer goods and small products for domestic use through state planning, since their production and supply change from time to time and from one area to another. THE PEOPLE'S DAILY carried an editorial last month, admitting that overconcentration had been a major shortcoming in China's economic work.

HU QIAOMU, DENG LIQUN SPEECHES ON PHILOSOPHY

[Text] Beijing, 14 Oct (XINHUA) -- Speaking at the national forum on the planning for study of philosophy and social sciences, Hu Qiaomu, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and honorary president of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, said: Studying and solving major theoretical and practical problems in China's socialist modernization is the basic task of philosophical workers and social scientists. He encouraged the broad masses of social scientists to diligently study the law of economic development, politics, law, culture, society and philosophy; strive to apply knowledge of the law to the various practical fields of socialist modernization; and conduct education on the knowledge among the people of the whole country through various channels.

Hu Qiaomu said: Patriotism and revolutionary ideals of the masses of people and youths need to be cultivated through ideological and cultural education. In order to create a new situation in socialist modernization, it is necessary to conduct extensive patriotic and communist ideological education among the people throughout the country. The social scientists have done a great job in this regard by helping the masses raise their ideological and political consciousness in the past few years. The social scientists should further carry out their work in order to meet the needs for creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization. To raise the people's socialist spiritual civilization to a higher level, it is necessary to conduct general education on history, ideals, morality and the legal system and every subject must be accompanied with rich theoretical content. For example, education on morality must include political, economic, cultural, social, family and individual morality while social morality must also include various professional ethics. As with education in other fields, we cannot get the desired result with only a few words. While conducting education in these fields, it is also necessary to step up scientific criticism of various erroneous ideological trends. The duty of the scientists lies in creation. Only when they have obtained meticulous information and completed thoroughgoing research can they present systematic and valuable opinions.

Hu Qiaomu emphatically pointed out: The results of research in the social sciences should be able to play an active part in the practical work of socialist construction. Almost every subject of the social science can be directly applied in practical fields. In order to bring into full play the role of every science in socialist modernization, we must strive to develop all the applied sciences and use them to promote the practical work in modernization and enhance the people's Marxist consciousness and level of social science. For example, in conducting research, the economists can cooperate with an enterprise, or even a department or locality, in studying together how to improve enterprise management and harness the enthusiasm of all workers and staff so as to continuously raise the enterprise's productivity, how to do a meticulous job in financial, statistical and accounting work, rationally utilize manpower and financial and material resources, improve wage and labor reward and penalty systems, lower the cost, reduce waste and increase economic results. The initial work in these fields has been done. It is hoped that social scientists will expand the work and cooperate with natural scientists in order to broaden the vision of scientific research and render useful assistance to all localities and departments, thereby stressing the importance of social sciences. Study in other fields, as the science of law, sociology, history, ethnology, international affairs, literature, arts, linguistics and archaeology should also be able to be applied directly in practical work.

He said: Propagating and popularizing the knowledge of social sciences among the masses should also be a glorious task of the social scientists. As in the natural sciences, basic research, research in the application and popularization of knowledge should all become the criteria for evaluating a scientist's work.

Hu Qiaomu reiterated the necessity to adhere to the principle of letting a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of thought contend in science and culture. The phrasing of of this principle is not seen in the draft revised constitution because it is not legal terminology. Because of the limited space the report delivered at the 12th CPC National Congress did not touch on many principles which have been implemented and will continue to be implemented. The omission of the principle of letting a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of thought contend in the draft revised constitution and the report at the 12th CPC National Congress does not mean that there is any change in the implementation of the policy. It is the party's consistent requirement that work in science and arts must be led in accordance with the law of the development of science and arts just as the gardeners are required to irrigate, fertilize, weed and prevent and control plant diseases and pests correctly, but are not allowed to trample on their socialist "garden of a hundred flowers."

Deng Liqun, member of the Secretariat and director of the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee, also spoke at the forum. He said: Since the convening of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the work in social sciences has developed on a greater scale and has played a greater role than at any other time since the founding of the country. Under the leadership of the party Central Committee and party committees at various levels, the broad masses of social scientists have broken the fetters of dogmatism and the personality cult, actively plunged into the struggle to set things to rights theoretically, conducted useful discussion and put forward valuable opinions on questions concerning theory and practice in socialist construction, and offered good consultations for the party Central Committee and State Council in formulating policies and measures. Progress has also been made in setting up research institutes and training the contingent of scientists in philosophy and social sciences. It is hoped that they will continue to develop and score more academic achievements.

Deng Liqun said: In order to create a new situation in the study of social sciences, it is necessary to consolidate the research insititutes and rectify the contingents. The fundamental task in this aspect is to strengthen Marxist guidance, integrate theory with practice and improve the style of research. All comrades who aspire to study social sciences must strive to grasp the theoretical weapon of Marxism. Comrades who are more knowledgable in theory but less experienced in practical work must go deep into the realities of various fields and use Marxist stands, views and methods to analyze and study a new situation or problem in order to find a scientific answer. Comrades with rich practical experience but insufficient theoretical preparation must repeatedly study relevant Marxist classics in light of his own specialized field. Young researchers, particularly, must regard the study of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought as a basic required course.

He said: Effective planning and organizational work in study is a guarantee for accomplishing various research tasks of the social sciences in the new period. In formulating the plan, it is necessary to pool the wisdom of collectives, give full expression to democracy and invite knowledgable persons in all research institutes and educational departments to take part in the discussion. It is also necessary to solicit the opinion of experts, scholars, party and government organizations, leaders of planning departments and people engaged in practical work. In formulating the research plan, all localities should consider each locality's favorable conditions so that the plan is very special in its own way and realistic.

The 9-day forum was held under the joint auspices of the CPC Central Committee's Propaganda Department and the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences. Ma Hong, president of the academy, delivered at the forum a report entitled: "Do a Good Job in Planning, Create a New Situation in the Study of Social Sciences." Responsible persons of the State Planning Commission and the Chinese Academy of Sciences made reports on special topics at the forum.

The participants freely expressed their opinions and earnestly discussed the report by Ma Hong and speeches by Hu Qiaomu and Deng Liqun. They also exchanged views on how to implement the guidelines of the 12th CPC National Congres, do a good job in the planning of the study of philosophy and social sciences, better fulfill the tasks of philosophy and social sciences put forward by the state's Sixth 5-Year Plan, and develop social sciences during the state's Seventh 5-Year Plan. The work to solicite opinions was to be continued among the philosophical workers and social scientists after the forum.

Attending the forum were responsible persons and representatives of the CPC Central Committee's Propaganda Department, the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, the Ministry of Education, the State Planning Commission, Ministry of Finance, the Chinese Academy of Sciences, the Ministry of Labor and Personnel, the Publications Bureau under the Ministry of Culture, propaganda departments and social science research institutes from 29 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions, and some institutes of higher learning, totalling some 170. The forum ended 14 October.

HU QIAOMU, ULANHU AT BEIJING UNIVERSITY CEREMONY

OW160219 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1345 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, 15 Oct (XINHUA) -- A ceremony to unveil the bronze statues of Li Dazhao, an important leader during the period of the founding of the CPC, and Cai Yuanpei, a prominent figure in modern China's intellectual circle, was held at Beijing University this afternoon.

Hu Qiaomu, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee, and Xu Deheng, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, placed baskets of flowers before the statues on behalf of those who attended the ceremony.

The statues are built amid pines and cedars by a nameless lake on the campus of Beijing University. Amid the strains of the "Internationale" and "Sing in Praise of the Motherland," those in attendance remembered martyr Li Dazhao and Mr Cai Yuanpei. Li Dazhao was curator of the library and professor of the university's economics and history departments in November of 1917. He propagated Marxism, led the "May 4th" patriotic movement, set up north China's first communist group and trained the first group of Marxists and intellectuals with Marxist ideology at the university, which he regarded as his base. As president of Beijing University from December 1916 to July 1927, Cai Yuanpei advocated science and democracy and trained and educated many talented people. The fact that the university became the academic center, the center of the new cultural movement and the birthplace of the "May 4th" movement in those days was inseparable from the contributions by Mr Cai Yuanpei and Li Dazhao.

The two bronze statues were built with donations from graduates who were enrolled in the university in 1977 and 1978, and who pledge to inherit and carry forward the university's glorious traditions initiated by Li and Cai. The statues are the works of two noted sculptors, Zeng Zhushao and Fu Tianchou, with assistance from the Beijing Iron and Steel College and the Capital Iron and Steel Company.

Attending the ceremony were party and state leaders Ulanhu, Hu Qiaomu, Deng Liqun and Xu Deheng; Hu Yuzhi, Zhou Peiyuan and Qian Changzhao, vice chairmen of the CPPCC National Committee; and leading members of departments concerned Han Tianshi, He Dongchang, Zeng Delin, Jiang Ping, Chen Haosu, Lei Jieqiong and others, as well as friends and students of Li Dazhao and Cai Yuanpei, veteran alumni, representatives of teachers and students of various departments of the Beijing University and graduates from 1977 and 1978 who have been working at the university since graduation.

Li Baohua and Chai Huaixin, relatives of Li Dazhao and Cai Yuanpei, were also invited to attend the ceremony.

Ulanhu, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, addressed the ceremony. He praised the graduates of 1977 and 1978 for having done something meaningful and expressed his warm greetings and high respect for the students. Ulanhu said Comrade Li Dazhao was one of the pioneers who propagated Marxist ideology in China and engaged in communist work, and one of the great proletarian revolutionaries. Ulanhu said Li Dazhao's life exemplies a communist who is ready to give up everything for the realization of a lofty ideal. Today, when the party Central Committee exhorts the whole nation to further heighten its communist awareness and foster the communist spirit, it is of profound significance that we cherish the memory of martyr Li Dazhao and emulate his firm communist conviction and spirit of unremitting struggle.

Ulanhu continued: Mr Cai Yuanpei was one of the precursors in modern Chinese history who explored ways of saving and revitalizing the country. Comrade Mao Zedong highly evaluated Mr Cai Yuanpei saying that he was "a leading authority of the academic circle and an exemplary world figure." Mr Cai Yuanpei made exceptional contributions to China's educational development.

Ulanhu said: The 12th CPC National Congress has revealed a beautiful prospect before us and also presented us a still higher demand. While the accomplishment of the various fighting tasks put forward by the 12th party congress depends on the efforts of the whole nation, young people must shoulder a heavier burden. This requires young people to have the firm conviction that communism must be realized and to have the spirit of accomplishing every socialist construction project in a down-to-earth manner. Ulanhu hoped that the students would do a really good job in carrying forward the revolutionary traditions, master the necessary scientific knowledge and cultivate themselves into a new generation of people who have ideals, morality, culture and a sense of discipline.

Xiang Ziming, acting secretary of the Beijing University party committee, and Pan Weiming, chairman of the university's student union, also addressed the ceremony. After recalling the revolutionary contributions of Comrade Li Dazhao and Mr Cai Yuanpei, they pledged that they would follow the path opened by their precurors and, led by the guidelines of the 12th CPC Congress, write a new chapter in the university's history and strive to create a new situation in all fields of socialist construction and accomplish the communist cause.

The attendants also bowed before the statutes of Li Dazhao and Cai Yuanpei to pay their respects for their outstanding contributions.

HU QIAOMU AT OPENING OF LITERATURE ARCHIVES

OW170130 Beijing XINHUA in English 1247 GMT 16 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, October 16 (XINHUA) -- A 16th century architectural feat has been turned into the preparatory office of China's first modern Chinese literature archives and opened today with Hu Qiaomu, Zhou Yang, Ai Qing and other leading writers in the capital in attendance.

Consisting of temples, imperial palaces and gardens, the "Longevity Temple," as it is called, is located in the western suburb of Beijing and was formerly a resting place of emperors and empresses of the Ming and Qing Dynasties.

Organized along the lines of a national archives, the future literature archives is expected to take shape gradually, becoming an information center of modern Chinese literature and a center for research on masters in the field.

The collection will include manuscripts, letters, diaries, handwriting, photos, portraits, reference films, recordings, videotapes of modern writers, theorists, translators and literary activists since the May 4 movement in 1919, along with their books in various editions, journals and other important artifacts left behind by the writers.

Establishment of the archives was initially proposed by Ba Jin, chairman of the Chinese Writers Association, last year. Hu Yaobang, then chairman of the Communist Party Central Committee, offered his support at a meeting with Ba Jin. A presidium meeting held that day immediately adopted a resolution to set up a preparatory committee for a modern Chinese literature archives, which consisted of Ba Jin and eight other noted Chinese writers.

71-year-old Kong Luosung, editor-in-chief of the national literary gazette WEN YI BAO and director of the preparatory committee, expressed his satisfaction with the site. The planned archives will be a combination of ancient architecture and modern facilities, he said. Storerooms for valuable documents are designed to control against moisture, light, dust, fire and theft. Also slated to be part of the complex are libraries, a reading room, exhibition hall, research area, offices, an auditorium and subsidiary facilities.

Kong Luosung, who has had a literary career of nearly half a century, said that in view of the fact that most writers of the early years have either died or grown old and much valuable data have been lost or damaged over the years, it is urgent to build the archives so as to save them.

The archives are expected to help promote the study and education of literature as well as international exchange, Kong said.

PLANS TO MODERNIZE, BUILD MORE PORT FACILITIES

OW180405 Beijing XINHUA in English 1539 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, October 15 (XINHUA) -- The Ministry of Communications plans to build modern port facilities in the major coastal harbors of Huangpu, Lianyun, Qinhuangdao, Shanghai, Tianjin and Shijiusuo by 2000.

This was announced today at a current meeting called by the Ministry of Communications in Beijing.

The improvement of communications and transport was listed by the recent party congress as one of the strategic tasks for achieving the goal of quadrupling China's total industrial and agricultural output value by the end of this century.

According to the ministry, 133 deep-water berths will be started between 1981 and 1985 in 15 coastal harbors, 54 of which are expected to be completed by 1985, adding 100 million tons of cargo loading and unloading capacity.

By 1985, the ministry said, construction of seven container berths, funded by the World Bank, will be completed in Huangpu, Shanghai and Tianjin, with an annual handling capacity between 700,000 containers and 1 million containers.

The ministry said its long-term plan is to increase the number of coastal berths from 330 in 1980 to a total of 1,000 in 2000. Of these, deep-water berths handling 10,000-ton ships will increase from 139 to 600.

The ministry said the nation will build a comprehensive network for sea, river and highway transport by the end of the century.

The river transport network will include the Yangtze and Zhujiang River systems, the Huaihe River and the Grand Canal between Beijing and Hangzhou.

In the next three years, China will double the Yangtze's coal-shipping capacity with newly built 10,000-ton class berths in Nanjing, Nantong, Zhangjiagang and Zhenjiang along the lower reaches of the river in Jiangsu Province and expand coal wharves in Hankou, Pukou, Zhicheng and others.

A 404-kilometer section between Xuzhou and Yangzhou along the Grand Canal will be dredged and two coal wharves expanded.

A nationwide highway network, with 100,000 kilometers of trunk lines, will connect large and medium cities, important strategic points, tourist areas and industrial and agricultural regions.

The state has said it will allocate more funds for construction of communication facilities between 1983 and 1985 than previously.

RENMIN RIBAO ON ROLE OF LITERATURE, ART

HK180335 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 13 Oct 82 p 5

[Commentator's article: "Bring Positive Role of Literature and Art Into Play in Developing Spiritual Civilization"]

[Text] In his report to the 12th CPC Congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out: "While working for a high level of material civilization, we must strive to build a high level of socialist spiritual civilization. This is a strategic principle for building socialism. The history of socialism and the present situation in China both tell us that the success or failure of socialism depends on whether or not we adhere to this principle." This decision of the party Central Committee has illuminated the direction for the whole party and the people of the whole country, particularly for the comrades who are working in the ideological front. We must follow the efforts to develop socialist spiritual civilization well, with a creative spirit of vigor and vitality and full of enthusiasm and responsibility, to promote the building of material civilization and to make greater contributions to creating a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization.

Socialist literature and art is an important front in the ideological and cultural fields and an important and integral part that plays a distinctive role in socialist spiritual civilization, and at the same time, an important force that gives impetus to the building of socialist spiritual civilization. With its unique form and means, socialist literature and art is directly and closely connected with the masses of people in their millions. Through its vivid artistic images, it also affects the readers and audiences and influences their thinking and feeling. Therefore, we must give full attention to bringing its unique role into full play and use literature and art to carry out education in communist ideals, faith and morality, raise people's consciousness in collectivism and their sense of being socialist masters, their sense of socialist rights and duties and sense of organizational discipline, establish a devoted spirit of serving the people and a communist labor attitude, strengthen their feelings of socialist patriotism and internationalism, foster high aesthetic standards and an interest in art and raise their level of understanding and cultural cultivation.

Without the development of socialist culture and the flourishing of literature and art, socialist spiritual civilization cannot be built up smoothly. We literature and art workers must deepen our understanding of the status and role of literature and art in the development of socialist spiritual civilization, strengthen our consciousness, enhance our sense of responsibility and more vigorously bring into play the positive role of literature and art in developing spiritual civilization.

Some comrades ignore the role of culture. They hold that the building of culture, including literature and art, has no inherent or direct relation to the building of socialist spiritual civilization, and even believe that an emphasis on culture would weaken the role of communist ideas and hinder the rise of people's ideological consciousness. This kind of viewpoint is wrong in theory and harmful in practice. In fact, Marxism itself is the inevitable outcome of the social civilization of mankind when developed to a certain historical stage, while communism also has a highly developed culture, science and technology as one of the prerequisites of its realization. Lenin once pointed out: "Marxism is the epitome of communism produced from the whole of human knowledge." "Only by enriching our minds with all the knowledge and wealth created by mankind can we be genuine communists." He also said: "It is imperative to acquire all the culture left over by capitalism and use it to build socialism. It is necessary to master the whole of science, technology, knowledge and art. Without these, we cannot build community society." The ideological and cultural building of socialist spiritual civilization are the two integral parts of a whole; they work in coordination and help each other to progress and are mutually dependent. Only by laying stress on carrying out ideological building and, at the same time, attaching great importance and positively carrying out cultural building can we properly develop socialist spiritual civilization. The viewpoint that separates culture from communist consciousness and the building of culture from the building of spiritual civilization, and even puts them in opposition to each other, is quite untenable.

Certainly, while we emphasize the importance of cultural building, we must also pay attention to another tendency, that is, the erroneous attitude toward the cultural heritage of history and foreign cultural influences of blind praise, pandering and total and uncritical acceptance without distinguishing between essense and dross. There are manifestations of such a tendency in literary circles. For instance, some people exalt the "stream of consciousness" and "modernist" schools of the West as priceless treasures and regard the "modernist school" as the direction for the development of our literature and art. They hold that evolutionary realism is already useless and outdated. Some people even go in for unprincipled praise of the old cultural trends and literary schools of the "May 4th" period and the 1930's that were opposed to advanced trends and revolutionary culture. It must be pointed out that we certainly do not reject any of the valuable heritage of literature and art left over by our ancestors thousands of years ago, neither do we refuse to learn from or make use of good modern works of litertature and art from abroad and their artistic techniques; socialist litertature and art enables all spiritual achievements of human civilization to develop in accordance to law. But our study and use of these things must be analytical and critical and must be carried out under the guidance of Marxism. The literature of the Western modernist school is an outcome of specific historical conditions; the philosophical ideas and world outlook they accord to are numerous and jumbled, and some are poisonous; therefore we cannot blindly exalt them. As to the old literary trends and schools since the "May 4th movement," and particularly those of the 1930's, we must also carry our concrete analysis and correct evaluation and not turn our backs on history and blindly praise them.

In order to bring into play the positive role of literature and art in developing spiritual civilization, we must conscientiously study the basic principles of Marxism, study and implement the correct line, principles and policy formulated by the 12th CPC Congress, continue to implement the party's policy of "letting a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of thought contend," carry on the two-line struggle of opposing both "left" and right deviations and build well socialist spiritual civilization with communism as its core.

A new situation in the building of socialist modernization has placed new and greater demands on socialist literature and art. On the basis of studying Marxism and plunging into the thick of life, our literature and art workers must vigorously portray new socialist images and use art works, which glisten with the brilliance of communist thought and give the people inspiration and enjoyment, to satisfy the needs of the spiritual life of the people and help them raise their realm of thought and moral values.

On the eve of the foundation of the People's Republic of China, Comrade Mao Zedong predicted: "Along with the high tide in economic construction, there is bound to be a high tide in cultural building. The days when the Chinese people were known as uncivilized are gone forever. We shall take our place in the world as a nation with an advanced culture." At present, we have ample reason to believe that, inspired by the spirit of the 12th CPC Congress, along with the gradual creation of a new situation in all fields of socialist modernization, a high tide of developing socialist spiritual civilization is bound to emerge, and with it a thriving and prosperous new situation in socialist literature and art.

LIVESTOCK RAISING FLOURISHES UNDER NEW POLICY

[Text] Beijing, October 20 (XINHUA) -- Herds of sheep, cattle and horses are now thriving in China's major pastoral areas, while television sets, tape recorders, sewing machines, and silks and satins are commonly seen in herdsmen's yurts, according to reports from these areas. Some herders have even purchased motorcycles to replace horses as a means of transport.

The pastoral and semi-pastoral areas cover nearly one third of China's territory.

Under the new economic policies, the herdsmen have been given more right to decide on matters related to production, according to the reports. Different forms of the job responsibility system are being carried out in over 90 percent of the pastoral and semi-pastoral areas in Inner Mongolia, Xinjiang and Ningxia Autonomous Regions, Qinghai Province and other parts of the country. Herders have taken good care of the livestock for which they were personally responsible by contract.

As a result, the amount of the livestock in Inner Mongolia at the end of 1982 stockbreeding year (July 1, 1981--June 30, 1982) totalled 42.5 million -- a record high -- and an increase of 5.6 percent over a year ago. Xinjiang had a total of 34 million sheep and large farm animals at the end of June, 1.5 million more than a year ago. The number of the livestock in Ningxia, Gansu and Qinghai has also increased to various degrees.

Inner Mongolia purchased 43,000 tons of wool and hair in the first eight months of this year, 3,450 tons more than in the whole of 1981. The amount of sheep, cattle and horses in stock and for sale has registered a sharp rise in Xinjiang. The livestock retained for herders' private use in the major pastoral areas have gone up to several dozens per family, according to the reports.

With the job responsibility system, many herders have earned between several thousand yuan and tens of thousand yuan a year.

In Sunid Left Banner in the Inner Mongolia Autonomous Region alone, the number of television sets purchased by individual herdsmen went up from 500 last year to 1,500 this year. In a number of villages, each family has a television set.

EDUCATION MINISTER STRESSES IMPROVED EDUCATION

[Text] China's goal in education is to universalize primary education, to develop pre-school education progressively and to popularize secondary education in small cities, if condition permits, and in well-developed rural areas according to He Dongchang, minister of education.

He outlined this programme agreed at the 12th party congress to educationalists from countries of the Asian and Pacific region who were this week attending the United Nations Educational Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) sponsored field operation seminar on literacy and adult education in China.

Education and science, together with agriculture, energy and transport, are to be given priority in order to quadruple the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production by the year 2000, the minister said.

Comprehensive development of rural areas under the responsibility system particularly necessitated higher education, he said.

The minister stressed that the better educated cadres were, the more aware they were of the importance of developing education. He said no newcomers below secondary education level would be admitted to any state undertakings from now on.

Only 27 per cent of the 2,000 counties throughout the country had popularised primary education, and 25 per cent of vocational secondary education having been restored after the "Cultural Revolution."

About 1.28 million of students were at institutions of higher learning -- an increase of a third between 1976 and 1981 -- besides another million people receiving adult education.

In 1981, the number of postgraduates was 43,000. TV and radio programming and correspondence teaching were cheap ways to spread higher learning, and 78,000 such students obtained diplomas this year, but the top money-saving way was self-teaching.

Flexibility and different methods, such as training courses in factories and different lengths of time in secondary schools, should be allowed in order to boost education. He said effective measures must be taken to promote education in internationalism, patriotism, morality and discipline.

The minister also replied some questions from the delegates of the seminar.

The seminar opened in October 4 at Foshan, Guangdong Province.

Delegates were divided into two groups visiting Shandong and Henan Provinces separately and concluded their discussion in Beijing on Wednesday.

PRC SET TO MODERNIZE AUTO INDUSTRY OVER 5 YEARS

[Text] China's auto industry is set for rapid development over the next five years.

The government is implementing plans for rationalising and modernizing the industry, CHINA DAILY has been told by the China National Automobile Industry Corporation (CNAIC).

According to Rao Bin, chairman of the CNAIC board of directors, changes will include an end to "the present primitive practice of carrying out production in overdispersed, repetitive and self-centered factories."

Major modernization is also planned, "putting an end to the history of producing outdated products for decades without a model change."

New models are to be developed, sometimes in collaboration with foreign joint venture partners, sometimes using imported high-technology equipment.

"Foreign technology cooperation will not be limited to complete vehicles only," Rao said.

"CNAIC will, in a planned manner, import foreign manufacturing technology or technical information on engines, power transmission, running gear, vehicle control systems, cabs and basic components."

The changes come as part of the Ministry of Transport's efforts to rationalize and improve China's communications.

While railways still provide the cheapest means of long haul or bulk transport, the ministry has come to the conclusion that road transport can be effectively used for shorter freight-journeys -- up to around 100 kilometers.

Last year, China manufactured 175,645 motor vehicles. In addition to 73 vehicle manufacturing plants with a total annual capacity of 250,000 units, there are 100 odd special-purpose vehicle factories and 2,000 auto parts and accessory factories in China.

Over the past three years, export value of vehicles has sharply increased, with actual export value in 1981 more than triple that of 1979, Rao said.

Demands for different special-purpose and farm vehicles will be on the rise. There are about 500,000 vehicles to be replaced, he said.

Rao said CNAIC emphasises self-reliance, the speedy improvement of current products and the development of new ones.

The corporation will improve ths customer service through the serve-the-customer educational programme. It will reinforce the industry's supervision and management in the light of economic laws for better economic results.

CNAIC has promised to provide all departments of the national economy and national defense modernization with varied auto products of good quality, at low prices, with high fuel economy and excellent riding comfort.

CNAIC aims to organize itself as an economically profitable enterprise through reforms of its management systems.

In restructuring the industry and amalgamating over-dispersed and self-centered factories, it plans to reform systems which are unfavourable to the development of new products. It will also reform the manufacturing set-up for mixed, multimodel production and restructure the automotive product makeup. This is aimed at ending the present shortages of both light and heavy vehicles to meet changing transport needs.

An important part of CNAIC's work will be to develop foreign economic and trade relations, promote technology exchange and cooperation, import advanced technology, upgrade quality of products, and add more products models.

As a result of the open policy adopted by CNAIC and the strengthening of technology exchanges and cooperation with foreign countries in the last three years, CNAIC has sent 62 delegations abroad for joint venture and technology transfer negotiations and technical survey tours.

They have participated in various international professional meetings and in technical training and consulting activities provided by the United Nations or foreign firms under contracts.

CNAIC was established not long ago with the approval of the State Council to speed up development of China's auto industry in order to meet the needs of China's modernization drive, Rao said.

China has already imported manufacturing technology for carburettors, piston-ring-groove inserts, light duty transmissions, thermostats and friction lining materials, he said.

CNAIC has also important know-how for eight items between 1979 and 1981.

ANHUI CIRCULAR URGES CONSOLIDATING MILITIA

OW170346 Hefei Anhui Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 16 Oct 82

[Excerpts] The Anhui Provincial Military District recently issued a circular calling on all localities to consolidate militia organizations in accordance with the documents and guidelines of the 12th National CPC Congress. The circular called for consolidating the militia and creating a new situation in militia work during the slack season in the coming winter and spring.

The circular says: The various resolutions adopted by the 12th National CPC Congress have provided correct guidelines for various tasks. Propaganda on the consolidation of the militia must be conducted along the guidelines of the 12th National CPC Congress. The various units concerned must organize the militiamen to study the documents of the national congress and unify their thinking with the congress guidelines.

The circular stressed that consolidation of militia organizations must be conducted in a down-to-earth manner by solving practical problems. Qualified retired and demobilized servicemen must be organized into militia units in order to strengthen units' fighting capabilities. The old militia cadres must be gradually replaced by younger, better educated and professionally more competent cadres.

In the course of consolidation, the leaders of the people's armed forces departments must go to the grassroots unit to make investigations and help solve practical problems. Through consolidation, militia work must be carried out organizationally, politically and militarily in order to meet the needs of creating a new situation in militia work.

WORK OF ANHUI'S GOVERNOR ZHOU ZIJIAN HAILED

OW170526 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Radio talk: "It Is Necessary To Have a Revolutionary Style of Bringing About a New Situation -- Commenting on Anhui Governor Zhou Zijian Who Spends Festival With People in a Disaster Area"]

[Text] This year's National Day was also the Midautumn Festival. On that day, Zhou Zijian, acting first secretary of the Anhui Provincial Party Committee and governor of the province, visited people in a disaster area. He inspected the flood situation on the windy and wavy Huai River and asked flood victims about their well-being at one makeshift shelter after the other. He encouraged them to overcome the natural disaster in the spirit of the 12th party congress. While in the diasaster area, he solved problems whenever discovered. With local cadres, he discussed production measures by which the people in the disaster area can provide for and help themselves.

The masses' enthusiasm was aroused the moment they noticed that the governor was quite concerned about their well-being. A commune member said to Zhou Zijiang: Governor, you can rest assured that we have the confidence to surmount the difficulties and push agriculture forward.

Zhou Zijian's visit touched the people's hearts and inspired them. The 12th party congress called for brining about a new situation in all fields or socialist modernization. How should our leading cadres at all levels tackle this historic task? The revolutionary spirit of Comrade Zhou Zijian, who is greying at the temples, in going among the masses to do solid work and solve problems is praiseworthy and should be promoted. As people know, some cadres are unwilling to visit and have contact with the masses conduct studies and investigations. They just sit in their offices, hear briefings, do nothing or attend endless meetings which do not solve problems. Such bureaucracy is a manifestation of an impure party style which is entirely incompatible with the requirement for bringing about a new situation.

What is the revolutionary style he should have in bringing about a new situation? In his report to the 12th party congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang put it very clearly: The revolutionary style for Communists to bring about a new situation is to throw themselves into the great work of socialist modernization and, going among the masses and digging into the actual work, forge ahead in the struggle vigorously, indomitably and indefatigably.

Let all of us foster this revolutioanry style and win victories with it!

The first provincial shipbuilding enterprise in China, it will unify the management and economic accounting of the five shipyards under it and plans to incorporate all the dozens of shipyards in the province step by step.

The new corporation is empowered to engage in independent business talks with Macao, Hong Kong and foreign clients and to undertake compensation trade and processing business with designs, materials or samples supplied by the customers.

JIANGXI PLA COMMANDER PUBLICIZES CPC CONGRESS

OW150536 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 14 Oct 82

[Excerpts] Comrade Xin Junjie, NPC deputy and commander of the Jiangxi Provincial Military District, explained and publicized documents of the 12th CPC National Congress at the grassroots units to make cadres, fighters and militiamen understand fully the significance of developing socialist spiritual civilization in PLA units and militia. Comrade Xin Junjie led a work team to Fengcheng County in early October to check on the progress made by the people's armed forces department and militia units of the five communes there in studying the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress and in developing socialist spiritual civilization. Fengcheng County was an advanced unit in developing spiritual civilization under the Fuzhou PLA units.

Citing deeds about revolutioanry martyrs, who, fearing neither bloodshed nor death during the years of war, sacrificed themselves for the revolutioanry cause, Xin Junjie noted that communist ideology was a magic weapon with which our army defeated the enemy to win victory and that New China would not have been founded without communist ideology as the guide.

Comrade Xin Junjie also went to (Xiaotang) brigade of the (Xiaotang) Commune to guide the study of the documents of the 12th CPC National Congress. He called on militiamen to cultivate well the fields assigned to them and to make still greater contributions to the future.

SHANDONG PLA UNITS DISCUSS CONGRESS DOCUMENTS

SK161125 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] Leading comrades of the Jinan PLA units went down to the grassroots units to publicize the documents of the 12th party congress, explain knotty problems raised by cadres and soldiers and guide them in implementing the guidelines of the 12th party congress in a down-to-earth manner.

At the (Dageng) company under a certain regiment, Commander Rao Shoukun answered questions put forward by some comrades on favorable conditions for effecting a fundamental turn for the better in the party's style of work within five years. He pointed out: Our party is a Marxist party with political maturity that has stood over 60 years of revolutioanry fighting tests and is capable of overcoming unhealthy trends. General tendencies prevailing in our party are quite good. If we clearly understand the situation, we will have confidence in our party. As party members and the people nurse a grievance against unhealthy tendencies, the party Central Committee has set forth a set of accurate policies and measures for checking them.

After touching on the favourable conditions, Comrade Rao Shoukun urged cadres and soldiers to be concerned with the party's work style and policies. Every party members should take the lead in effecting a fundamental turn for the better in the party's work style.

Leading comrades of the Jinan PLA units turned the course of explanation into self-education and studied with cadres and soldiers at the grassroots units to deepen their understanding in the documents and guidelines of the 12th party congress.

While relaying the guidelines of the 12th party congress at the (Yanyi) garrison command, Deputy Commander Zheng Sansheng gave cadres and soldiers some guidance on materials for solving eight knotty problems generally encountered in the units in the course of study.

Staying at an artillery regiment under a certain PLA unit to help improve its work, Deputy party Commissar Chen Renhong went down to the grassroots units to talk with soldiers. In line with his personal experiences, he answered some questions raised by soldiers concerning ways to foster communist lofty ideals among young soldiers. All the soldiers were well educated after the discussion.

WEN HUI BAO URGES GREATER EFFORT FOR ATHEISM

OW180029 Shanghai WEN HUI BAO in Chinese 11 Oct 82 p 3

[Article by Hu Quyuan: "Education on Atheism Should Be Strengthened"]

[Excerpts] To raise this question, I am not prompted by a sudden impulse, nor am I shooting an arrow without a target. Recently, some feudal, superstitious things have been reviving and growing. Even our newspapers are publishing some articles which spread and praise obscurantism under the signboard of "morality" or "science." If you don't believe me, please look at facts.

An article published in the 12 July RENMIN RIBAO reports that superstitious activities have been legalized in the name of promoting tourism in some tourist places.

It is also frequently reported that in some localities, some persons take advantage of superstitious beliefs to call themselves emperors, make women "imperial concubines," disturb social order, defraud people of their money or even commit murder. Some literary works undisguisedly publicize religion as a means to solve the serious question concerning one's outlook on life.

Some persons often spread superstition, wittingly or unwittingly, under the signboard of "science fiction."

For instance, a journal published by a local scientific and technological association has published such articles as "The Mystery of Ghosts and The Soul" and "Resurrection of a Girl Buried Alive With Her Deceased Master 1,000 Years Ago." Even the television is showing films which describe ghosts.

Superstition corrupts people's thinking, does harm to socialist spiritual civilization, strangles the revolutionary pioneering spirit and the spirit of dedication and shakes people's faith in the four modernizations. In this situation, it is imperative to carry out a lively Marxist education to expound and propagate Marxist bases and principles. It includes the propagation of atheism and efforts to arm the masses with scientific communist belief, criticize religion and obscurantism and help people foster a scientific world outlook and a scientific outlook on life.

Article 35 of the revised draft constitution stipulates: "Citizens of the People's Republic of China enjoy freedom of religious belief." Someone will ask what does this article mean. It means that citizens have the freedom to believe in or disbelieve in religion and the state legally assures the freedom and permits no compulsory means against it. This is the fundamental policy of our party and our government on religion. This policy accords with the present situation of religions in China and is correct and feasible. As religion is a historical phenomenon in a certain stage of development of human society, its origin, development and withering away follow a natural course. It is unrealistic and harmful to resort to compulsory means to abolish religions. Politically, we should unite in a most comprehensive way with the patriotic persons in the religious circles. However, we should emphatically point out that this article in the revised draft constitution should not be construed as saying that CPC members and CYL members have the freedom to believe in religion, nor that in ideological work the party may weaken or give up the propagation of atheism.

To strengthen education in atheism needs concerted efforts. We particularly hope that natural scientists will write about atheism and use science to dispel the mist of ghosts. We hope that there will be more literary works portraying typical images with communist outlook on life and communist morality in order to give the readers hope and strength. In addition, while it is necessary to make proper repairs to some temples to promote tourism, we should pay attention to preventing the revival of superstitious things. A small number of persons who take advantage of superstition to violate the law should be dealt with according to law. In short, it is Marxism and Mao Zeodong Thought that guide us to advance in various fields. All professions and trades should be concerned about the propagation of atheism.

HU YAOBANG ANSWERS FRENCH REPORTERS' QUESTIONS

[Text] Beijing, 17 Oct (XINHUA) -- "The Chinese side sincerely hopes that all obstacles to the normalization of the relations between China and the Soviet Union will be removed so that relations between the two countries will embark on the road of healthy development," said Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the CPC Central Committee here this morning in answering questions raised by French reporters before he continued talks with Georges Marchais, general secretary of the French Communist Party.

An AFP reporter inquired if any progress has been made in relations between China and the Soviet Union and, if any, in what fields? He asked on what issues the two countries have the biggest differences.

Hu Yaobang asked the reporters if they knew that Soviet Vice Foreign Minister L.F. Ilichev was now in Beijing to conduct discussions [cuo shang 4322 0794] with Chinese Vice Foreign Minister Qian Qichen. As the two sides had agreed not to disclose the contents of the discussions, "Sorry, I will not violate the agreement," the general secretary said.

When asked whether the discussions would be continued, Hu Yaobang said "Yes," and that the two sides had agreed, through consultation [sieshang 0588 0794], that the discussions would be held in Beijing and Moscow in turn.

The meeting between Hu Yaobang and French reporters took place in a simple, but elegant and spacious hall in Zhongnanhai, site of the CPC Central Committee. Dressed in deep grey, Hu Yaobang, amid glaring mercury and lights and the sound of cameras, smiled and answered questions raised by French reporters.

Asked by a reporter representing LE MONDE about the Soviet Union's domestic and foreign policies, Hu Yaobang said: "We have pointed out, time and again, that the Soviet leaders have been pursuing a hegemonist policy for a considerable period. We are against such an erroneous policy. As for their domestic questions, we have ceased to express our views for many years, and that is what we ought to do."

A correspondent from the French Television Station Number Three asked Hu Yaobang at the beginning of the meeting for his views on the French left-wing forces' coming into power and the impact on Sino-French relations. The general secretary said: "That is the choice of the French people. We are willing to develop the relations between China and France. There are broad prospects for cooperation between the two countries in politics, economy, science and technology, and culture. Generally, we are satisfied with the relations between China and France since the establishment of diplomatic ties between them and we hope to see a better development of our relations."

A reporter from the French Television Station Number One asked: The Chinese party condemned the French Communist Party for clinging to the Soviet Communist Party when the Chinese and French parties suspended relations in 1965. What is your view now?

Hu Yaobang smiled and replied: "There is a famous saying in China, 'Don't get entangled in historical issues, look ahead of you.' One should be magnanimous and disregard the minute details in dealing with historical issues. Our two parties have resumed relations with great satisfaction."

"We believe that the Chinese and French parties will act in accordance with the agreed principles of complete equality, independence, mutual respect and noninterference in each other's internal affairs and see to it that their friendly relations and cooperation develop smoothly," he added.

A L'EXPRESS reporter asked: With Mr Marchais' visit to China and the normalization of relations between the Chinese and French parties, does this mean that a party maintaining good relations with the Soviet Communist Party can also develop its relations with the Chinese party? Gesturing positively, Hu Yaobang said: " I think they can, because one of our principles is not to interfere with other parties' internal affairs. Any party, whether a workers' party, Communist party or nationalist party, if it is willing to be friendly with us, we are willing to establish relations with them."

At this time, a leading comrade of the CPC Central Committee's International Liaison Department told Comrade Hu Yaobang that time was up. Hu Yaobang said that the reporters seemed to have more questions and that the meeting should be extended for 5 more minutes.

When asked whether China had different attitudes towards the Soviet and U.S. hegemonists, Hu Yaobang said "We firmly oppose any hegemonism in the world, because hegemonism is the main manifestation of sabotage to world peace. We firmly oppose hegemonism wherever it exists. All shapes of hegemonism are bad."

An AFP reporter asked about China's view towards the situation in Poland. Hu Yaobang said: "Our party has repeatedly stated that we hope Poland will solve her own problems through internal consultation and oppose any foreign interference."

Hu Yaobang asked the French reporters if they had any more questions. No further questions were raised. Hu Yaobang said: "Since you have no more questions, I would like to say a few words. It has been 6 years now since the downfall of the 'gang of four' in China. Some foreign correspondents have often asked if the political situation in China would stabilize or if there would be turbulence in this country. On this question, our party and state leaders have always stated once or twice each year that our country's political situation is secure and stable. I can assure our French friends here today that China will become increasingly steady and stable year after year.

"Our friends know that a contract responsibility system in production has been instituted in China's rural areas. Here I would like to come into a 'contract' with our French friends on the question of China's stability." At this moment, Hu Yaobang rose from the sofa chair on which he had been sitting, saying that he would like to go into the "contract for 10 years initially." He said: "What I mean is that the Chinese leaders are more objective, realistic and reliable in the 'contract' on China's political situation than the guesswork of some foreign reporters."

ROSTOW RESTATES U.S. STANCE AT GENEVA ARMS TALKS

[Text] Brussels, October 18 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. position in the Geneva nuclear weapons talks remains to negotiate for a "zero-zero" solution and it refuses to accept the Soviet position as final, said Eugene V. Rostow, director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency at a press conference here today.

By the so-called "zero-zero" solution, the U.S. promised to forgo deployment of new Pershing and cruise missiles in Western Europe if Moscow would remove its SS-20, SS-4 and SS-5 missiles in the East.

Rostow stated that the Soviet Union had thus far stuck to the proposal with which it started -- namely, the U.S. could have intermediate nuclear forces (INF) in Europe, and the USSR could keep its entire arsenal of intermediate range missiles threathening Europe, and perhaps even enlarge it, while its INF forces in the Far East could grow without restriction.

Although ten months of negotiation have revealed that solutions based on the principle of deterrence are possible, but what is not yet clear is whether the Soviet Union is interested in such a possibility, he noted.

During his current tour abroad Rostow has had consultations with the NATO Council and the Governments of Italy and West Germany, and he is expected to meet the foreign ministers of Belgium, the Netherlands and the U.K. He said that he has got firm assurances, in Rome and Bonn, of confidence and support for the U.S. position in Geneva. Allied solidarity is of utmost importance to the present INF talks, he stressed.

Answering questions Rostow said that the West should be prepared to use nuclear weapons in a future war in Europe even if NATO's conventional forces could have been strengthened, because the Soviet doctrine shows that Russia would use all kinds of weapons needed to win the war.

NPC DELEGATION'S VISIT TO DPRK REVIEWED

SK192335 Beijing in Korean to Korea 1100 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Article by (Gu Jianjin) entitled "Flower of Friendship Blossoming More Beautifully With Each Passing Day," on the visit to the DPRK by a delegation of the PRC National People's Congress]

[Excerpts] On 8 October, not long after President Kim Il-song visited our country, a delegation of the National People's Congress of china headed by Comrade Xi Zhongxun, member of the Political Bureau and secretary of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee and vice chairman of the Standing Committee of the NPC, arrived in Korea amid the warm atmosphere of China-Korea friendship.

The delegation left Pyongyang on 16 October and returned home at the successful conclusion of its goodwill visit to Korea. During the visit, the Chinese and Korean comrades in arms were delighted beyond measure over the successful visit to China by Comrade Kim Il-song. They unanimously praised it by saying: The current visit, which carries historic significance, is giving great encouraging vigor to the peoples of the t[illegible] countries. It has pushed ahead with the development of relations between the two [illegible]tries.

They also expressed the wish that the flower of friendship betwee[illegible]ina and Korea will blossom even more beautifully.

On 14 October, President Kim Il-song met with the delegation head Xi Zhongxun and all members of the delegation and arranged a luncheon. Touching on the relations between China and Korea, Comrade Kim Il-song, a close friend of the [illegible]inese people, said affectionately in Chinese: We are the same family. How meaningful this kind-hearted remark is! This remark well shows the deep and friendly relations between China and Korea -- which is a deep-rooted relationship. As Comrade Kim Il-song said, wherever it went -- Pyongyang, Hamhung and Kaesong -- our delegation was accorded warm hospitality, like in a family.

(?Maintaining) the China-Korea friendship, Hamhung, the second biggest city in the northern half of Korea, has largely contributed to the development of the China-Korea friendship.

On 16 February 1958, Premier Zhou Enlai, along with President Kim Il-song, visited the Hungnam chemical fertilizer plant. At that time, braving the (?strong cold wind) at the plant's plaza, Premier Zhou Enlai made an impassioned address to tens of thousands. In May 1979, with boundless admiration for Premier Zhou Enlai, the people in the city of Hamhung erected a statue of Zhou Enlai and a monument at the spot where he made that speech.

In June this year, Hamhung extablished a friendly city relationship with Shanghai. Some plants there are exchanging experiences with the relevant plants of China, while exchanging visits.

Inspecting the statue of Zhou Enlai along with Chairman Hwang Chang-yop, the Chinese NPC delegation was accorded a warm welcome by the plant workers. Comrade Xi Zhongzun meaningfully said: All Chinese comrades who have inspected the statue of Premier Zhou Enlai here have been struck by the warm affection of the Korean people who boundlessly admire Premier Zhou Enlai and set store in the China-Korea friendship.

Under the guidance of Vice Chairman Ho Chong-suk, over 70 years old, who visited our country last May, the delegation went round the Pakyon Falls, one of the three great waterfalls of Korea, and appreciated the beautiful, fascinating scenery.

On 12 October, the delegation visited the students and children's palace in Kaesong and was accorded a warm welcome by some 1,000-odd children. The pure emotions of natural and lively, lovable children toward the Chinese guests deeply moved all comrades of the delegation.

Delegation head Xi Zhongxun highly praised the Children's Palace, noting that it is very well built. When a reporter touched on the children's warm welcome of the delegation, a comrade driver of Korea who fought together with the Chinese People's Volunteers during the fatherland liberation war of Korea, said to the reporter: The children's friendly affection toward the Chinese guests comes from the heart. In order to pass on the Korea-China friendship to all generations to come, we carry out indoctrination of them from their youth and plant the seeds of Korea-China friendship in their youthful hearts.

XI ZHONGXUN SPEECH AT PYONGYANG BANQUET

SK181211 Pyongyang Domestic Service in Korean 2200 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Speech by Xi Zhongxun, member of the Political Bureau and the Secretariat of the Central Committee of the CPC and vice chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress [NPC] of China, head of the Chinese NPC delegation, at 15 October banquet at the PRC Embassy in Pyongyang]

[Text] Respected Vice President Comrade Pak Song-chol, Respected Comrade Ho Chong-suk and dear comrades:

It is an utmost pleasure to meet with the Korean comrades once again and share friendship with them as the friendship visit to the DPRK by the delegation of China's NPC is nearing its end. Cheerfully and warmly, we welcome Comrade Vice President Pak Song-chol, Comrade Ho Chong-suk and the other Korean comrades who are here with us at the banquet and we express our genuine gratitude to you all.

Although our visit has lasted only a few days, we cannot, however, describe the wonderful impressions and experiences we received in a few simple words. Korean comrades most perfectly organized our visit and sincerely looked after our lives under the personal care of the great leader of the Korean people Comrade President Kim Il-song and the dear comrade leader of the Korean people Comrade Secretary Kim Chong-il. We have spent very pleasant days feeling very much at home.

Availing ourselves of this opportunity, we, in the name of our delegation, express our genuine gratitude to all the Korean comrades who have received us. During our stay in Kroea, we toured Pyongyang, Hamhung and Kaesong, visited Mangyongdae, a place with a historic background, and we viewed the performance of "The Song of Glory," a musical and dance epic with a high degree of ideology and artistic beauty arranged in national form, and a wonderful and marvelous acrobatic show. We also toured plants, cooperative farms, schools, cultural and education institutions.

Wherever we went, we were accorded hospitality and a warm welcome by the Korean people, including the Korean comrades and young children. In particular, Comrade President Kim Il-song, whom the Chinese people deeply revere, despite the many claims of state affairs on his precious time, found time yesterday morning to meet and have a very warm and friendly conversation with us and cordially entertain us at a luncheon. We were deeply moved by this.

All this showed that the peoples of China and Korea are as close as real brothers and the members a family. This again demonstrates the revolutionary friendship and militant unity sealed in blood between the two parties, two countries and two peoples of China and Korea. We are greatly pleased with this visit.

With parting at hand, I, on behalf of the Chinese people and our delegation, extend most heartfelt thanks to the great leader of the Korean people Comrade President Kim Il-song, the dear comrade leader of the Korean people Comrade Secretary Kim Chong-il and the KWP and the Government of Korea, the Standing Committee of the Supreme People's Assembly [SPA] of the DPRK and the fraternal Korean people, our intimate comrades-in-arms.

The Chinese people have a proverb reading: "Seeing once is far better than hearing a hundred times." Through this visit, we have deeply realized that we are inferior to you in various fields for one reason or another. Regardless of their size, all the countries should be equal.

Every country has its own merits and demerits. Big countries have their merits and demerits and small countries have theirs. You have many things that we should emulate.

Our visit made the relations between the NPC of China and the SPA of the DPRK closer. What is more important in this visit is that we have learned many useful things from you. Learning such useful things from you will greatly help us in building socialist material civilization and socialist spiritual civilization, in particular, and in carrying out the lines, policies and propositions of the 12th National Congress of the party to open a new phase in socialist modernization.

All of the members of our delegation were visiting Korea for the first time. We have witnessed the radical changes brought about in Korea since the cease-fire and her new look and the vigorous and dynamic spirit of constant advance in all parts. We have also seen the stability of the situation in Korea and a firm faith and a high degree of political awareness of her people. The Korean people who voluntarily observe discipline and are civilized and courteous and in high spirits have made leaping progress in industrial and agricultural production and have registered proud successes in the fields of science, education and culture and art in particular.

We are deeply impressed by your great successes. I think this is a fruition of the wise guidance of the great leader Comrade Kim Il-song and the Central Committee of the KWP. Our delegation and the entire Chinese people are happy and proud of the fact that there are a great and outstanding leader, the hard core of revolutionary leadership, and a courageous and industrious people in our close neighbor.

We sincerely hope with the sentiments of close comrades in arms that Korea, our brotherly neighbor, will further prosper and develop and the Korean people will register brilliant successes in the struggle to carry out the decisions of the Sixth KWP Congress and capture a new higher peak of socialist construction.

During our visit we also witnessed how greatly the Korean people suffer from the division of their country and how ardent their aspiration is for an early reunification of their fatherland. The basic obstacles to the reunification of Korea today is the continued U.S. stationing of troops in South Korea, its wanton interference in the internal affairs of Korea and the Chon Tu-hwan clique's fascist terror rule and splittist policy aimed at creating two Koreas. Such hegemonism by the United States and treacheries by the Chon Tu-hwan clique arouse bitter hatred on the part of the Korean people and run up against the resolute opposition of the world's peace-loving people.

The Korean people's struggle for the independent and peaceful reunification of the country is entirely just and the world's peace-loving people stand on their side. Neither a concrete wall nor any splittist maneuvers can break the firm will of the Korean people aspiring for reunification or bar the inevitable trend of history developing toward the reunification of Korea. We are convinced that the reunification of Korea should and can certainly be achieved.

The Communist Party and Government of China and the entire Chinese people fully support the proposal for founding the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo [DCRK] advanced by Comrade President Kim Il-song, resolutely demand the total withdrawal of the U.S. troops from South Korea and decisively oppose the two Koreas plot. Under any future circumstances, the Chinese people will unshakably support the Korean people and remain their firm supporter till the complete reunification of Korea has been achieved.

Having fully immersed ourselves in the deep and thick friendliness of the Korean people and precious experiences, our delegation is about to leave your beautiful country. When we return home, we will convey all these to various ethnic groups and people of China.

China-Korea friendship will be brought into fuller bloom, greatly inspired and stimulated by the recent visit to China of Comrade President Kim Il-song, which yielded satisfactory fruit. The Chinese people will always remain close comrades in arms of the Korean people in the future struggle. The militant friendship between the Chinese and Korean peoples initiated and nursed personally by Comrade Mao Zedong and Comrade Zhou Enlai in their lifetimes together with Comrade President Kim Il-song is being further developed and strengthened today. The Chinese people greatly value the friendship and militant unity between the two peoples.

Concluding my speech, I wholeheartedly hope that the China-Korea friendship will be handed down through generations and will be everlasting.

Finally, I propose a toast to the ceaseless strengthening and development of the great friendship and militant unity between the two peoples of China and Korea; to a further accelerated prosperity of the DPRK; to the good health and long life of Comrade President Kim Il-song, the great leader of the Korean people and an intimate friend of the Chinese people; and to the good health of Comrade Secretary Kim Chong-il, the dear comrade leader of the Korean people; to the good health of the respected Comrade Vice President Pak Song-chol; to the good health of the respected Comrade Ho Chong-suk; and to the good health of all the comrades who are here with us.

Present at the rally were Gen Pak Hak-im, vice minister of the Korean People's Armed Forces, Gen Chu To-il, leader of the locally stationed army units, Kim Yong-chon, chairman of the Kaesong City People's Committee, Maj Gen Han Chu-kyong, senior delegate of the Korean-Chinese side of the Military Armistice Commission, and others.

In this speech at the rally, Kim Yong-chon said: The delegation's visit to the Kaesong area has forcefully confirmed the increasingly consolidated and developed and unbreakable friendship between the people and armed forces of Korea and China, and this is a tremendous inspiration to the people and troops in Kaesong who are striving for the complete victory of socialism and the independence and peaceful reunification of the fatherland while directly confronting the enemy.

He said: "The immortal feats the brave Chinese People's Volunteers performed on the Korean battlefield and their brilliant achievements will live forever in the minds of our people."

Kim Yong-chon said: The friendship between the people and armed forces of Korea and China is a special relationship, an inseparable relationship like lips and teeth, a relationship between revolutionary comrades in arms and a relationship cemented with blood. He said: The friendship between Korea and China will bloom more beautifully from generation to generation and will be everlasting as the rivers and mountains of the two countries.

In his speech at the rally, Han Xianchu, head of the delegation, said that he was deeply moved by the warm welcome and cordial reception accorded the delegation in the past few days and by the grand welcoming rally held by the people and troops in Kaesong City.

Han Xianchu said: Whenever we meet our Korean comrades in arms, we naturally recall the history of the glorious struggle in which the people and armed forces of China and Korea supported and helped each other in resisting our common enemy.

Han Xianchu reviewed the concern shown and the help provided by the Korean party, government and people for the Chinese People's Volunteers during the difficult war years.

He said: As the most fierce fighting was going on day and night, people and troops in the Kaesong area fought side by side with us and actively coordinated with us and we supported one another. This lofty internationalist spirit of the people in the Kaesong area and the whole of Korea is deeply imprinted on the minds of our volunteers.

He said: The close relations of standing together through thick and thin which the people of our two countries formed at a time of peril have been further consolidated and developed in the new historical period.

Han Xianchu said: Nearly 30 years have passed since the military armistice, but the manmade division has not yet come to an end. We are deeply convinced that, under the leadership of President Kim Il-song and the Korean Workers Party, the Korean people who have been waging an unremitting and protracted struggle are bound to win final victory in their sacred cause of reunifying their fatherland. An independent and reunified new Korea is sure to stand in east Asia.

Both sides presented silk banners to each other at the rally. The silk banner presented by Kim Yong-chon on behalf of Kaesong City and the locally stationed army units was inscribed with these words: "Long live the great militant friendship cemented with blood by the people and armed forces of Korea and China!" written on the silk banner presented by Han Xianchu on behalf of the delegation were these words: "The friendship between the people and armed forces of China and Korea will be everlasting."

In the evening, the Kaesong City People's Committee and the Kaesong garrison gave a banquet in honor of the delegation of former Chinese People's Volunteers.

[Special dispatch by Zhou Yizhi [0719 0315 0037] "Hong Kong and China Gas Company Transfers Registration From England to Hong Kong, Expressing Full Confidence in the Future of Hong Kong"]

[Text] Hong Kong, 15 Oct -- The Hong Kong and China Gas Company Limited announced on 14 October that its registration had been transferred from Britain to Hong Kong, thus turning it from a British company to a Hong Kong company. In a special ceremony held yesterday, the registrar general of Hong Kong presented the "Hong Kong Certificate of Incorporation" to Richard Charles Lee, chairman of the company. This was an unprecedented event in Hong Kong. It reflects the gas company's full confidence in the future of Hong Kong and in the future development of its business activities in Hong Kong.

The Hong Kong and China Gas Company was incorporated in Britain in 1862, with its subscribed capital calculated in pound sterling and was thus subject to British company legislation. However, its directors are Hong Kong residents. Moreover, it is one of Hong Kong's major public utility companies, playing an important role in Hong Kong. This transfer was approved by the British Parliament and the Hong Kong Legislative Council. After this transfer, the company will pay its capital duty and other fees to Hong Kong. This will benefit the Hong Kong residents and the company's shareholders.

In the present situation where rumors are ripe and share prices have plummeted, the transfer of this company will attract the close attention of various circles.

[Text] Beijing, October 19 (XINHUA) -- Deng Xiaoping had a cordial and pleasant conversation here this morning in the Great Hall of the People with General Mohammad Ziaul Haq, president of Pakistan.

Deng Xiaoping said that many changes had taken place in China in recent years and that stability and unity have been realized. The Chinese people are whole-heartedly engaged in construction, he added.

President Zia told Deng Xiaoping that, during his current visit he has seen the many changes brought about in China. "We have seen that reforms have been made in the leadership of the Chinese Communist Party and that more suitable leadership has been chosen." He said: "China has embarked on a road of prosperity and progress."

Deng Xiaoping said that the change is fundamental. "In order to maintain continuity of policies and the vitality of the state," he continued, "we must see to it that the ranks of the cadres gradually become younger. This must be our orientation. Big progress was made at our party's 12th national congress. But, the problem still remains to be solved." Deng explained that this work must be well done and besides seeing to it that younger revolutionaries get into the leadership, they also must be better educated and professionally more competent.

His talks with Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang were beneficial and constructive and the two sides shared identical views on regional and international issues.

Speaking on the international situation, President Zia said: "Pakistan and China are convinced that for the preservation of peace and security it is imperative that all states, large or small, strong or weak, must observe the principles of the peaceful coexistence and that no power must seek to impose its domination or hegemony on another."

He pointed out: "Afghanistan is the center of strife and turbulence in our region." "A political solution has to be found and the key, in our judgement, lies in an end to foreign military intervention and the withdrawal of foreign forces from Afghanistan," he said.

On the Kampuchean issue, the Pakistan president said: "Pakistan and China support the demand of Democratic Kampuchea for an end to foreign intervention, and for the right of the people of Kampuchea to determine their own destiny without external coercion, subversion or pressure of any kind."

"The crux of the Middle East problem" he said, "lies in the Palestine question and we hold that there can be no genuine settlement without withdrawal of Israeli forces from all Arab territories and without restitution of the rights of the Palestinian people."

President Zia said: "The 8-point plan adopted by the Arab summit held at Fes represents a correct, fair and reasonable basis for a comprehensive settlement of the Middle East questions."

Zhao Meets Pakistani Newsmen

OW191814 Beijing XINHUA in English 1620 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, October 19 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang met here this evening with Pakistani journalists accompanying President Ziaul Haq on his visit to China.

The premier said he had significant talks with the Pakistani president in the last two days. "We discussed the world situation, regional situation and the further development of bilateral relations. We have identical and similar views on almost all major world issues," he said.

Zhao said that both sides "expressed satisfaction with the development of bilateral relations in recent years. The two sides will make common efforts to find new ways and forms for economic, technological and trade cooperation on the basis of the existing sound base under the principle of mutual benefit. We have already reached an agreement on setting up a joint economic commission. I'm sure our two countries will enter into a new stage of all-round cooperation in the economic and technological fields."

Premier Zhao said President Ziaul Haq's visit is fruitful and a new contribution to the further development of Sino-Pakistani friendly relations. He stressed that developing Sino-Pakistani relations is an important part of China's foreign policy. "No matter what happens in the world in the future, we will never change our policy for developing Sino-Pakistani relations," he said.

Asked about China's stand on the Afghan issue, the premier said: "China shares Pakistan's analysis of the Afghan situation and its stand.

"The development of the situation in Afghanistan has already gone beyond what that superpower occupying Afghanistan expected when it sent its troops there. For two years or so, the people's resistance forces in Afghanistan have expanded instead of being weakened.

"The political solution to the Afghan problem must be based on that superpower withdrawing all its troops there. The most important decisive factor in solving this problem is the people's resistance forces of Afghanistan.

"Therefore, to support and strengthen Afghan people's struggle against the aggressor troops is at one with the effort to seek a political solution to the problem; they are not contradictory to each other," the premier said.

On the economic relations between the two countries, Ziaul Haq said the talks between leaders of the two countries have been successful and are bound to open a new path for cooperation between the two countries. "The agreement on the establishment of a joint economic commission signed today will bring beneficial results to both countries," he said.

Beijing Welcomes Visit

OW170935 Beijing in English to North America 0000 GMT 17 Oct 82

[Station commentary]

[Text] President Mohammad Ziaul Haq of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan is beginning a week-long official visit to China. This visit is his third since taking office. The Chinese Government and people warmly welcome this friend from a neighboring country.

China and Pakistan are friends of long standing. In the past few years, cooperation in various fields has been strengthened thanks to the common efforts of the governments and peoples of the two countries. Frequent exchanges of views on international and other issues have been conducive to peace and stability in Asia and the rest of the world.

President Ziaul Haq attaches great importance to developing friendly and cooperative relations with China. He has declared on many occasions that friendship with China is a cornerstone of the foreign policy of Pakistan. It is not only because the two countries have a common history of being oppressed by imperialists but also because they have a common task of safeguarding national sovereignty and territorial integrity, opposing hegemony and developing their national economies.

Both China and Pakistan belong to the Third World. Destiny has linked them together. They have always supported each other in their common struggle.

The Chinese people are glad that the people of Pakistan led by President Ziaul Haq have made great achievements in defending their national independence and sovereignty, preserving the unity of the country and developing their economy and culture. In the face of pressures of hegemonism, they have demonstrated their determination to persevere in principle and to defend their country's sovereignty and security. As an act of humanitarianism, they have settled nearly 3 million Afghan refugees. At the same time, they have improved their standard of living by increasing production. Last year, they became self-sufficient in meat. This year, the national economy has grown by nearly 7 percent.

In the international arena, Pakistan has been playing an increasingly important role as a member of both the Organization of the Islamic Conference and the Nonaligned Movement. Pakistan has supported the Palestinian Arab people in their just struggle against the Israeli Zionists. It has worked hard for South-South cooperation and a new international economic order. It has contributed to cooperation and reconciliation in south Asia. It has thus enhanced its international standing.

At present, the world situation is tense. In order to seek more hegemony, the two superpowers are bullying, interfering in and invading small and weak nations. Both China and Pakistan know that it is very important to strengthen the mutual understanding, unity and cooperation among the Third World countries.

Last May, Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang visited Pakistan and held fruitful talks with President Ziaul Haq. On behalf of the Chinese people, Premier Zhao expressed his respect for the people of Pakistan for their contribution to opposing hegemonism.

It can be predicted that the coming visit by President Ziaul Haq will have a considerable impact on world affairs.

Visits Water Project

OW191919 Beijing XINHUA in English 1556 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Text] Yichang, October 19 (XINHUA) -- Georges Marchais, general secretary of the French Communist Party Central Committee, told XINHUA today that China's gigantic Gezhouba water control project in the middle reaches of the Yangtze River "is indeed a great achievement."

Marchais said: "It shows that the Chinese are capable of using the most advanced science and technology to develop her own industry. The cheap electric power the project produces will boost the local industry. All this demonstrates that socialist China has great potentialities."

Before touring the site, General Secretary Marchais and the French Communist Party Central Committee delegation led by him watched a film on the damming of the river in April 1981 and the construction of a hydroelectric power station. They also saw an electric model of the project. Later, the delegation visited the dam, a hydroelectric power station, a spillway, an anti-silt deposit dike and a hydroelectric power station under construction. The French guests also watched the passage of ships through the ship locks.

The Yangtze River, totaling 6,300 kilometers, is the longest river in China, third in the world behind the Amazon and the Nile.

Guo Dingming, deputy chief engineer of the project, told the French guests that the Gezhouba dam, near Yichang City of central China's Hubei Province, is 2,561 meters long and 47 to 80 meters wide. It is a component of the Sanxia (three gorges) water control project designated to explore the Yangtze River. The earth work involved is the biggest in the world, he said.

The first stage of the gigantic hydraulic engineering project has basically been completed. It contains a 500-meter-wide, 27-span spillway gate; a 108-meter-wide, 6-span scouring sluice; a 280-meter-long and 34-meter wide ship lock for four 4,000-ton ships; a 120-meter-long and 18-meter-wide ship lock that can accommodate ships up to 3,000 tons; and a hydroelectric power station with a generating capacity of 965,000 kilowats, Guo said.

When the whole project is completed, the total generating capacity will exceed 2.715 million kilowatts. Two of the three ship locks attached to the project compare with the largest ship locks in the world. When the spillway gate and scouring sluice gate are opened, they can discharge 110,000 cubic meters of water, enough to control a catastrophic flood such as the one in 1870.

The railway and highway built on the top of the dam will form another artery linking north and south China, he said.

The delegation, accompanied by Qian Liren, deputy head of the International Liaison Department of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, arrived in Yichang from Xian by special plane at noon. This evening, leading members of the C.P.C. Yichang Prefectual Committee and Yichang committee met and dined with the French guests.

'ARAFAT SAYS TALKS WITH KING HUSAYN SUCCESSFUL

[Text] Damascus, October 13 (XINHUA) -- Palestine Liberation Organization leader Yasir 'Arafat described his three-day talks with King Husayn of Jordan as constructive and successful.

Speaking at a press conference in Amman yesterday, 'Arafat said that the king's proposal last month for a Jordanian-Palestinian confederation was an important part in the talks, but the Palestine National Council had to decide that point.

'Arafat said he had agreed with King Husayn to set up a Palestinian-Jordanian committee to work on consolidating ties between Jordan and the PLO.

He called U.S. President Ronald Reagan's recent Middle East proposals "a step forward," but added that it ignored Palestine's self-determination and did not refer to the PLO as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people.

'Arafat left Amman for Tunisia today.

LEBANON'S AL-JUMAYYIL ADDRESSES UNGA 18 OCT

OW181930 Beijing XINHUA in English 1842 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] United Nations, October 18 (XINHUA) -- Lebanese President Amin al-Jumayyil today called for the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of all non-Lebanese forces from his country and appealed to the world community to help his country regain its real independence and rebuild its economy.

Addressing the plenary meeting of the General Assembly this morning, the 40-year-old president stressed, "as a member of the United Nations, we want our rights to be restored to us."

"Lebanon can no longer endure the burdens of the tragic war that has been raging in our land for the past eight years," he noted.

Addressing the Palestinian problem, Al-Jumayyil said: the Palestinians should "live in peace and freedom and self-determination in their land, Palestine."

He hoped that "Palestinians and Israelis, with the support of the world community, will reach a settlement that will allow them both to enjoy the fullness of rights."

On relations between Syria and Lebanon, the president said: "They have always been close in the past. It is natural therefore that Syria and Lebanon should develop strong relations in the future in the context of independence, sovereignty and mutual respect."

Referring to the domestic policy, Al-Jumayyil said, "we shall maintain our cultural plurality, but within a non-compromising political unity. Cultural diversity is to us inseparable from political oneness."

His speech was interrupted again and again by the outbursts of applause from the assembly floor.

REAGAN, AL-JUMAYYIL HOLD TALKS IN WASHINGTON

OW200751 Beijing XINHUA in English 0714 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Text] Washington, October 19 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan and Lebanese President Amin al-Jumayyil today agreed on the prompt withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon to allow Lebanon to restore sovereignty and territorial integrity.

After their meeting at the White House, Reagan said their talks "covered a full range of issues particularly focused on a shared objective of the prompt withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon."

"We also discussed Lebanon's goals in restoring the authority and control of the central government in all parts of the country," he said. "In this regard, I reaffirmed United States support for the sovereignty, unity, territorial integrity and freedom of Lebanon."

Al-Jumayyil, in his remarks before his departure from the White House, stressed that Lebanon is "committed to the immediate withdrawal of all foreign forces" from Lebanese soil.

A senior U.S. official said afterwards that Reagan indicated in the talks that the United States will play a "very active role" in the matter. And Ambassador Draper is expected to go to the Middle East again in the near future. The official acknowledged, however, that the withdrawal of the Israeli and Syrian troops and the remaining PLO units from Lebanon will be "difficult" and "complicated".

Al-Jumayyil expressed the hope in the talks that the multinational peace-keeping force could stay through the withdrawals of all foreign forces. Reagan responded that the United States will give "serious consideration" to the matter.

Other topics discussed were "reconstruction and enlargement of the Lebanese Army" and Lebanon's economic reconstruction, according to the U.S. official.

Al-Jumayyil talked with Secretary of State George Shultz this afternoon on the need to expand the multinational force in Lebanon and conferred later with Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger on rebuilding the Lebanese Army.

Al-Jumayyil is leaving today for Paris and Rome which, along with Washington, have joined in the multinational peace-keeping force in Lebanon.

ARTICLE ON STRENGTHENED TIES BETWEEN CPC, MASSES

HK200415 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 15 Oct 82 p 5

[Article by Li Songchen [2621 2646 2525]: "Strengthen the Ties Between the Party and the Masses"]

[Text] In his speech at the 12th party congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang emphatically pointed out that we should "strengthen the ties between the party and the masses." In the general program and the chapters and sections about party members and cadres in the new party constitution approved by the 12th party congress, there are also many passages that stress that the party should represent the interests of the masses, carry out the mass line and strengthen its ties with the masses. A conscientious study of these passages is undoubtedly very important for us for the continuous strengthening of ties between the party and the masses.

I

It is the nature and aim of our party that determines that our party must pay great attention to strengthening its ties with the masses. The first passage in the new party constitution reads as follows: "The CPC is a pioneer force of the Chinese working class, the loyal representative of the interests of the people of all nationalities throughout China and the leading core for China's socialist cuase." The nature of our party, however, shows that our party is not an ordinary organization of the working class or of the people of all nationalities, but a pioneer force formed by the advanced elements among the working class and the people of all nationalities. Our party is the "leading core for China's socialist cause." Moreover, it also shows that our party is a part of the working class and a part of the people of all nationalities. Since our party comes from the masses of the people, it must maintain its close item with them.

Close ties with the masses are clear signs that distinguish our party, the Communist Party, from all other political parties. All the programs, lines, principles and policies of our party are formulated according to the interests, desires and demands of the masses of the people and should be carried out through their practice. Therefore, all our party organizations must maintain close ties with the masses of the people in doing all their work. Often, some bourgeois political parties also raise the banner of representing the people, but this can only be a fraud. A political party that represents bourgeois interests which are diametrically opposed to the fundamental interest of the masses of the people can never have close ties with the masses. Only a proletarian political party that regards serving the people and wholeheartedly pursuing their interests as its aim can really have confidence in the masses, rely on them and maintain close ties with them.

Marxists are of the opinion that the history of society has been created by the masses of the people and not by "heroic personages." Moreover, the wisdom and creativeness of the laboring people is boundless. Communists do not rely on their own innate "gifts," but on their mastery of the laws governing the development of society and on their faith in, support from and close ties with the masses of people. When he explained the relations between the party and the masses of the people, Stalin cited the story of Antaeus, son of the sea god, Poseidon, and the earth goddess, Gaea. Antaeus was universally regarded as a matchless hero. His matchless strength was drawn from the earth -- his mother who had brought him up. Whenever he was locked in deadly combat with an enemy and felt a shortage of strength, he would touch the earth with his body and gain fresh strength from the earth. Therefore, what he most feared was that with some trick his enemy would make it impossible for him to touch the earth. Later, a man called Hercules discovered this weakness of Antaeus, lured him to lose touch with the earth and held him up in the air. Thus Antaeus lost his source of strength and was strangled in the air by his enemy. Stalin cited this myth to explain the relations between the party and the masses of the people in a manner that afforded much food for thought.

Communism is a tremendous cause of centuries for thousands and millions of people and is a cause that cannot be achieved by a small number of people. Our party already has 39 million members, but at any time party members are only a minority compared with the number of the masses of the people. Therefore, whatever we do, we must have confidence in the masses of the people, utilize their wisdom and respect their creativeness. Otherwise, it is impossible for us to achieve victory in our cause. As Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out: "A large amount of the work of our various state organs and of our various social undertakings should depend on nonparty people doing it. If we are not good at relying on the masses of the people or are not good at cooperating with nonparty people, it is impossible for us to do our work well." During the years of the ferocious wars, an important reason why the people's army led by our party was able to defeat the strong enemy under extremely difficult conditions was that they deeply understood that "the richest source of power to wage war lies in the masses of the people." They had confidence in, mobilized, organized and relied on the masses of the people and turned the revolutionary war into a war of the masses of the people. The reason why after the victory of the democratic revolution, our party was able to achieve the basic victory of the socialist revolution and score remarkable achievements in socialist construction was also because our party succeeded in persistently maintaining its close ties with the masses of the people, having confidence in them, relying on them and carrying out the mass line in doing all concrete work. Many facts have proved that maintaining close ties with the masses of the people and implementing the mass line in all our work is a fundamental guarantee for the victory of the revolution led by our party.

II

Maintaining close ties with the masses of the people is our party's fine traditional work style. After our party obtained the state power over the whole country, placing further stresses on the ties between the party and the masses of people has become of even greater significance. As Comrade Deng Xiaoping said: "Now our party has already become a party in power all over the country; therefore, the danger of divorce from the masses is such greater than in the past and so is the harm of divorce from the masses." In the more than 30 years during which our party has been in power, the 1950's was a period when our party maintained very close ties with the masses. Later, however, because of the expansion of the scope of class struggle, we injured some of the masses. Moreover, the guideline of our party's work departed from the aim of solving the principal contradiction between the daily increasing material and cultural demands of the masses of the people and the backward social production. This also harmed the masses' revolutionary enthusiasm and their initiative in building socialism. Because of the defects in the structure of the party's leading organ this situation worsened remarkably, and during the "Great Cultural Revolution," the interference and sabotage of Lin Biao and the "gang of four" caused further damage to the relations between the party and the people. From this we can see that since our party came to power in the whole country, we are likely to be divorced from the masses if we are not careful enough. This will inevitably lead to serous mistakes. We should keep this experience and lesson well in our minds.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our party has paid great attention to and placed great stress on the ties between the party and the masses. The "Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of Our Party Since the Founding of the PRC" approved by the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee raises the call: "All party organizations, members and cadres must go deep among the masses and into the practice, be modest and careful, share weal and woe with the masses and resolutely overcome bureaucracy." In his "Speech at the Meeting to Celebrate the 60th Anniversary of the Founding of the CPC," Comrade Hu Yaobang emphatically pointed out: "In doing any work, we should rely on the people, have confidence in the people, use their wisdom and respect their creativeness. Furthermore, we should receive the people's supervision. If we do not act in this manner, we will never achieve any successes and on the contrary, we will fail." If we carefully read the new party constitution, we will find that the stress on the maintenance of close ties with the masses is not just generally intensified but greatly intensified.

In the "General Program" of the new party constitution the clause of "serving the people wholeheartedly" is included in the three basic requirements that must be satisfied in strengthening the construction of the party. In section 2 of the chapter "Party Members" it is stressed that party members "must wholeheartedly serve the people and have no scruple in giving up all they have in their life-long struggle for the realization of communism." In previous party constitutions, we can only find mention of this in their general programs, but no such clear stipulation in their clauses. With regard to the requirements for a party in power, the new party constitution further clearly points out in this chapter: "A CPC member is always a common member of the laboring people. No party members are allowed to pursue any personal interests or privilege beyond the scope of the personal interests and power of office that are stipulated by the regulations and policies." As for the stipulation related to the duties of party members, it is especially added to the new party constitution that party members must "adhere to the principle that the interests of the party and the people override everything, that personal interests should be subordinate to the interests of party and the people and that party members should be the first to bear hardships and last to enjoy comforts and should never use their power of office to pursue their private end or seek personal interests at the expense of public interests." The chapter on "Party Cadres" is a chapter that the previous party constitutions never contained. In listing the basic indispensible requirements for party cadres, the new party constitution emphasizes that party cadres must "strengthen their close ties with the masses, correctly carry out the party's mass line, consciously receive the criticism and supervision of the masses and oppose bureaucracy." In short, throughout the new party constitution, from the general program to the concrete clauses, the idea that the party should strengthen its ties with the masses permeates. Moreover, there are concrete stipulations in the new party constitution on ways to strengthen the ties with the masses. This is something the previous party constitutions cannot draw a parallel with.

From the above-listed facts, we can see how much importance our party has attached to the strengthening of its ties with the masses.

III

How should the party strengthen its ties with the masses? In its general program, the new party constitution raises three basic requirements, of which the second requirement of "serving the people wholeheartedly" makes concrete stipulations about how to strengthen the ties between the party and the masses. This requirement contains the following three main aspects: 1) the party should represent the basic interests of the masses of the people; 2) the party must share weal and woe with the masses; and 3) the party must carry out a mass line.

In order to maintain its close ties with the masses, the party must really represent the interests of the masses of the people. Marxists hold that the people are the masters of history and the party is only a tool of the people for fulfilling a specific historical task in a specific historical period. Therefore, the party exists for the cause of the people and can only represent the interests of the people. "Besides the interests of the working class and the broad masses of the people, it has no specific interests of its own." All the activities of the party must be aimed at serving the people, must be responsible for the people and must be carried out according to the people's will. By representing the interests of the people, we mean that the party should be concerned about the sufferings of the people and help them to solve the actual problems related to their production, work, study and lives. For example, at present in many places, the masses are faced with difficulties related to housing, traffic, supplies of clothing, vegetables and fuel, lack of kindergartens and medical services and so forth. All these are actual problems in the lives of the masses of the people that we must make great efforts to solve step by step in a planned manner. It is much better to conscientiously do a couple of good things than have dozens of empty talks about high-sounding theory.

In order to maintain close ties with the masses, the party must share good and bad with them. The second of the three basic requirements that are put forward in the general program of the new party constitution specifically stipulates: "Throughout the process of leading the masses to carry out the struggle for the realization of the ideal of communism, the party should share good and bad with the masses and maintain the closest of ties with them and should not allow any of its members to sever themselves from the masses or to place themselves above the masses." Sharing good and bad with the masses is the fine virtue that a party member must have and is the fine tradition of our party. Before our party acquired state power over the whole country and before it was in the position of a party in power, most of the members and cadres of our party were able to share good and bad with the masses and carry out hard struggle together with the masses. However, after our party acquired state power, because of the change in its position, arrogance in having achieved merits and the idea of seeking privilege and advocating extravagance, ostentation and waste developed. This has been aggravated by the influence of ultraselfishness and the ultra-individualism propagated by the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques during the "Great Cultural Revolution" and by the corruption of the ideology of the exploiting classes under the new situation. As a result, at present in our party, there are indeed some unhealthy practices refusing to share good and bad with the masses and of being divorced from the masses. A small number of party members and cadres have used their power of office to obtain gains at the expense of the state and the masses and to seek private interests for themselves, their families, their relatives and their friends. A few party members and cadres have even become so degenerate as to commit embezzlement, graft and other serious economic crimes. These malpractices have seriously damaged the party's prestige and undermined the ties between the party and the masses. Therefore, we must expose, handle and deal blows at these malpractices.

In order to strengthen its ties with the masses, the party must carry out its mass line: "The party persists in educating the masses in communist ideology and carries out in its work the mass line of doing everything for the masses and relying on the masses for everything and thus turning the party's correct ideas into the conscious actions of the masses." The above is the last sentence in the paragraph of the general program of the new party constitution about the second of the three basic requirements. A review of the history of the revolutionary struggle that our party led the people to carry out will make us understand how good our people are. When our party's line and principles were correct, the masses of the people rallied around the party and fought under the party's leadership. When there were mistakes related to the guiding ideology in our party's work, the masses of the people helped the party to correct its mistakes. Even when the party's errors seriously harmed the interests of the masses of the people because of the flesh and blood ties between the party and the masses of the people and because of education in Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought that they received for a long time, they still had great confidence in our party and believed that our party would be able to correct its mistakes. This fine quality and awareness of the people in our country always urges our party to do everything for the people and to rely on them for everything. In implementing the mass line, we should adopt the work method of from the masses to the masses. This means that we should "take the ideas of the masses (scattered and unsystematic ideas) and concentrate them (through study turn them into concentrated and systematic ideas), then go to the masses and propagate and explain these ideas until the masses embrace them as their own, hold fast to them and translate them into action, and test the correctness of these ideas in such action. Then, once again concentrate ideas from the masses and once again go to the masses so that the ideas are persevered in and carried through. This goes on, over and over again in an endless spiral, with the ideas becoming more correct, more vital and richer each time." We should regard the ideas from the masses as something we should analyze to see what ideas are correct and what ideas are wrong.

All the correct ideas should be conscientiously accepted. We should vigorously lead the masses to turn these ideas into actions. As for the incorrect ideas, we should strengthen our political and ideological education to earnestly correct them and guide the masses to make progress.

IV

In his report to the 12th party congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang called on all the comrades and all the organizations of the party to earnestly strengthen the party's work among the workers, peasants and intellectuals. This was a very relevant call.

We must see the new situation that has emerged after the change in the composition of the ranks of the working class and the establishment of the production responsibility system in our rural areas. Because of the retirement of a large number of old workers, many young people have been admitted into the ranks of the working class. Moreover, because some party members have been continuously transferred to management departments, the number of party members on the first line of production has fallen. What is most serious is that the more difficult the posts of labor, the smaller the number of party members. This has weakened our party's direct ties with the industrial workers. Since the establishment of the production responsibility system, there has emerged an unprecedently fine situation. However, there are also a small number of party members who pay attention only to their own immediate production work and are not concerned about the interests of the party and the masses. Some party branches have even abandoned their leadership over the masses. This has weakened the party's ties with the peasants. In order to change the above-mentioned situation, we must vigorously strengthen our party's work on the first line of industrial production, mobilize competent party members to go to work on the first line of production and at the same time, recruit qualified fine workers into the party. In the rural areas, we should further perfect the base-level organizations of our party and strengthen our ideological education among peasants of various ages in diverse areas in order to promote the healthy development of the political, economic and cultural life in our rural areas along the socialist orientation. On all fronts, we must especially pay attention to intellectuals' roles, help them overcome the actual difficulties in their work and life, improve our ideological and political education among them in order to make this education more suited to their characteristics, and pay attention to conscientiously admitting into the party those intellectuals who are qualified for party membership. By so doing, we will achieve the aim of strengthening the party's ties with the intellectuals in every possible way.

The mass bodies, such as trade unions, CYL organizations and women's organizations are links between the party and the masses of the people. Continuously strengthening and improving the leadership of these mass organizations and giving full play to these organizations' roles is an important channel for the further strengthening of the ties between the party and the masses. At present, all the mass organizations must satisfactorily solve the problem of making themselves official in nature. First, we should start doing this work in the organizations of the national and the provincial, municipal and autonomous regional levels, improve their methods in exercising their leadership and help them to overcome bureaucracy. The cadres of mass organizations at all levels must go deep among the masses at the grass root and strengthen their work of investigation, study, inspection and supervision. They must be concerned about the sufferings of their masses, listen to the voices of the masses and thus enable their organizations to become the spokesmen of the masses, the representatives of the interests of the masses and the strong links between the party and the masses.

The cause of socialist modernization embodies the common desire and the basic interests of the people of all nationalities throughout the country. Through thousands of steeling times our party has now become firmer and more mature. Our political situation is unprecedentedly stable and our confidence in the certain victory in the cuase of four modernizations has been even more greatly heightened.

In a situation in which the trend of the times and the desire of the people are all favorable to our cause, as long as we have a firm confidence in the masses of the people, rely on them and consciously pursue benefits for them, the ties between the party and the masses will surely become increasingly closer, all our party's principles and policies will surely be better implemented and we will surely win greater victories in carrying out our socialist cause.

OFFICIAL'S VIEWS ON NUCLEAR POWER REPORTED

[Newsletter by RENMIN RIBAO reporter Wei Yanan [7614 0068 0589]: "Build Nuclear Power Stations, Develop New Energy Sources -- Jiang Shengjie [1203 4110 7132], Deputy Executive Director of Council of China Nuclear Society and Chairman of Science and Technology Committee of Ministry of Nuclear Industry, Discusses Nuclear Power"]

[Text] Is it necessary for China to develop nuclear power? Is nuclear power safe? These questions are the subjects of concern and doubt in discussions on the problem of energy resources. In the recently held second group meeting of the second plenary session of China's Scientific and Technological Association, Jiang Shengjie, the deputy excutive director of the Council of the China Nuclear Studies Society and chairman of the Science and Technology Committee of the Ministry of Nuclear Industry, pointed out: In order to ensure that the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production will be quadrupled, it is necessary to exploit new energy resources by building nuclear power stations. Nuclear power is a safe, clean and economic energy resource.

Why Is It Necessary To Develop Nuclear Power?

Jiang Shengjie said: In our implementation of the magnificent goal of quadrupling the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production as proposed by the 12th CPC National Congress, we will experience many difficulties and hardships in the task of developing energy resources. China is rich in coal and hydroelectric power, but its population is large and its total consumption of energy enormous. By the year 2000, the total consumption of energy will be equivalent to 1.3 to 1.5 billion tons of standard coal, an increase of over 100 percent. Only if we vigorously develop all available energy resources, including nuclear energy, can we meet the minimum demand. Our energy resources are not evenly distributed. Seventy percent of our water is situated in southwest China while 60 percent of the coal is situated in north China. Only 10 percent of the energy resources lie in the coastal provinces and northeast China, areas which produce 73 percent of our total value of industrial output. If we wish to double the gross annual value of output in these areas, relying on ordinary energy resources involving the transportation of coal over long distances or the transmission of electricity through supervoltage cables is going to produce economic and technical difficulties. Nuclear power-generated electricity as an important source of energy is already technologically developed, economically reasonable, can be used safely and should be popularized in industry. At present, in 24 countries and regions of the world, 266 civil nuclear power stations are in use. Eight percent of the total amount of the world's electricity is generated by nuclear power. Many countries and energy resource research institutes think that large-scale development of nuclear power is a fundamental step in solving the energy problem during the late 20th century and the early part of the 21st century. As early as 1970, Premier Zhou Enlai pointed out that we had to develop nuclear power and build nuclear power stations. At present, preparations are underway for a 300,000 kilowatt nuclear power station. We must definitely develop nuclear power much further in the future.

Do We Have the Capacity To Develop Nuclear Power?

Jiang Shengjie told us: We have rich natural uranium sources, ascertained to be sufficient to supply fuel for a 15 million kilowatt nuclear power station to run continuously for 30 years; an integrated industrial system for the production of nuclear fuel has already been built; our uranium refining capacity is sufficient to supply the annual needs of the nuclear power stations; we have all sorts of experimental facilities and equipment in the fields of physics, thermal dynamics, water power, chemistry, corrosion, fuels, materials, safety and the handling of the three wastes; working teams for scientific research and system design and a basic technical work team for building a complete set of facilities have been formed; we possess coordinated capacity in the fields of geological investigation, relevant scientific research, manufacture of equipment, electronic apparatus, metallic and non-metallic materials and electric power design. All of this shows that we have the ability to depend mainly on our own efforts in developing nuclear power.

Will It Explode?

Since the utilization of nuclear energy began with the atomic bomb, it is easy for people to connect the utilization of nuclear energy with atomic explosions and to worry about the safety of nuclear power stations. Jiang Shengjie said: Such worries are utterly unnecessary. Nuclear reactors are like atomic bombs in that they use nuclear fuels and utilize the tremendous energy produced by nuclear fission. But an atomic bomb uses high concentration fissionable materials; over 90 percent of the content of these materials is uranium 235 or plutonium 239. Low concentration fissionable materials are used in producing nuclear power, the concentration of uranium 235 or plutonium 239 being only 3 percent. An atomic bomb has to release energy in an instant to cause an explosion, but under no condition could there be a nuclear explosion in a nuclear power station. This is like the fact that we can light strong liqueur with a match but it is impossible to light beer.

Will Radioactive Pollution Be Caused?

In answering this question, Jiang Shengjie said: Man in fact lives in a naturally radioactive environment. Cosmic rays in the air, and uranium, thorium and potassium 40 in the earth and water are all radioactive. In modern societies, there is artificial radioactivity produced by radio therapy and others. The problem is not one of the existence of radioactivity but of the radiation level and its effects on living creatures. The permitted annual per capita radiation level proposed by the International Committee for Protection Against Radiation is 500 millirem (excluding radiation that exists naturally and in radio therapy). Someone who wears a luminous watch receives 1 millirem of radiation each year, someone who matches color television receives 1 millirem of radiation each year and someone who has an X-ray of his chest receives 40 millirem of radiation. In England, where nuclear power is better developed, according to statistics, the annual per capita radiation level caused by nuclear power stations is less than 0.1 millirem. Those who live in the vicinity of these stations receive less than 5 millirem of radiation.

Creatures which occupy a lower position in the biological scale are less sensitive to radiation. A nuclear power station which runs regularly does no harm to human beings, therefore it cannot have any effect on other creatures. Compared with pollution caused by coal, nuclear energy is the cleanest energy resource. Nevertheless, Jiang Shangjie emphasized the proper handling of highly radioactive fissionable products. It is necessary to recover the uranium and plutonium from the irradiated fuel, solidify the remains and put them into abandoned mines where geological conditions are relatively stable. As a result, they will be separated from the biological environment for a long time. This is an effective method adopted by many countries in handling radioactive waste.

How Did the Three Mile Island Incident Occur?

On 28 March 1979, the greatest accident in the history of nuclear power happened in the No 2 nuclear power station on Three Mile Island, Pennsylvania. According to the report by Jiang Shengjie, the accident was caused by operational errors and a shortage of equipment. When the accident happened, some of the radioactive gases in the nuclear reactor were discharged through chimneys into the atmosphere, but the safety facilities functioned in accordance with the demands of the design, and very little radioactive matter entered the environment. During the course of the accident, correct information was not collected, and consequently panic occured. Some inhabitants moved away from their homes, and later, the picture was exaggerated by antinuclear people in the West. Thus serious misunderstandings about the safety of nuclear power resulted. According to an investigation after the incident, the 2.16 million inhabitants who lived within a radius of 50 miles of the nuclear power station received a per capita radiation dosage of 1.5 millirem, equivalent to the amount recieved by someone who receives cosmic rays when traveling at high altitude in an airplane for 4 hours. The level of radioactivity in the samples of soil, river water, plants and milk collected near the nuclear power station had not increased. The investigation committee appointed by the U.S. NRC announced that neither cancer nor genetic defects would be caused by this accident.

Jiang Shengjie said: This extremely alarming accident teaches us a lesson in the operation of nuclear power stations, and has also proved that contemporary nuclear power facilities have a considerable capacity to overcome accidents; the accident should never be used as a pretext for stopping the development of nuclear power. When the design, running and safety of the nuclear power stations are further improved, the chance of having accidents will decrease.

Is It Economical?

One characteristic of nuclear power is that a large amount of investment is required in its basic construction, but the cost of fuel is low. In some foreign countries the unit price (U.S. $/kilowatt) in the construction of a nuclear power station is 120 percent to 150 percent of that of a thermal power plant, but the cost of nuclear power is only 50 to 90 percent of that of thermal power. Economic superiority can be maintained once a power station goes into operation. Jiang Shengjie said: Since we do not have experience in building and running a nuclear power station, we still do not have reliable economic data at present, but it is tentatively estimated that the data are quite close to those of the coal power stations. This is economically acceptable. With developments in nuclear power, the amount of investment and the cost in generating nuclear power will greatly decrease.

How Can We Develop Nuclear Power in China?

Jiang Shengjie suggested:

1. Since the distribution of energy resources in our country does not coincide with the distribution of population and industry, it is necessary to build nuclear power stations in the coastal areas where energy is badly needed, to achieve rational distribution.

2. Judging from our present situation, small nuclear power stations should first be developed, then larger ones, and then the large ones, small ones and medium-sized ones together.

3. By gradually developing dual-purpose nuclear power stations which generate both heat and electricity, and by promoting heat efficiency, good economic results can be obtained.

4. The construction of a nuclear power station requires a long period of time, so plans for developing nuclear power should be formulated as early as possible.

5. Nuclear power is highly complex, and the technology required is very complicated; no department can build the stations alone, and we must strengthen leadership and organize coordination so as to ensure that the construction of nuclear power stations is accomplished with a high degree of quality.

FANG WEIZHONG OUTLINES PLAN TO BOOST ECONOMY

OW200443 Beijing XINHUA in English 1256 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, October 19 (XINHUA) -- Fang Weizhong, vice-minister of the State Planning Commission, today outlined China's plan to attain the goal of quadrupling its industrial and agricultural output value by 2000 and the country's Sixth Five-Year Plan (1981-1985) at the opening session of the second China-Europe business leaders symposium.

By maintaining an average annual growth rate of slightly more than seven percent, he said, China will be able to achieve the goal of quadrupling its industrial and agricultural output value by the end of this century.

"Actually," he said, "China's industrial and agricultural production growth rate averaged 8.2 percent annually from 1953 to 1980 even though there were twists and turns in the country's economic construction." The 1979-81 average annual rate was 6.7 percent, when efforts were being made to readjust the nation's economy.

Efforts to readjust China's economy have been successful, he said. China's total industrial output value is expected to increase nearly six percent this year over 1981 and its 1982 grain output is estimated to be 10 million tons more than last year, he added.

To achieve the goal of quadrupling industrial and agricultural production, he said, China now plans to double or more than double the output of energy and industrial raw materials. Efforts will also go into improving technology and the quality of products and reducing the cost of production so that in 20 years, about twice as much value can be created by using the same amount of energy and materials.

The development of electronics, nuclear energy, petro-chemical and industries producing new-type materials, as well as the information industry, will be speeded up. These are regarded as new branches of industry in China.

The goal of quadrupling industry and agriculture will be achieve in two steps, Fang Weizhong said. From 1980 to 1990, he said, efforts will be focused on economic restructuring and readjustment and on consolidating enterprises. During this period, the annual growth rate of industrial and agricultural production may possibly be lower than seven percent. But the rate is expected to exceed seven percent in the last ten years of this century.

During the Sixth Five-Year Plan period (1981-85), he said, the total value of China's industrial and agricultural output is planned to increase at an average annual rate of four to five percent. China will achieve basic balance between state revenues and expenditures and stabilize prices.

Fang Weizhong said that China has decided on three strategic priorities, namely, agriculture, energy and communications, and education and science.

China plans to increase agricultural production by implementing and furthering improving the job responsibility system, popularizing scientific research results and accelerating rural capital construction. As regards energy production, he said priority will be given to the development of the coal fields of Shanxi, northeast China, Inner Mongolia, Henan, Jiangsu, Shandong, Anhui and Guizhou. Meanwhile, China will be following a policy of simultaneously developing land and offshore petroleum resources. Big hydroelectric power stations will be built.

He continued: "China will import advanced technology and its scientists will concentrate on tackling key technical problems to facilitate the adoption and wider application of new technology."

He disclosed that China will soon work out a 20-year program for the development of science, technology and education. Education and science expenditures will be increased, he said.

According to Fang Weizhong, the tasks for the Sixth Five-Year Plan period include:

-- Continue to readjust the proportion between different economic sectors and product mix to get a better coordinated development between agriculture, light industry and heavy industry.

-- Consolidate enterprises and improve management.

-- Consolidate and improve those initial reforms in the economic management system and draw up an overall plan for reforms.

-- Undertake technical transformation in a selected number of key industrial enterprises to help renovate out-dated equipment and adopt advanced technology.

-- Concentrate funds on the development of key energy and communications projects. Energy and communications funds will amount to 40 percent of the nation's total construction investment during this period.

-- Tackle key scientific and technological problems while importing new technology.

-- Allocate more money to education and expand enrollment in institutions of higher learning while continuing to develop part-time and vocational education, and increase school enrollment.

-- Strive for a relatively great expansion of foreign trade.

-- Continue to control population growth and increase employment.

MEETING ON AIR DEFENSE PROJECTS HELD IN NANJING

OW200518 Nanjing Jiangsu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] The 8-day national meeting to exchange experiences in waterproofing technology for the people's air defense projects ended in Nanjing today, according to a report by this station's correspondent (Huang Xianben) and reporter (Guo Lili).

More than 300 representatives from all parts of the country heard reports on waterproofing experiences, delivered at the meeting by the people's air defense offices of Nanjing, Shanghai, Tianjin, Liaoning and Jiangsu's Yancheng Prefecture. They also watched on-the-spot technical demonstrations and inspected waterproof repairs on an air raid defense project.

The representatives visited a number of Nanjing Municipality's air defense projects that can be used both in peacetime and wartime. Plans for improving air defense projects' waterproofing work were mapped out at the meeting, stressing that while such projects were built mainly for air raid defense purposes, waterproofing measures should also be taken by considering (?typhoons) and other local conditions. Only thus can the purpose of such defense projects be served, the representatives pointed out.

EDITORIAL STRESSES ROLE OF LITERATURE, ART

HK180545 Beijing WENYI BAO in Chinese No 9, 7 Sep 82 pp 10-11

[Editorial: "The Important Role of Literature and Art in Building Socialist Spiritual Civilization"]

[Text] The 12th party congress, a congress of historic significance, has opened victoriously. This congress will thoroughly summarize the historical successes in the past 6 years and point out the correct path for making continuous progress toward thoroughly eliminating the remaining influence of the 10 years of civil disorder and creating an overall new situation in socialist modernization. In the political field, it puts forward four measures to ensure adherence to the socialist system and the realization of modernization. In the economic field, it clearly sets out the strategic goal, plan and key tasks for development in the coming 20 years.

Thus, this congress has drawn up a clear blueprint for the future development of the whole party and the people of all nationalities throughout the country, and has issued a vigorous call for building up a highly civilized, highly democratic, powerful, new, modern, socialist China.

This is an inspiring, magnificent and arduous historical task. In order to carry out this task, we must build up a highly developed socialist civilization while building up a highly developed material civilization. In the process of carrying out this magnificent and arduous task, especially in the process of building up socialist spiritual civilization, the literary and art workers, just like political and ideological workers, media and publishing workers, theoreticians and educational workers, have an especially important responsibility. Every literary and art worker, whether a writer, commentator or artist, should be aware of his important historical duty. He should clearly realize his responsibility in carrying out this great cause, work conscientiously with a sense of responsibility for the people, create a large number of literary and art works of fine quality and strive to make greater and better contributions toward the construction of socialist spiritual civilization.

The core of the construction of the socialist spiritual civilization is communist ideological construction. Since our literature and art is a socialist literature and art, it must be guided by a Marxist world outlook. We resolutely oppose the propaganda and spreading of feudalist and bourgeois ideology through literature and art. We encourage our writers to consciously educate people in communist ideology through their literary and art works and thus foster in their readers communist ideals, faith and morality and imbue them with a sense of being masters of the socialist country, a sense of collectivism, a sense of socialist rights and duties and a sense of organization and discipline. They should also inspire people with the spirit of serving the people and devotion to the revolution and imbue them with a communist attitude toward labor and a communist concept of labor. They should teach the people to have a firm political orientation and foster the work style of self-reliance and hard struggle and educate them in socialist patriotism and internationalism. We should have the breadth of vision to realize the necessity for training and educating a generation of new people armed with communist ideology through fine socialist literary and art works. We should never understimate the role of socialist literature and art in educating people.

In the future construction of socialist spiritual civilization, we should make especially great efforts to draw the attention of all those in literary and art circles to this role. At the same time, we should not give too narrow a scope to the social role of socialist literature, stressing only its direct role in carrying out ideological education and neglecting or denying its role of esthetic education in molding people's spirit and of cultural education in enlightening people. A work of literature or art which epitomizes the times, reflects social contradictions and depicts heroic characters can inspire readers with the strength to make vigorous progress; therefore, we should energetically encourage such literary and art works. On the other hand, works which describe the beautiful feelings of the people and express people's love of magnificent and beautiful scenery are not necessarily incapable of purifying the readers' souls or increasing their virtue. Advocating education through communist ideology does not mean the rejection of the glorious legacy of thousands of years of Chinese and foreign culture and art nor the refusal to draw lessons from excellent modern foreign literary and art works. We uphold the view that we should critically draw helpful lessons from all the excellent achievements of the literature and art of mankind, and, on this basis, develop our nation's socialist literature and art work.

The key to giving full play to the important role of literature and art in building up socialist spiritual civilization lies in strenghening the ideological construction of the ranks of literary and art workers. Over the past decades, we have formed a contingent of seasoned literary and art workers.

During the past few years a number of promising young literary and art workers have joined this contingent. The ranks of literary and art workers have grown to unprecedented magnitude and strength. However, we must realize that we are faced with the problem of making the work of ideological construction catch up with this growth. After the national forum on the ideological front, the bourgeois liberalization trend has been to some extent corrected, but we still have to pay attention seriously to this problem.

Bourgeois individualist thinking and practices, such as divorcing oneself from the masses, indulging in self-admiration and lavishing praise on one another have been developing. Some of our literary and art workers and groups have also, to some extent, been infected with these unhealthy practices in society. In order to put an end to this evil trend and resist the corruption of capitalist ideology, we should advocate and encourage communist ideology and practice and be guided in our action by communist ideology. Apart from this, we still time and again find the following malpractices: Some people are divorced from reality and refuse to make progress. They do not study the new situation and new problems on the basis of summing up our historical experiences and lessons, but doubt the necessity and significance of the party's adjustment of its literary and art policies since the 3d plenary session of its Central Committee. They deny the correct trend and achievements of literary and art work during the past few years and continue to adopt dogmatic and metaphysical methods and attitudes toward, and simple and crude administrative measures to handle, complicated literary and art phenomena. This is a reflection of the influence of "leftism" which we should continue to overcome. In short, it is necessary for us to continue to persistently carry out the struggle on two fronts in our literary and art work.

Here, we should emphatically point out that over the past few years, our literary and art ranks have relaxed their efforts in studying Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought. As a result, many people lack understanding of Marxist theory and cannot satisfactorily use the Marxist stand, viewpoints and methods to investigate society and analyze problems, and a very small number of them have even lost their faith in communism. That is why encouraging and effectively organizing our literary and art workers to study Marxist theory in order to make them understand and master Marxism better, and strengthening ideological and political work among them, has already become an urgent task. At the same time, we should also pay attention to organizing literary and art workers of various professions to go deep into life and have contact with the new masses of people. We should change the practice of a small number of literary and art workers who are not willing to leave the big cities and their comfortable studies. We are at the stage of a historical turning point. In the present period, class struggle is no longer the principal contradiction in our society, but it will exist for a long time within certain areas and may intensify under certain conditions.

There are a large number of contradictions among the people in our society. The development of the modernization program has brought about tremendous changes in the life of our society. It should be said that our writers and commentators have not yet made a sufficiently deep study of this epoch. In order to create literary and art works worthy of this great epoch, to play a greater role in building the socialist spiritual civilization and to promote the creation of a new and flourishing situation in literature and art, all ambitious and high-minded writers and commentators should undoubtedly plunge into the struggle of remoulding the world and into the excitement of life, and use a Marxist world outlook and methodology to study all people and all forms of life, to study relationships between people and the changes within them and to study and reflect the rapidly changing times. Only the writers who have accumulated a wealth of diverse experiences of life and who have, moreover, a true and deep insight into people's life during this new epoch, can create great artistic works. If we have a number of such works, we will be able to change the present situation in which some sham works that are divorced from life and devoid of ideological content have a market. Moreover, with a number of such works, we will also be able to satisfy, to a certain extent, the daily increasing demand of the whole of society for spiritual food.

The party and the people highly appreciate the flourishing situation beginning to emerge in our cultural and artistic work. At the same time, they have also placed higher demands on literary and art circles. In order to more satisfactorily educate people in the communist spirit, inspire the revolutionary morale of the broad masses of people and continuously increase people's confidence in achieving a great future, we must first of all conscientiously study all the documents of the 12th party congress, deeply and thoroughly understand the basic spirit of these documents, implement this spirit in all literary and art work, continue to carry out the struggle on two fronts, promote our creative work in literature and art and literary and art criticism, progress along the correct path and thus make greater contributions to the cause of building a highly democratic and highly civilized, powerful, modern, socialist country.

WENYI BAO ON IMPLEMENTING 'DOUBLE HUNDRED' POLICY

HK200816 Beijing WENYI BAO in Chinese No 9, 7 Sep 82 pp 27-29

[Article by Huang Zexin [7806 3419 2450]: "The Only Way To Make Socialist Literature and Art Flourish -- Studying Some of Comrade Mao Zedong's Expositions Concerning the 'Double Hundred' Policy"]]

[Text] "Letting a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of thought contend" is the party's long-term and basic guiding principle for developing science and culture. In the process of implementing this guiding principle, we always encounter interference from the "left" and the right. Therefore, it is an important task facing all literary and art workers to profoundly study Comrade Mao Zedong's relevant expositions in order to unify understanding, overcome interference and effectively implement the "double hundred" policy to promote the flourishing and development of literature and art.

The principle of "letting a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of thought contend" has correctly reflected objective law governing the development of literature and art. It is not a policy based on subjective arbitrary thinking. Only by fully realizing this can we consciously and firmly master and implement this policy.

The law of the unity of opposites has told us that in human society and the natural world, any entity is bound to be resolved into different parts. Under different specific situations, these different parts give rise to different contents and conditions. Just as in other social phenomena, in literature and art there exist by contrast right and wrong on the one hand and good and bad on the other. "What is correct invariably develops in the course of struggle with what is wrong. The true, the good and the beautiful always exist side by side in contrast with the false, the evil and the ugly, and grow in struggle with them." Only through free competition and free discussion can we continuously push literature and art to a new high. This refers to the development of literature and art. With regard to the process of creation, art, in essence, is a kind of free creative activity. With regard to the creation of literary and artistic works, the selection of subject matter, the refining of the material, the portrayal of images and the use of language are closely connected with the creative characteristics of writers and artists. Different writers and artists have their own different artistic characteristics symbolized by their colorful artistic styles. This variety of artistic styles, which reflects the richness and color of the practical life, can satisfy people's needs for many and varied artistic tastes. It is just as Lenin pointed out: "It is indisputable that with regard to literary undertakings, the practice of mechanical equalitarianism, dichotomization and subordinating the minority of the majority will never do. It is equally indisputable that in literary undertakings, individual characteristics of creation and a vast field of individual likings should be absolutely guaranteed." The "double hundred" policy encourages the free development of artistic forms and styles. Free contention among different schools in science fully conforms with the objective law of artistic development and creation.

Marxists maintain that objective law is independent of man's will. "Any violation of natural law, even if a minor one, can only throw the matter into confusion and disrupt work procedure." (Stalin: "The Problems of Soviet Socialist Economy") Since the "double hundred" policy has scientifically reflected the objective law governing the development and creation of literature and art, we should obey, respect and implement it. If we deviate from this policy, we are bound to harm literary and art undertakings. We have seen profound lessons in this respect.

After the smashing of the "gang of four," to meet the needs of the development of literature and art after drawing historical experiences, the party Central Committee has repeatedly and unswervingly implemented the "double hundred" policy and stressed the importance of "refraining from interfering" in literature and art. This has ushered in a new period for the free development of literature and art. Over the past few years, various kinds of art have been vigorously advancing along the path of revolutionary realism and have truly reflected the change of the era and voiced the aspirations of the broad masses of people with many and varied artistic forms and styles. This has played a magnificent role in uniting with and encouraging people to march toward the "four modernizations." In the meantime, a number of new fighters of valiant and heroic bearing are entering the literary and art world. They not only add splendor to our literary and art circles with their own unique style of work but also demonstrate the brilliant future of our literary and artistic undertakings. Some people say that we have made unprecedented achievements in literature and art over the past 5 years. This is not an exaggerated appraisal.

Of course, while realizing that we have scored remarkable successes over the past 5 years as a result of the implementation of the "double hundred" policy, we should also pay attention to the struggles presently existing. Over a long period in the past, it was mainly the "leftist" ideas which obstructed the implementation of the "double hundred" policy, because a resistant and negative attitude was adopted toward the "double hundred" policy. People with leftist ideas spread the theories that the "double hundred" policy was a policy of liberalization which was devoid of class character. They maintained that the ideological trend of bourgeois liberalization was brought about by the "double hundred" policy. They set political principles against the "double hundred" policy in order to negate the policy. They set the party leadership against the "double hundred" policy in order to negate the latter. In practice, due to the fact that they denied the truth that the "double hundred" policy reflected the objective law of art and that the "double hundred" policy was the only way for developing socialist literature and art, they frequently adopted administrative means and coercive and repressive measures to lead literature and art (a certain prohibition is necessary, but this measure should not be applied arbitrarily). They even urged literary and art departments and periodicals to "guarantee" that they would not express any views or publish literary and art works with even small mistakes. Although such "leftist" views have been repeatedly criticized, their mistakes have not yet been thoroughly corrected. When we are opposing the bourgeois liberalization, such "leftist" ideas gain ground again.

Is the "double hundred" policy a policy of liberalization which is devoid of class character, as they have described? The answer is no. It is an absolutely firm policy of the proletariat. Those who negate the class character of the "double hundred" policy might argue plausibly and at length: Chairman Mao said that the "double hundred" policy is devoid of class character. This is a misunderstanding. Comrade Mao Zedong said: "Literally the two slogans -- let a hundred flowers blossom and let a hundred schools of thought contend -- have no class character; the proletariat can turn them to account, and so can the bourgeoisie or others." What he stressed was "literarlly," even "revolution" has no class character, let alone the "double hundred" policy. The objective law itself has no class character. However, guiding principles which are worked out according to this law and the act of mastering and using the law to serve people of a certain category are characterized by marked class character. Therefore, the key of the problem lies in its essence rather than in its literal meaning.

The "double hundred" policy was not raised by other classes. It was formulated by the proletarian CPC Central Committee and Comrade Mao Zedong in light of the specific situations both at home and abroad. They also put forth the "six political criteria." This has fully shown the class character of this policy, although some contents of these six criteria have been obsolete. The "four basic principles" for the period of socialist construction put forth by Comrade Deng Xiaoping is identical with the spirit of the "six political criteria" and the former conforms more effectively with the present situation. With this explicit political principle, we can march along the correct track of criticism and self-criticism. Since the "double hundred" policy has an explicit aim and marked tendentiousness, how can we say that it is a policy of bourgeois liberalization which has no class character? To implement this policy, we can only enhance the standing of Marxism-Leninism and overcome liberalization of thought, but not the opposite. Some people have deviated from the "four basic principles" and have spread feudal and bourgeois pernicious ideological influence in the name of the "double hundred" policy. This should not be attributed to the policy itself. This problem should be made clear. Otherwise we will be bound to take an erroneous stand of negating this important party policy.

Some comrades admit that the "double hundred" policy is a policy of the proletariat. However, in the process of implementing this policy, they want people to "guarantee" that there will be fragrant flowers only and that not a single thing with any erroneous tendency will be tolerated. The intentions of these comrades are good, but they take a metaphysical approach to problems. Literature and art always develop in accordance with the law of the unity of opposites. The good and the correct exist by contrast with the bad and the wrong. If we handle matters with circumspection, we will be able to reduce erroneous things, but it is unrealistic to demand a "guarantee" because we need a process in order to understand things. Sometimes it is difficult to discern their nature all at once. Things which seemed bad might be proved to be good later, whereas things which seemed good might later be proved to be bad. We encounter such things from time to time. Apart from that, after understanding one thing, there is another thing which we should explore. We are always undergoing a process of development from the "realm of necessity" to the "realm of freedom." On this long and tortuous journey of cognition, can anyone "guarantee" that not a single mistake will be committed? The advantage of the "double hundred" policy does not lie in its ability of preventing erroneous things, but in its effective checking of the erroneous things. When erroneous views and bad literary and art works occur, if we adopt an oversimplified administrative means to suppress and put them under a ban, we can never solve the problems. On the contrary, we will hamper the airing of correct viewpoints and the creation of outstanding literary and art works. Therefore, under the party leadership, only through free discussions and competition, criticism and debate can truth defeat fallacy and fragrant flowers replace weeds. With regard to this matter, we should respect objective reality and materialist dialectics. We should not take a metaphysical attitude to approach complicated literary phenomenon and replace the objective law of things with subjective desires.

While eliminating interference from the "left," we should also oppose obstruction from the right. Some people distort the essence of the "double hundred" policy with rightist viewpoints. They maintain that since the "double hundred" policy is being implemented, the party leadership over literature and art can be opposed arbitrarily and the guiding role of Marxism can be negated. They regard literary and art creation purely as an individual undertaking. They pay no attention to the social effects, set the "double hundred" policy against the principle of "serving the people and socialism," use the "double hundred" policy to oppose the act of serving the people and socialism and are against the normal practice of literary and art criticism. Such erroneous ideas are reflected in the laissez-faire attitude, laxness and weakness in exercising leadership and editorial work. As a result, the normal practice of powerful literary and art criticism cannot be carried out.

These erroneous ideological tendencies have reflected that some comrades stick to the bourgeois individual stand to treat the "double hundred" policy with a pragmatist attitude. They do not realize that the "double hundred" policy is an important means for safeguarding and strengthening the leadership role of Marxism and that the "double hundred" policy cannot be used to oppose the party leadership and negate the guiding role of Marxism. They also forget that the "double hundred" policy is closely connected with the practice of "serving the people and socialism." It is completely wrong to negate the practice of "serving the people and socialism" in the name of the implementation of the "double hundred" policy.

Therefore, in the process of implementing the "double hundred" policy, we should carry out struggles on the two fronts. These struggles supplement each other. "If we fail to oppose the ideas of bourgeois liberalization, that means we supply ammunition for those who stubbornly stick to the 'leftist' guiding ideology." (Hu Qiaomu: "Several Problems on the Present Ideological Front") They will take advantage of some unhealthy and passive literary and art phenomenon to attack the "double hundred" policy and negate literary and art achievements gained since the party's third plenary session. "If we fail to continue to correct the 'leftist' guiding ideology, this will offer an excuse for those who spread the ideological trends of bourgeois liberalization." (ibid) In other words, those who advocate liberalization would say that there now is no artistic democracy and freedom of creation. They would try to cast off the party leadership and break away from the socialist road in the name of opposing "leftist" ideology. It is obvious that we should on no account neglect or slacken the struggle in any aspect.

Due to the lack of practical experience in implementing the "double hundred" policy, a number of problems have arisen in the process of pursuing it. These problems remain to be solved. Therefore we should constantly sum up new experience and implement the "double hundred" policy more effectively to open up a broad way in the interest of the flourishing and development of socialist literature and art.

BA YI ON CPC LEADERS MUZZLING ARMY PRESS OPINION

OW191405 (Clandestine) Ba Yi Radio in Mandarin to China 1330 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] In his report to the 12th party congress, Comrade Hu Yaobang emphatically pointed out: Whether we had the Marxist courage to conduct self-criticism of our party's mistakes constituted the key issue deciding whether things could be set right.

This may be called a golden saying. It is because of a lack of such Marxist courage that we have long been unable to correct our mistakes thoroughly and in good time. Regrettably, some individual leaders of the party Central Committee precisely lack such Marxist courage to solve major issues left over from history, such as the frameups and false and wrong cases fabricated by executioner Kang Sheng during the rectification movement in Yanan, the case of the so-called Gao Gang-Rao Shushi antiparty alliance, the Lin Biao case fabricated by the gang of four, and a number of frameups and false and wrong cases caused by the Lin Biao case.

Party members in our army have indomitably displayed their Marxist courage during these years in firmly demanding that past mistakes be corrected. They have boldly pointed out current unhealthy tendencies. At several important meetings of the party Central Committee, founding members of our army, such as Ye Jianying, Xu Chengwu and Wei Guoqing, frankly expressed their vews on major issues about current domestic and foreign policies. Taking a principled stand, they pointed out mistakes in the party Central Committee's present work and made suggestions on how to correct such mistakes. It is because old comrades of our army uphold principle that it is possible to correct the mistakes of certain leading comrades of the party Central Committee in a timely way. As a result, our country has avoided suffering tremendous losses.

Founding members of our army have served the people wholeheartedly and have done their best to safeguard the interests of the country and of the people. They are examples all our army commanders and fighters should learn from.

As far as our army is concerned, what is now needed is not to talk glibly about displaying Marxist courage, but to allow army newspapers and magazines, as well as all army commanders and fighters, to speak out freely and to boldly discuss major issues of deep concern to the people and armymen. It should be no longer permitted to denounce army newspapers and magazines for committing so-called political and ideological mistakes and to call for them to make public self-criticism once they express their views on major issues. When some old comrades openly expressed their views, they have even been labeled as being perniciously influenced by leftist ideas, pursuing an erroneous line, slandering responsible comrades of the party Central Committee, making insinuations about the party's guiding ideology, and so on and so forth.

People may ask: If we call on people to display their Marxist courage on the one hand and muzzle them by sticking labels on them on the other, how can we correct our mistakes and set things right? It is necessary to implement the resolutions of the 12th party congress to the letter, in order to enable everyone to display his Marxist courage. Only thus will we be able to correct our past and present mistakes.

DEFENSE MINISTER ON DEFECTION OF PRC PILOT

OW190305 Taipei CNA in English 0250 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Text] Taipei, Oct 18 (CNA) -- Minister Sung Chang-chih said Monday that the latest pilot defection from Red China is good news to this country and he welcomes pilots on the mainland to defect to this free country. Sung was interviewed by reporters when he visited an exhibition on "The Beauty of Kinmen" at the Far Eastern Department Store in Taipei in the morning.

The defection of the pilot who flew to South Korea from Red China revealed that great conflicts are happening in mainland China and the morale in its army is low, Sung said. But the faith of the people here in the future recovery of the mainland was strengthened, Sung added.

FORMER MIG PILOT COMMENTS ON PRC DEFECTION

[Text] Taipei, Oct 18 (CNA) -- The latest pilot defection from Red China is "a slap on the face" for Teng Hsiao-ping, said a former MIG pilot who defected to the Republic of China aboard a MIG-19 in 1977.

Col Fan Yuan-yen, who was a squadron commander at the time of his defection, said the most recent defection indicated rising discontent on the mainland despite Teng's temporary economic relaxation in the countryside. Col Fan said the pilot flew to Korea because Taiwan was outside the range of MIG-19s based in Shantung, north China. He himself flew to Taiwan from Fukien, which faces the Taiwan Straits.

Chinese Air Force broadcasts beamed to the mainland daily advise Peiping's pilots stationed in north China and Manchuria to fly their aircraft to the Republic of South Korea.

The pilot, who was identified as Wu Jung-chien, was the third Chinese Communist pilot to land in South Korea. On Sept 15, 1961, Col Shao Hsi-yen and Col Kao Yu-tsung flew an AN-2 light plane from Shantung to an island off the Korean coast. Shao and Kao were allowed to proceed to Taiwan in accordance with their wishes but the Korean authorities retained their plane. Even so, the two were awarded handsomely by the ROC Government as promised. Col Fan and three other communist pilots also received very handsome rewards after their defection.

The first Chinese Communist pilot defection to Taiwan occured in 1950. The unidentified pilot was killed after the MIG-15 crashlanded on a beach at Nan-ao, Yilan on Jan 20 that year.

PAPER OPPOSES ENACTING 'ANOTHER BASIC LAW'

OW161157 Taipei CHUNG YANG JIH PAO in Chinese 13 Oct 82 p 2

[Article by Hsieh Cheng-i: "To Enact Another 'Basic Law of the State' Will Destroy the Democratic Constitutional Government"]

[Excerpts] At a gathering on 28 September, some nonparty political figures issued a "statement on state affairs," entitled "Democracy, Unity and the Salvation of Taiwan." The statement contains no major "inventions" except its discussion in the second paragraph of "enacting the basic law of the state." As a nonparty public figure, this writer believes the discussion on "enacting the basic law of the state" in the present situation in which our country finds itself is a harmful act. This is because the ROC already has a constitution, which was adopted by the National Assembly on 25 December 1946 and which constitutes the basis of all political activities in Taiwan. Because we have this constitution, the people in Taiwan, including a large section of intellectuals, and even overseas Chinese, are able to work with one heart for our country.

Because we have this constitution, we have been able to stand firm for the last 3 decades and more. Today, in going as far as bringing up the discussion of "enacting the basic law of the state," are these nonparty figures trying to bring about the extinction of the ROC? Are they trying to abolish the present fundamental law of our country, which provides the common basis for the struggle of other nonparty persons?

If we did not have this constitution, what purpose would we have in Taiwan? What else would we have to win the support and recognition of the Chinese people at home and abroad? This idea, which will destroy the democratic constitutional government, is absolutely impermissible.

We believe that negating the present constitution and enacting a new "basic law of the state" will make the 18 million people in Taiwan appear unjust and put them in hopeless situation. Worse, it may create a major crisis for the country and the people. No responsible political figures will do such a thing.

1. The abrogation of our constitution is tantamount to the complete uprooting of the organizational foundation of the ROC Government.

2. In abolishing the ROC Constitution, we would be signaling to our compatriots in the mainland that Taiwan is seeking a separate way out, which in other words means Taiwan is "cutting itself from" China.

Political activists must have a grasp of Chinese history. They must realize that no leaders in China during the last century dared to abandon even an inch of China's territory, let alone Taiwan, which was recovered by our compatriots after innumerable hardships. All Chinese will definitely affirm the inseparability of Taiwan from the Chinese mainland.

If the 18 million people in Taiwan tried to separate from China and become "independent," they would, first of all, alienate themselves from Overseas Chinese. Second, they would be unable to have the sympathy of the compatriots on the Chinese mainland. The CPC would set off the "dynamite" of "nationalist feelings" and create political disturbances. All this would be unbearable to us.

3. Suppose we agreed to abrogate the present constitution and enact the so-called "basic law of the state." This writer would like to ask the nonparty political figures: Will the Kuomintang enact a better basic law than the present one? Are non-Kuomintang persons capable of drafting another basic law that is acceptable to the ruling party?

We have faith only in the ROC Constitution adopted by the National Assembly in 1946. No other law can contravene this constitution. Whoever proposes enacting another basic law of the state is challenging the constitution.

We cannot tolerate any political attempt to abrogate the ROC Constitution. Furthermore, we hope the ruling party will adhere strictly to the essence and provisions of the constitution in order to win the support and recognition of our 18 million compatriots and to achieve peaceful reunification of China on that basis.

PRIME MINISTER: MARTIAL LAW REMAINS NECESSARY

OW180526 Taipei International Service in English 0100 GMT 17 Oct 82

[Text] Premier Sun Yung-hsuan has said: Martial law is maintained in the Republic of China to shield the nation from the Chinese Communist threat. He emphasized that martial law is a matter of necessity, not time. In reply to legislators who enquired if martial law would now be dropped, after more than 30 years of application, Sun warned that martial law may be extended for another 40 years or more if the situation warrants.

Minister of National Defense Sung Chang-chih, said that martial law is based on the Constitution of the ROC. Any violation of martial law, therefore, is punishable under this law and does not run contrary to the constitution. Minister Sung said even though martial law has lasted more than 30 years, it would be wrong to think it can be discontinued at the moment the enemy hints at peace. He said the Chinese Communists' intention is evident. They have tried all means of warfare, whether it be cold, hot or united front tactics. The minister reported that the Chinese Communists have recently established a group whose mission is to isolate the ROC internationally. This, he said, is a clear sign that the communists' attempts to infiltrate and subvert have never ceased. For this reason, Minister Sung emphasized that the continued application of martial law is necessary.

PREMIER 'REJECTS' TALKS WITH 'PEIPING REGIME'

OW200421 Taipei CNA in English 0312 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Text] Taipei, Oct. 20 (CNA) -- Premier Sun Yun-hsuan Tuesday categorically rejected any possibility of entering into any sort of "peace talks" with the Peiping regime, saying that the whole idea as has been proposed recently is nothing but mere naivety and the consequence could be very dangerous to this country.

Replying to questions raised by Legislator Chao Huei-mo, the premier said the communist regime has thus far tried every possible way to lure the ROC Government to the negotiation table and then to maneuver the situation with the united front warfare strategy to their best advantage.

He stressed any response to this vicious invitation would bring loss of confidence and morale in this republic internally and the loss of support for the long-established anti-communist goal of this country from friendly nations.

At the same time, those countries unfriendly to the ROC Government will exert pressure on this country to accept terms and conditions offered by the Peiping regime, including the termination of arms sales, he said.

Based on the bitter experience in the so-called peace talks conducted on the mainland over 30 years ago, the premier warned compatriots in this country to remain alert against the smoke screen of peace talks, and he called on the public not to fall into the communist trap again.

The only answer to this vicious invitation is "no dialog, no contact and no communication," the premier stressed.

CHU: ANY PRC-UK AGREEMENT ON HONG KONG 'VOID'

OW200415 Taipei CNA in English 0254 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Text] Taipei, Oct. 19 (CNA) -- Foreign Affairs Minister Chu Fu-Sung reiterated Tuesday the Republic of China will consider null and void any agreement concerning Hong Kong reached between Red China and the United Kingdom.

Chu pointed out that absolute majority of the people in Hong Kong are freedom-loving, and the Government of the Republic of China are deeply concerned about their welfare, security and freedom.

In answering interpellation at the Legislative Yuan, he said the government opposes any action that will upset the peaceful and free life of the people in Hong Kong.

The Chinese in Hong Kong want to maintain freedom there, he said, adding that such wish should be respected.

Nobody wants to see Hong Kong to be taken under the tyrannical rule of the Peiping regime, added the minister.

U.S. APPROVES OPENING OF CCNAA BOSTON OFFICE

OW190530 Taipei International Service in English 0100 GMT 17 Oct 82

[Text] The Coordination Council for North American Affairs [CCNAA] has finally opened its doors. Ever since the passing of the Taiwan Relations Act, the Republic of China has been fighting for the reestablishment of its Boston office and it has now been confirmed by the U.S. State Department. It is interesting to note that the United States should choose this moment to approve the Boston office. It is an indication that the U.S. State Department will not let any unreasonable Chinese Communist interference affect its policy toward the ROC. Before the severence of relations with Washington, the ROC maintained 15 consulates in the United States and with the addition of the Boston office only 5 more offices are left to restore.

The establishment of the CCNAA Boston office, although small, may be a harbinger of additional organizations to come.

Following the official confirmation of the Boston office's establishment, a State Department spokesman said: Operations will commence shortly. He said the approval of additional CCNAA offices does not represent any shift in U.S. policy toward Taiwan. It only reflects the necessity for such an office.

In Taipei it is understood preparations are busily under way for the establishment of the Boston office and Boston chief (Liu Shui-chi) has already flown to Boston to apply the finishing touches.

Meanwhile, the CHINA TIMES reports from Washington that ownership of Twin Oaks, the ROC Embassy in Washington D.C. from 1937 to 1978, is back in the hand of the ROC. The paper disclosed that the CCNAA took the estate from the friends of Free China on September 29. A few days before diplomatic ties were severed between Washington and Taipei in 1979, the estate was turned over to the friends of Free China.

PAPER VIEWS TRADE PROSPECTS WITH EAST EUROPE

OW190949 Taipei CHUNG KUO SHI PAO in Chinese 12 Oct 82 p 2

[Editorial: "Prospects of Trade With East Europe"]

[Excerpts] A report this paper published recently indicated that businessmen and industrialists of this country are going to East Europe in groups to gain an understanding of market conditions there. This will be an organized action by the businessmen to expand commercial contacts with East Europe since the government allowed such trade several years ago. The action is quite noteworthy.

The East European market should never be neglected since the total GNP of the East European countries, excluding the Soviet Union, exceeds that of West Germany and is approximately equal to the total GNP of Britain and France. Furthermore, the economy of East Europe will apparently develop faster than that of West Europe over the next 10 years, though economic development was slowed in East Europe in the past. Such a large market should not be neglected.

Our competitors -- including Korea, Hong Kong, Singapore, Thailand, and Malaysia -- long ago opened trade with East Europe. All these countries disapprove of East Europe's political ideology and oppose the communist system. They engage in vigorously expanding trade with East Europe merely to gain economic benefits. On the other hand, no East European countries approve of the free economic system of Hong Kong, Korea, Thailand or Malaysia. However, this political difference does not affect the trade carried on among these countries, just as trade between the Soviet Union and West Europe is not affected by the political differences.

In view of this, we eagerly welcome the action taken by the businessmen and industrialists in their efforts to expand trade with East Europe and hope that the government will attach importance to this trade and act vigorously to assist them.

However, in order to promote trade with East Europe, there still exist a few problems:

First of all, it should be noted that the trade between East Europe and the Free World will never amount to a very large portion of the total GNP of East European countries. This is a natural result arising from their closed economic system. The East European countries can never compete with the Free World in producing consumer goods and free import is not allowed in these countries. This means that the volume of our export to East Europe will not be too large. On the contrary, our imports from East Europe may increase as industry develops in East Europe.

In promoting trade with East Europe, we should also note that we have only one party to deal with: either the local government or the trade unit formed under the local government. Under such circumstances, we may suffer great losses in our trade if we fail to organize one unified or several big groups of exporters and importers. At the same time, our country cannot give up, at the present stage, guarding against indirect trade with the Chinese Communists through a third party. East Europe is engaged in a fairly large trade with the Chinese Communists. It is quite possible that our exporters and importers may unknowingly get involved in "trilateral trade" with the Chinese Communists through East Europe.

In this connection, we propose that the government consider assigning a few prospective factories and companies to organize a joint trade group to expand trade with East Europe. All exporters and importers that want to do business with East European countries will have to join this group and export and import business with East Europe must be carried out by this group or under its supervision. The government should provide these groups with supervision and guarantees. In supervision, the government should ensure that export commodities meet contract requirements and that both parties, the buyer and the seller, are qualified for conducting the trade. In providing guarantees, what is most important is that when businessmen unfortunately get involved in "trilateral trade" with the Chinese Communists or when products of the Chinese Communists are found in imported commodities, the government should protect the rights of the victims who unknowingly get involved.

East Europe is a promising market that remains to be explored. However, this market contains quite a few pitfalls. This market will prove truly advantageous to this country only if the government acts vigorously and generously to help businessmen and if businessmen are careful and honest in their dealings.

OFFICIAL REAFFIRMS NO TRADE WITH MAINLAND POLICY

OW200341 Taipei CNA in English 0248 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Text] Taipei, Oct 19 (CNA) -- V.C. Siew, director general of the Board of Foreign Trade under the Economics Ministry, reaffirmed Tuesday the nation will not transact business with Communist China.

Asked by William Larry Rother, chief of the Hong Kong bureau of NEWSWEEK magazine, who is visiting the ROC to take part in the double tenth day celebration, Siew made clear the nation's basic policy.

True, some products are indirectly exported into the China mainland by money-makers in Hong Kong, the head of the board said, but that is out of the government's control, he explained.

Siew ruled out the possibility of limiting exports from ROC into Hong Kong.

CHU FU-SUNG OUTLINES NATIONAL FOREIGN POLICY

OW151447 Taipei CNA in English 1400 GMT 15 Oct 82

[Text] Taipei, Oct 15 (CNA) -- The basic national foreign policy is anti-communist and to recover the Chinese mainland, Foreign Minister Chu Fu-sung said Friday.

Answering an interpellation at the Legislative Yuan, Minister Chu said the basic policy of no talks and no compromise with the Chinese Communists will never be changed regardless of the communist attempts to infiltrate and create confusion on this free bastion as well as their international united front tactics to isolate this country.

The nation's general goal in diplomacy is to work out a breakthrough so as to restore the nation's international position, he said. He asked for joint efforts by the government and the people in helping the Foreign Ministry accomplish this.

TAIPEI NOTES PRC MILITARY, NAVAL ACTIVITIES

[Text] In Taipei, informed sources warn that the Chinese Communists are stepping up their military preparations along the Taiwan Strait, organizing teams of militiamen at sea. Chinese Communist cadres are organizing aquatic drills, short-ranged battle drills along with the construction of camouflaged vessels modeled after Taiwan's fishing boats. The sources say this is a clear indication that the Chinese Communists have never relinquished their plan to invade Taiwan by force.

It is reported that since 1976 ships of from 5 to 350 tons have been constructed on the Chinese mainland to resemble tuna fishing vessels of the Republic of China and, up to the present, more than 100 of these boats have been detected by the Republic of China's navy. It is suspected that the Chinese Communists hope to intrude into Taiwan's fishing grounds unnoticed to carry out intelligence missions on the Pescadores to obtain navigation and meteorological data. The Chinese Communists may also be preparing for wartime maneuvers, interfering with Free Chinese naval operations with the camouflaged vessels operating as landing craft.

The sources also reveal that fishing boats from the mainland have recently approached the Republic of China's sea vessels on the pretense of losing their way or asking for necessities and aid. These instances have multiplied in recent years leading experts to believe that the Chinese Communists are making an all-out effort to extract as much confidential data as possible regarding the naval operations of the Republic of China.

HSIN WAN PAO CRITICIZES U.S. TAIWAN POLICY

HK160404 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 15 Oct 82 pp 4, 7

[Dispatch From Beijing: "The Chinese People Will Absolutely Not Accept the U.S. One China, One Taiwan Plot"]

[Text] Beijing, 15 Oct -- Many people in Beijing hold that the United States is still pursuing a policy once advocated by Dulles. It regards Taiwan as its "unsinkable aircraft carrier" and is firmly grasping it. They say that the "Taiwan Relations Act" seriously interferes in China's internal affairs and that if the U.S. authorities are bent on having their own way, serious disputes will occur between China and the United States.

People originally expected that after the Sino-U.S. joint communique was issued on 17 August, relations between the two sides would improve to a certain extent. However, on 6 October Reagan said that the reduction of arms sales to Taiwan depends on China's peaceful intentions. This obviously runs counter to the Sino-U.S. joint communique and once more has aroused the indignation of the Chinese people. Besides, various restrictions imposed by the United States on its trade with China and some unfriendly practices it has adopted have again exposed differences between the two countries.

Although Reagan also said in the same speech that the United States will sincerely and truly make great efforts to improve its relations with the People's Republic of China, the Chinese people, in view of actual facts, doubt the truth of what Reagan said.

As a matter of fact, the Reagan administration is pursuing a "One China, One Taiwan" policy and is strengthening its ties with Taiwan. In May last year, Counselor to the President Edwin Meese announced that the U.S. Government allowed U.S. officials to meet in government organs personnel of Taiwan's "North America Affairs Coordination Association" who were accredited to the United States. Such an act was strictly forbidden when President Carter was in office. At the end of June, Holdridge directly informed Tsai Wei-ping, Taiwan's "representative" accredited to the United States, about Haig's visit to China. This was the first time since the United States severed diplomatic relations with Taiwan that such a thing had been done.

In June last year and February this year, respectively, Reagan's eldest daughter and son visited Taiwan to use their personal influence. At the beginning of this year, in its newly issued telephone directory, the U.S. State Department, for the first time, put the "U.S. Association in Taiwan" under the list of "U.S. Embassies in Foreign Countries." The Reagan administration has also decided that beginning this year an annual "immigrant quota" of 20,000 people will separately be put aside for Taiwan. This changes the former practice of using one immigrant quota for both Taiwan and the mainland.

The foregoing examples are only the major ones. However, what is more prominent is that on 7 December of last year, when Reagan met in the White House with Li Chieh-ming, a newly appointed "department director of the Taipei Office of the U.S. Association in Taiwan," he met at the same time with three U.S. ambassadors accredited to other countries. This purposely showed that Li Chieh-ming's status was equivalent to that of an "ambassador." Conversely, before Li's predecessor left for Taiwan to assume office, U.S. officials never openly met with him in order to avoid any meetings having an official nature.

It can thus be seen that the United States is obviously pursuing a "One China, One Taiwan" policy, something the Chinese people will never accept. Only a month after the issue of the Sino-U.S. joint communique, that is, on 17 September, the U.S. State Department wrote a letter to John East, chairman of Senate Separation of Powers Subcommittee, saying that the Sino-U.S. communique is not an agreement but only a presidential statement and does not have the binding force of international law. Thus, the somewhat optimistic mood of the people brought about by the Sino-U.S. joint communique was immediately dispelled. Sudden changes in the situation have caused much concern about the future of the Sino-U.S. relations!

PAI SHING SAYS LI XIANNIAN TO BE PRC PRESIDENT

[Excerpts] Hong Kong, Oct. 17 (AFP) -- Beijing leaders have agreed to nominate 77-year-old Li Xiannian, member of the Political Bureau Standing Committee, for China's presidency, a post to be res red by China's new constitution to be adopted towards the end of this year.

This was reported by a Hong Kong-published Chinese language semi-monthly, PAI SHING, in its latest issue under the heading, "See (?Documents)," which also said two vice presidencies were also under consideration.

The report said a list of nominees for the vice presidencies included Deng Yingchao, widow of the late Chinese Premier Zhou Enlai, Xi Zhongxun and Liao Chengzhi, all members of the Political Bureau, though they are not on its Standing Committee.

"One of the two vice presidencies may well go to Liao Chengzhi because of his important responsibility for reuniting Taiwan, Hong Kong and Macao with China," the report said.

In late April this year, the Standing Committee of the Fifth National People's Congress, China's parliament, published the draft of a revised constitution for nationwide discussions with a view to its final adoption at the NPC (?plenum) to be held towards the end of this year.

Reports said China's strongman Deng Xiaoping, 78, had turned down the post of presidency in order to concentrate on policy-making matters whereas NPC Vice Chairman (?Ye Jianying), the de facto head of state, now 85, is too advanced in years to assume the revived presidency.

PAI SHING said, "The first hint of Li as a presidential prospect was found in the fact that, of the six members elected to the Political Bureau Standing Committee at last month's 12th party congress, Li was the only one without other designated functions." Of the other five, Deng Xiaoping is chairman of the Advisory Council and chairman of the party Central Military Commission. Ye Jianying is the senior NPC vice chairman, [as received] Chen Yun, first secretary of the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection, Hu Yaobang, the party general secretary and Zhao Ziyang, the premier.

Li Xiannian who has held various leading economic posts in the past 30 years is nicknamed "the wizard of the Chinese economy."

He was elected vice chairman of the party at the 11th party congress in 1977 and member of the Political Bureau Standing Committee at the 12th party congress held last month.

STANDARD ON PRC PLANS FOR HONG KONG'S FUTURE

HK190254 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 19 Oct 82 p 14

[Text] China plans to announce, before the end of next year, concrete plans to regain its sovereignty over Hong Kong, a local magazine, WIDE ANGLE, has reported. The pro-China monthly says in an article in its latest issue that the proposed announcement is aimed at putting the hearts of both Hong Kong people and foreign investors at ease.

The article, according to the magazine, is based on an exclusive interview with several high-ranking Guangdong officials following British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's visit to Beijing.

Without saying exactly when China will regain sovereignty over Hong Kong, the article says the fundamental wish of China "is to settle the problem left over by history through peaceful means in 15 to 20 years."

It says China plans to have Hong Kong people administer Hong Kong when it regains sovereignty. "...China certainly will not send in the cadres. It is deeply confident that Hong Kong people can administer Hong Kong well," the article says.

The article says regaining sovereignty certainly includes exercising sovereignty. The question is how Hong Kong will be administered by Hong Kong Chinese.

According to the WIDE ANGLE article, there is no need for Hong Kong people to worry about changes in their lifestyles and living standards.

"China will definitely respect Hong Kong people's lifestyles and customs," it says.

It says there will be no change in the salary structure of employees in Hong Kong, and China will continue improving their living standards.

Chinese officials think that some capital might be moved out of Hong Kong during a certain period, but it would return to Hong Kong later once the situation became clear.

Even if the British leave Hong Kong, the article says, China's determination to maintain the stability and prosperity of Hong Kong will remain unchanged.

MORNING POST ASSESSES HONG KONG'S FUTURE

HK190349 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 19 Oct 82 p 2

[Hong Kong Observers' Forum: "Role the People Can Play in the Runup to 1997"]

[Text] The future of Hong Kong is not an issue about which we can do nothing. We may not have our own representatives at the top secret discussions but the people of Hong Kong can certainly help the Chinese and British Governments negotiate a solution which is in our interests.

The leaders of both governments have said they have a common aim: to maintain Hong Kong's stability and prosperity. This common aim could mean everything -- including the preservation of our freedoms and our economic system -- or nothing, depending on what Hongkongers do.

Right now, the danger of instability, and of an end to prosperity, comes from within Hong Kong: the outflow of funds and investment and the erosion of our manufacturing base causing unemployment and a sharp drop in the standard of living for the already less well-off. Nervous businessmen could well precipitate a self-fulfilling prophesy, that Hong Kong has no future after the British flag is lowered for the last time.

There is little that we, the Hong Kong observers, can do to stop investors if they insist on behaving like rats deserting a sinking ship. We can only point out a fact -- that the Hong Kong ship is far from sinking. In the meantime, we would like Hongkongers to consider the following points which we raise with the objective of helping the governments of China and Britain arrive at a formula for a post-1977 administration.

First, let us analyse Hongkongers' fears. As things stand, the prospect of coming under Beijing's jurisdiction scares Hongkongers, particularly the businessmen. One can hardly blame foreign investors if they in turn stay away: Such fear is infectious.

Hongkongers are afraid that their standard of living and the freedoms inherent in the Hong Kong lifestyle -- of thought and expression, to work as hard or as little as one wishes, to keep the money one earns and use it in whatever way one wishes, to pursue whatever ambitions one may have -- will be eroded once Beijing assumes responsibility for the administration.

Investors are afraid that free enterprise as they have enjoyed it will come to an end, or at least evaporate, under the direction of Beijing's officials. On top of all these is the general fear of political instability in China.

But what is the probability that under Beijing's jurisdiction our way of life and of doing business will come to an end? There is no insurance against political instability in China or anywhere else for that matter. However, it is in the interest of mainland Chinese to preserve political stability if China's economic development is to continue. Hong Kong should do all it can to help.

As for free enterprise, China's leadership has demonstrated its belief that there is a role for more liberal economic policies in China: Shenzhen, to our north, was little more than a village four years ago.

Free enterprise in Hong Kong can continue under special regulations. It is for Hong Kong and foreign businessmen to explain to the Chinese leadership what these regulations should include. After all, Hong Kong investors in Shenzhen have modified hitherto unworkable regulations governing labour in Shenzhen: The Chinese authorities listened then. It is ludicrous to expect Hong Kong to succeed as a SEZ [Special Economic Zone] -- if that is how free enterprise is to continue post-1997 -- if our businessmen do not tell the Chinese leadership what is required.

As for the various freedoms in our lifestyle, most Hongkongers believe that China's socialism will decree an end to it all. The Hong Kong observers suggest, for the sake of argument, that this need not be so. Cannot Hong Kong become a part of China without having to live under socialist principles? Did an article in the Beijing magazine BAN YUE TAN in September last year not say that "in consideration of the fact that compatriots from Hong Kong, Macau and Taiwan have not lived in the socialist motherland for a long time and know very little about socialism, WE SHOULD NOT IMPOSE ON THEM THE LOVE FOR SOCIALISM AND THE STAND OF SUPPORTING THE SOCIALIST SYSTEM?" All that article asked of compatriots was that "they should not, at any rate, take the stand of opposing socialist China. Otherwise, they will not be considered patriotic."

Is this not Hong Kong's position today? We are not socialists, neither are we enemies of China. Moreover, China's leaders, Mr Hu Yaobang and Mr Zhao Ziyang, have recently mentioned the principle of "one country, two systems." The practicality of this is difficult to ascertain today but should Hongkongers not consider these points as a possible basis for Hong Kong's future role in China seriously?

Did the Communist Party constitution adopted by the 12th national congress on September 6 not stipulate that "it unites with all workers, peasants and intellectuals, and with all the democratic parties, non-party democrats and patriotic forces of all nationals in China in further expanding and fortifying the broadest possible patriotic united front embracing all socialist working people and all patriots who support socialism OR WHO SUPPORT REUNIFICATION OF THE MOTHERLAND?

Did Mr Ye Jianying not extend to Taiwan a framework for special administrative zones a year ago wherein "the existing social and economic systems... will not change, nor will its economic and cultural relationships with foreign countries; and private property, housing land and enterprise ownership, inheritance rights and foreign investments will not be infringed upon?"

Instead of collective biting our fingernails while speculating on rumours and generally scaring ourselves unnecessarily, people who have access to China's leaders should persuade them to extend to us similar terms to what Mr Ye gave Taiwan. Once Hongkongers have such a framework for the future, we can then fill in the details and present to Beijing formula for the administration of Hong Kong after China has regained sovereignty.

The Hong Kong observers feel that it would be more useful for Hongkongers to start thinking about how we can be of benefit to China than to cling to the blinkered belief that the status quo can be maintained. It cannot. Change is inevitable. The British administration will not continue till the year dot. The objective of the close-door discussions is to arrive at a formula for post-1997 administration.

Since Hongkongers do not have their own representative at these talks, Britain is seen as having the responsibility of negotiating the best possible deal for us. But how do we know that such a formula will be acceptable to Britain? Hong Kong did not approve of Mrs Thatcher's handling of the treaties issue.

The role of the British Government, as the Hong Kong observers see it, is to ensure that the inevitable handover of administrative responsibilities is a gradual process, carried out with minimal disruption. Because of the way Hong Kong has been administered, many people believe that it can only continue on a path of stability and prosperity under the British.

Whatever the grounds for this belief, Hongkongers must accept that the British are not going to administer Hong Kong forever. What the British administration must do therefore is to set realistic targets for localisation, and groom Hongkongers to assume the responsibilities of the commissioner for securities, commissioner against corruption, commission for labour, transport secretary, economic services secretary, attorney-general, chief justice, financial secretary and chief secretary. At the same time, the administration must let the public have a say in policymaking.

The 320 advisory boards and committees do not constitute effective channels for government-people communications. The district boards at least have the potential of becoming such channels. The appointment system cannot continue as the cornerstone of a responsive administration. It must be replaced by an elected system so that people who are directly accountable to the public can advise and direct bureaucrats.

A more representative and open administrative structure is necessary because it is the only way in which all sectors of the community can understand the need to assume social responsibility: We cannot leave it to others to maintain stability and prosperity.

Hong Kong is our home. If we want to keep it stable and prosperous, we must be responsible for its management. The people of Hong Kong therefore have a role to play.

The Hong Kong observers do not have a solution for the 1997 problem. But we do want Hong Kong to remain stable and prosperous because it affects the lives of more than five million people, 89 percent of whom, as our opinion pool showed, consider Hong Kong their home. They all like living here.

We ask investors who have been kept in business by millions of white and blue collar workers, and middle class technocrats and professionals, who have built a career in Hong Kong's prosperous environment not to precipitate a self-fulfilling doomsday prophesy.

"If certain people in Hong Kong make a misjudgment on (its) future, they will regret it," the deputy governors of Fujian Province, Mr Hu Ping and Mr Zhang Yi, said recently. The Chinese reporter to whom they were speaking said this meant that if people did not believe Hong Kong would still be prosperous in the future and pull out their investments, they would be losing many excellent development opportunities.

Meanwhile, as the Chinese and British Governments try to find a formula for our future administration, the people of Hong Kong must continue to earn a living. Employers and employees all have a responsibility in maintaining stability and prosperity.

The British administration too have a responsibility — to make the government more open and representative.

In all this, the media has a vital role: Hong Kong's free press is one of the most precious aspects of life here. It should be the platform for intelligent, coherent forums to discuss, analyse and educate the public on the future of Hong Kong.

The media should be the people's voice, telling the Chinese and British Governments that Hong Kong is a great city which must be kept alive. But we, the people, must first want to keep this great city of ours alive. This is our role. Our future is not an issue about which we do nothing.

CHENG MING ON MAO ZEDONG, DENG XIAOPING ERAS

HK040944 Hong Kong CHENG MING in Chinese No 60, 1 Oct 82 p 6

[Commentary: "The Deng Xiaoping Era Has Begun"]

[Text] One era has passed and another era has begun. What has passed in the Mao Zedong era and the subsequent transition period and what has begun is the Deng Xiaoping era. The demarcation line between them is the 12th CPC Congress.

The transition period was one during which the pragmatists, headed by Deng Xiaoping, engaged in a political tussle with the "whatever" faction headed by Hua Guofeng. This period began in October 1976 and ended in September 1981, lasting exactly 6 years.

During this period, Deng Xiaoping, since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee as well as the subsequent plenary sessions and finally the 12th CPC Congress, has gradually defeated his opponents -- politically, ideologically and organizationally -- and has finally unified the whole party. The various appointments approved by the 12th CPC Congress and the first plenary session, the enforcement of those elements supporting Deng's line in various leading organs in the CPC Central Committee, the prominence given to Deng Xiaoping by various media organs, the call of "with the opening speech as the guiding thought, seriously study the documents of the 12th CPC Congress (opening speech means the speech delivered by Deng Xiaoping at the 12th CPC Congress)" on the frontpages of RENMIN RIBAO -- all this indicates that the Deng Xiaoping era has officially begun.

What are the main features of the Deng Xiaoping era? From what has already been revealed, they are as follows:

One feature is that more power is concentrated on Deng Xiaoping alone. Within the party, no one holds a more important position than Deng Xiaoping and no one is more authoritative than Deng Xiaoping.

Another feature is that Deng Xiaoping thought, which is based on Mao Zedong Thought and is coming into being, is becoming de facto the party's guiding thought.

Still another feature is organizational purity. After a period of reorganizational work, the implementation of the Deng Xiaoping line has organizationally been guaranteed.

Among all the big shots in Zhongnanhai, Deng Xiaoping certainly stands out. Since the establishment of the Deng Xiaoping line at the third plenary session in 1978, many well-known work achievements have been made in a variety of fields, the work in rural areas in particular. As a result, the party supports Deng Xiaoping and the people support him, too. It can be well assumed that after the official commencement of the Deng Xiaoping era, China's political situation will become more stable than the past few years -- providing Deng Xiaoping lives long enough -- and more progress will be made in the economic field. All these are, of course, good things for the people.

However, due to the failure of Deng Xiaoping thought in getting rid of Mao Zedong's outdated doctrines and the continuous existence of the feudal ghost over Zhongnanhai and throughout China, we should not be too optimistic about the development of the Chinese people's cause. We are not going to write a great and lengthy article here but would like to put forward three suggestions for the reference of the top CPC leaders.

1. Power toughens and also corrupts people. If all power is held by one person, even an angel will become a devil. Therefore, we hope that the CPC genuinely establishes and seriously implements the system of collective leadership and prevents a repetition of the history of the Mao Zedong era when power was held by one person.

2. A god differs from a human being and can be resurrected. Due to the hidden existence of the movement for building up gods, a new god might be established. We hope that the CPC resolutely opposes a personality cult, seriously studies the ideas against a personality cult raised by Deng Xiaoping in his speech on the revision of the party constitution at the 8th CPC Congress and never allows a repetition of the history of the Mao Zedong era when any individual was deified.

3. The people have discerning eyes and they are resolute and powerful in pushing forward the advance of history. We hope that the CPC genuinely places the party under the supervision, examination and inspection of the people and never allows a repetition of the history of the Mao Zedong era when people had no power.

In the final analysis, we hope that the Deng Xiaoping era is not a repetition of the Mao Zedong era in the 1980's but an era in which people can upgrade their material and spiritual lives and the country become prosperous, rich and democratic, getting rid of feudal and backward dictatorship.

MING PAO NOTES RESISTANCE TO CENTRAL REFORMS

HK190753 Hong Kong MING PAO in Chinese 19 Oct 82 p 5

[Special dispatch from Beijing: "Obstacles to Beijing's Reforms: Most Department, Bureau Cadres Reluctant To Leave Posts"]

[Text] The work of reforming the leading organs of the party and state at the central level and of ensuring the "four modernizations" in the ranks of cadres (making them more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professionally competent) has achieved a certain degree of progress. But, viewing it as a whole, the achievement is not as satisfactory as expected.

In the first half of this year the CPC Central Committee and the State Council spent more than 4 months reducing and merging ministries and commissions, minimizing staffing and restructuring leading organs. However, there have emerged various obstacles to the progress of restructuring leading bodies. Up till now, only the problem of streamlining the leading organs of ministries and commissions has been solved. In 38 ministries and commissions under the State Council, ministers and vice ministers as well as directors and deputy directors have been reduced in number by 65 percent. The newly promoted young and middle-aged cadres account for 32 percent of the total members of the leading organs. Their average age has dropped by 4-5 years. And the numbers of those who are better educated and more professionally competent have increased a little. Nevertheless, the work of restructuring the leading bodies at the department and bureau levels is proceeding at a snail's pace or has even come to a standstill. This is because old cadres are reluctant to quit their posts and refuse to withdraw to the second or third line.

This reporter learned: In order to solve the problem of the retirement of old cadres from their posts, the CPC Central Committee has created a "study class of state cadres at the central level" at the central party school. To this end, cadres at the department and bureau levels have been called on to attend this class of their own free will. Here they will sum up experience through studies and then hand in their application for retirement. The final decision concerning their application will be made by the organizational departments in line with the actual situation and in accordance with work needs. As for the details of the procedure, no hard and rigid rules are laid down, such as "imposing a deadline" related to age.

It is said that, in accordance with the decision by the CPC Central Committee which proposed that old cadres retire from their posts and some relevant rules defined by the State Council, the cadres at the department and bureau levels who ought to attend the class must number more than 1,700. But there were only 150 or so who had voluntarily entered their names for the class. The number finally rose to more than 170 after a mobilization campaign was repeatedly carried out. This, in fact, constitutes about 10 percent of the total of the cadres who ought to attend the class.

In order to hang on to their posts, cadres at the department and bureau levels who refused to join the study class vied with each other to seek help from their superiors through the back door. Since the old cadres refused to leave their posts, naturally, younger ones could not be promoted. Therefore, the work of restructuring leading bodies was bound to come to a standstill.

Whether the problem of "withdrawing old cadres from their posts" and "promoting more younger ones to take up their work" can be solved constitutes the key link in deciding whether leading organs can be smoothly reformed or not. Deng Xiaoping instructed: "Resolutely emancipating the mind, surmounting various obstacles and breaking with old conventions, we must have the courage to reform all organizational rules and personnel systems which are incompatible with present needs; vigorously cultivate, train and use all qualified personnel regardless of rules; and wage a resolute struggle against all phenomena of repressing and destroying talented persons." As a matter of fact, Deng's instruction is a piece of advice to those old cadres who are hanging on to their posts. Promoting outstanding young and middle-aged cadres and ensuring the "four modernizations" in the ranks of cadres constitute the trend of the times. Do not throw straws against the wind.

STANDARD ON SHENZHEN ANTISMUGGLING ACTIVITIES

[Text] Numerous cases of smuggling have been uncovered by the Shenzhen customs authorities amid China's stepped-up crackdown on such activities. So far this year, Shenzhen customs has cracked more than 6,000 cases of smuggling, worth 11 million yuan (HK$33 million).

The most common goods that people are found trying to smuggle into China include watches and pornographic publications, while gold, antiques and precious herbs are among those usually found smuggled out of China.

According to reports, goods seized by Shenzhen customs from January till early this month included 21,000 watches, 24,000 pornographic publications and 2,400 antique items.

Efforts to smuggle large quantities of goods, involving the use of vehicles, were usually uncovered at the Mankamto checkpoint.

The recent spate of smuggling following China's adoption of an "open door" economic policy has promoted China to step up its drive against smugglers.

Combative measures being implemented include the strengthening of examination procedures at checkpoints, and giving cash rewards for information leading to the arrest of smugglers.

The rewards can be worth up to 10 percent of the value of goods seized or the fines imposed.

Shenzhen customs officers have reportedly received about 1,300 reports on smuggling from Hong Kong and Macau residents so far this year, and have given out 200,000 yuan in cash rewards.

In the past few months, a number of local residents convicted of taking part in smuggling activities were given jail sentences.

The most notable one involved two men who were jailed for 15 years and 13 years respectively by a Shenzhen court for trying to smuggle in a large quantity of forged Chinese banknotes.

The other men found guilty of smuggling pornographic books and videotapes were given two-year and one-year prison terms.

LIAOWANG ON CHINA'S INDEPENDENT FOREIGN POLICY

HK201526 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1415 GMT 20 Oct 82

["LIAOWANG Publishes Article on China's Independent and Initiatory Diplomacy" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, 20 Oct (XINHUA) -- LIAOWANG, published today, says that the independent and initiatory foreign policy put forth by the 12th CPC Congress is a summary of the experience of the Chinese people's struggle against the bullying and humiliation of foreign powers over the past 100 years or so. It is also a summary of the experience of the CPC in dealing with foreigners over the past 60 years or so while leading the Chinese people to carry out their revolution and construction.

The magazine publishes a signed article by Hua Xiu [5478 1652] entitled "Inquiry Into China's Independent and Initiatory Diplomacy." The article cites the experience of the government of the Qing Dynasty which tried to rely on the United States and Britain to curb Japan during the Sino-Japanese war in 1894 and the failure of the KMT government in relying on the intervention of the "League of Nations" when Japan invaded China's three provinces in the northeast in 1931. The article stresses: "It will not do for the Chinese people to rely on the foreign strength to deal with foreign aggressors if they do not rise to carry out their struggle."

The article reviews China's national condition of integrating the general truth of Marxism-Leninism with the practical conditions in China to solve the problem of China's independent revolutionary road. It also recounts the facts of how the CPC, after the founding of New China, broke the long-term blockades imposed by the imperialists and overcame severe difficulties as a result of the Soviet revocation of all contracts and withdrawal of its experts and the experience of carrying out socialist construction under such strenuous conditions by relying on its own efforts. The article points out: "The Chinese revolution follows an independent and initiatory road; so does China's construction. The Chinese diplomacy cannot but take such an independent and initiatory road."

The article refutes some "experts in China problems" who hold the viewpoint of "power politics" and "political science of superpowers" in approaching China's diplomatic affairs. These "experts" hold that "a weak state must depend on a strong one, which today means a superpower, otherwise a weak state or a developing country cannot survive." When relations between China and the Soviet Union are strained, they predict that China will look to the United States for a "protective umbrella" and then China will have no alternative but to submissively obey the United States. When there is trouble in relations between China and the United States, they again predict that China will turn back to the Soviet Union in order to cope with the United States. The article says that this kind of prediction "is no better than the words of a fortuneteller."

The article says: China pursues a policy of opposing hegemonism. This policy is a continuation of the Chinese people's cause of striving for independence and liberation in the past. The controversy not long ago between China and the United States over the sale of U.S. arms to Taiwan has been the latest evidence of China's independent foreign policy. The outcome of the struggle is independent of the will of some Americans who want China to swallow the bitter pill. It has also been a disappointment to some people of the other superpower who want China to break with the United States.

The article points out that China opposes hegemonism, defends world peace and supports the just struggle of the Third World. "This is the patriotic demand of the Chinese people and the internationalist cause in which lie the common interests of the people of the whole world. China totally opposes hegemony, no matter who seeks it or where it is sought."

This constitutes China's independent stand. On the Afghan and Kampuchean issues, both China and the United States oppose the Soviet Union and Vietnam, under its support, in their armed aggression toward their neighboring countries. In another case, both China and the Soviet Union oppose the United States in supporting Israeli aggression and the South African apartheid rule. This does not mean that China "allies" with the United States under some circumstances or becomes a Soviet partner under other circumstances. This precisely proves that, first, China is independent of all the superpowers; second, in the struggle between the Soviet Union and the United States for world hegemony, China may adopt a similar attitude with this or that superpower on this or that issue and have a certain "point of meeting," but its point of departure is different.

RENMIN RIBAO ON 37TH UNGA, SUPERPOWER RIVALRY

HK190531 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 17 Oct 82 p 6

[Dispatch from correspondent Chen Yicun [7115 2011 2625]: "Many Delegates Point Out in UN General Assembly General Debate That Superpower Contention for Hegemony Is the Source of World Unrest"]

[Text] United Nations, 15 Oct -- The 3-week-long general debate of the 37th UN General Assembly concluded this afternoon. Starting from next week the General Assembly will consider and discuss the important agenda put forward by a number of countries.

The present assembly is convened at a time when the international situation is tense and turbulent, there is a series of regional conflicts and the developed nations are shifting their economic difficulties onto the developing nations thus causing them to suffer. Heads of state, prime ministers, vice presidents and foreign ministers of over 150 countries and their representatives at the United Nations spoke at the assembly. These speeches are like mirrors vividly reflecting the harsh reality presently confronting the world.

The most prominent questions raised in the speeches of the representatives are: Striving to ease the international situation, calling for a halt to the arms race and worldwide peace talks, Vietnam's occupation of Kampuchea, the Soviet Union's invasion of Afghanistan, the situation in the Middle East, the independence of Namibia, strengthening the role of the United Nations and its Security Council in maintaining world peace and security, and so on.

The representatives were anxious about the unrest in the international situation. The foreign minister of Austria summarized the current international situation as being characterized by "worldwide political, economic and organizational crises." The representatives pointed out one after another that the superpowers' quest for hegemony, their worldwide contention and the arms race is seriously menacing world peace and security and is the source of world turmoil. Yoka Mangono, foreign minister of Zaire said: "From the founding of the United Nations up to the present, the discussion on disarmament has carried on for 37 years. We have made heaps of decisions and signed many agreements, but we still cannot halt the arms race." Salim Ahmad Salim, foreign minister of Tanzania, said: "At present, confrontation and resort to force has become a usual means in solving disputes."

Many representatives pointed out that the superpowers are daily intensifying their intervention over the Third World causing the world situation to be beset with crises. The prime minister of Malaysia said: "Today, might is the sole right. Weak countries like Afghanistan, Kampuchea and Lebanon are being trampled on by invaders. Weak countries are living in terror." They are worried about their independence, happiness and even their survival. The majority of the representatives strongly demanded the Soviet Union to enforce the decision of the United Nations and immediately withdraw its invading troops from Afghanistan. There were also many representatives who demanded the Vietnamese regime supported by the Soviet Union to withdraw its 200,000 troops from Kampuchea. The representatives warmly greeted and supported the newly established Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea headed by Prince Sihanouk.

The Israeli invasion of Lebanon and the bloody massacre of innocent civilians aroused strong indignation in the present General Assembly. The representatives condemned in unison the monstrous crimes of Israel and applied sanctions against them. Some representatives even demanded that Israel be driven out of the United Nations. The seventh special emergency meeting of the United Nations held during the general debate, passed a resolution by an overwhelming majority demanding the unconditional withdrawal of Israeli troops from Lebanon. When Yitzhak Shamir, foreign minister of Israel, spoke at the assembly, more than half of the representatives left the assembly hall to show their protest. The standpoint of the United States in conniving and shielding Israel also aroused dissatisfaction and condemnation from the assembly. Many representatives suggested regarding the program put forward by the Fes Arab summit and Resolution No. 242 of the UN Security Council as the basis for solving the Middle East problem. They pointed out that the key to the Middle East problem is to restore the national rights of Palestine, including their rights of national self-determination and establishing their own country. It will be impossible to solve the Middle East problem without solving the problem of Palestine.

The representatives strongly condemned the apartheid policy practiced by the South African racist regime. The South African racist regime refused to enforce the 1978 resolution adopted by the UNSC and continued to illegally occupy Namibia. Many representatives spoke to refute the standpoint of certain Western countries, particularly the United States, in claiming that the independence of Namibia must be connected with the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola, and pointed out that this is an obstacle created by them to obstruct the independence of Namibia.

Another notable characteristic of the general debate is that the representatives were most concerned about the problem of the current world economy. The spokesmen of some countries said that the world is facing the most serious economic crisis since the depression of the 1930's. This worldwide economic crisis and recession is affecting almost every country, particularly the developing countries which are suffering most. In his speech, the foreign minister of Pakistan cried out in alarm: "Stagnation, recession, inflation and the daily increasing foreign debt are like fast-growing malignant tumors, causing the world economy to be riddled with gaping wounds."

Some representatives felt disturbed at the way the developed countries are shifting economic difficulties onto the developing countries with serious consequences. They were also unsatisfied with the current unequal and unjust international economic relations and demanded a change in the old global economic order. The representatives demanded that the developed countries take the daily worsening economic situation seriously.

The pointed out that the world economy rests on mutual reliance and demanded early world talks to establish a new international economic order on the basis of equality, justice and mutual benefit.

Recently, the United Nations has been confronted with numerous and serious international problems, few of which have been solved. In his work report, Javier Perez de Cuellar, secretary general of the United Nations said: "The Security Council is the main organ of the United Nations for maintaining international peace and security, but often it cannot act resolutely to relax international conflicts." He suggested holding a Security Council meeting attended by top-level representatives to discuss how to strengthen the role of the United Nations and the Security Council in maintaining world peace and security. The majority of the representatives all praised and supported the proposition of the secretary general. It was only the representatives of the two superpowers that remained silent and made no comment.

The general debate of the 37th General Assembly has concluded. The representatives of many countries called for all countries to unite and oppose the hegemonistic policy pursued by the superpowers and eradicate the source of international tension. The just demand for safeguarding world peace reflects people's sense of urgency towards the turbulent international situation.

RENMIN RIBAO: U.S. LACKS SOVIET EXPERTS

["Newsletter From America" by reporter Yuan Xianlu [5913 0341 4389]: "A Tendency Has Emerged in the United States To Step Up Anew the Study of Soviet Affairs"]

[Text] Some political figures and scholars in the United States hold that the lack of people able to succeed the current experts in Soviet affairs now constitutes a "crisis" facing the United States. In order to change this state of affairs, a few senators have put forward a bill, asking the government to allocate $50 million to set up a fund aimed specially at subsidizing the study of Soviet affairs. Soviet research institutes in some universities are raising funds everywhere in order to step up and expand their research work. According to a report in THE NEW YORK TIMES, the former U.S. ambassador to the Soviet Union, William A. Harriman, has decided to contribute $1 million to the Russian Research Institute of Columbia University, and the Rockefeller Foundation is also considering the question of contributing $1 million each to two U.S. universities.

A short time ago, the Senate European Affairs Subcommittee conducted a special hearing on the existing state of U.S. studies of Soviet affairs. Richard G. Lugar, chairman of the subcommittee, said: "The harsh reality is that the ability of our country to analyze the views and actions of our chief adversary is seriously declining." He pointed out that the Soviet Union has more than 7,400 experts in American affairs in its 12 research institutes in Moscow, but U.S. experts in Soviet affairs are much fewer. He also pointed out that "by the end of the 1980's, almost half of the experts who are now engaged in studying Soviet affairs and who are universally acknowledged as having an academic status will have retired or died" and that there will be very few new people to replace them. This year, less than 200 people throughout the country have received a doctorate in Soviet affairs.

In its August report, the Rockefeller Foundation estimated that the number of Soviet experts in American affairs is about three times that of the U.S. specialists in Soviet affairs. The report held that U.S. studies of Soviet affairs and the work of training the relevant people, either quantitatively or qualitatively, are at the lowest point since World War II. Particularly in the important field of Soviet foreign policy, the situation is even more serious. This constitutes a "major crisis" facing the United States.

Some U.S. newspapers pointed out that during the 1940's and 1950's an upsurge in the study of Soviet affairs occurred in the United States and experts emerged in large numbers. From then on, however, the U.S. Government's allocation of funds for this work greatly decreased and some institutions which had enthusiastically subsidized studies on Soviet affairs also reduced their contributions. The Ford Foundation is an example. For a time it contributed $40 million annually but now its contributions amount to only $2 million. The number of young people willing to study Soviet affairs has also been falling steadily. The number of research students who study in this field in various universities has dropped by more than 50 percent and their Russian language standard is also much poorer than previously. Professor (Godman), assistant director of the Russian Research Center at Harvard University, said with emotion: "I belong to the younger generation in this field and yet I am already 52 years old."

Former CIA Deputy Director Inman said that although the United States is very advanced in its intelligence techniques, it often fails to understand events and its calculations of Soviet intentions also go wrong. This is because the United States lacks a genuine understanding of the Soviet Union. It was also revealed by some newspapers that at present it is not easy for the State Department to find a diplomat like George F. Kennan who was familiar with the Soviet Union, and this makes it difficult to rotate ambassadors to the Soviet Union.

Some people in the United States hold that the reason for the U.S. failure to attach importance to the studies of Soviet affairs for some time now has something to do with the policy of so-called "detente." Now, due to the growing contention between the two superpowers, a tendency has again emerged in the United States to step up studies of Soviet affairs. This has reflected, from one side, a change in the international situation.

AMERICANS REPORTEDLY DIVIDED ON SOVIET POLICY

OW201438 Beijing in Mandarin to Southeast Asia 0900 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Station consolidated report: "Different Views Among Americans on Reagan's Soviet Policy"]

[Text] When Reagan assumed office at the White House, he announced a hardline policy against the Soviet Union. He vowed to counter Soviet expansion from a position of strength. Reagan has been in office for 20 months now. The Americans have different views regarding Reagan's Soviet policy.

At his news conference on 28 September, Reagan alleged that the Soviets have a fuller understanding of the position of his administration. He said that the Soviet Union, which was expanding fast in various parts of the world in the past years, has not expanded into another square inch of territory since his administration took office. Some Americans agree that Reagan's hardline approach toward Soviet expansion is paying off. They hold the view that the Soviets are at wit's end and do not know what to do at the outbreak of certain major international incidents. However, a majority of Americans disagree with this view. They stress that the Soviet Union must not be underestimated. Although it is now beset with economic difficulties, bogged down in Afghanistan and has not looked so overbearing in the past year, it does not mean that it will no longer pursue an aggressive expansionist policy.

U.S. NEWS AND WORLD REPORT writes: There are no indications that the protracted aggressive war against Afghanistan and the increasing casualties are forcing the Kremlin to consider a face-saving withdrawal. Some American papers point out that although the Soviet Union has not openly dispatched troops, it is still launching expansionist offensives in some areas of the Third World. Some Americans further point out that Moscow employs many different tactics in pushing its expansionist policy. To drive a wedge between the United States and Europe is one of its major tactics. Rostow, director of the United States Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, said in a speech last September that the primary aim of the Soviet expansionist plan is to achieve world domination by splitting West Europe from the United States and Canada. Over the past year, the Soviet Union has made some progress in this respect. Has not the Soviet peace offensive directed at West Europe landed the United States in a passive position? Has not the rift between the United States and West Europe widened?

Some Americans hold that Reagan's hardline policy toward the Soviet Union really has not been carried out. On the other hand, the Reagan administration's way of imposing its views on West Europe has in fact helped the Soviet Union divide the allies. An expert at the Institute of Soviet Studies of Columbia University has said that Reagan's policy of the gas pipeline has weakened the NATO Alliance, something the Soviets failed to do in the past. Besides, it is apparent to all that the unwise U.S. policies toward the Third World have given the Soviet Union opportunities for furture expansion.

U.S. EXPLORES ALTERNATIVES TO PIPELINE SANCTIONS

OW200323 Beijing XINHUA in English 0223 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Text] Washington, October 19 (XINHUA) -- The United States is exploring alternatives to sanctions on shipments of oil- and gas-related technology for the Soviet pipeline linking Western Europe to the Siberian gasfields, said President Reagan last night.

Questioned about the sanctions during a closed-circuit TV campaign appearance, Reagan said: "We sent representatives to Europe to talk to our allies about some other things that we believe could be more punishment to the Soviet Union than these sanctions."

"We couldn't get agreement on them," he said, "but we're trying again. If we can get a better set of restrictions, other than the sanctions, we will be willing to lift those sanctions."

The president did not specify what alternative measures he was considering.

THE NEW YORK TIMES reported Sunday that the Reagan administration has given France, West Germany, Britain and Italy a draft proposal urging them to conduct "a fundamental review of alliance strategy for dealing with the Soviet Union" and "to identify specific pressure points, such as credit terms and technology transfers" that could be used to apply economic and political leverage on the Soviet Union.

A White House spokesman has said that there was no such proposal but that U.S.-West European discussions are continuing to narrow the differences regarding economic relations with the East.

The pipeline sanctions imposed by the U.S. Government to protest Soviet involvement in Poland's situation have created major strains between the United States and its European allies. The United States has been making efforts to achieve "workable compromises" with its allies, but the recent announcement of large U.S. grain sales to the Soviet Union could make any concessions from the Europeans even more difficult than before.

RENMIN RIBAO ON PAKISTAN'S NONALIGNMENT POLICY

HK200901 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 19 Oct 82 p 6

[Article by Zhou Xiuqing [1719 0208 1987]: "Pakistan Actively Pursues a Policy of Nonalignment"]

[Text] Gen Ziaul Haq, president of Pakistan, once pointed out that as a nonaligned and Islamic country, Pakistan consistently supports the people of all countries in their just struggle against colonialism, imperialism and racism of any kind.

By further practicing its "South strategy," the Soviet Union invaded Afghanistan, constituting a serious threat to south Asian countries, with Pakistan bearing the brunt. Defying brute force and blackmail, the people and Government of Pakistan resolutely safeguarded the sovereignty of their territory and the security of their country, and firmly supported the people of Afghanistan in their antiaggressive struggle.

President Haq visited Italy, Romania, Yugoslavia and France in January this year and the main topic he discussed with the leaders of these countries was Afghanistan. In his talk with President Alessandro Pertini, President Haq mentioned support for the Afghanistan refugees in Pakistan. In the joint statement issued with President Nicolae Ceausescu, he also emphasized calling a halt to all foreign interference and intervention and guaranteeing the independence and free development of Afghanistan and its status as a nonaligned country. The joint communique of Pakistan and Yugoslavia also demanded a withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan and Kampuchea.

In the UN General Assembly, Pakistan has consistently insisted that the Soviet Union must withdraw from Afghanistan. At the 36th UN General Assembly Pakistan, together with 44 other countries, jointly put forward a resolution which was passed by an overwhelming majority of 116 votes, demanding an immediate withdrawal of the Soviet Union's armies from Afghanistan. On 4 October this year, the Pakistani foreign minister spoke at the UN General Assembly once again, appealing for a withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan. The principled stand by Pakistan on the solution of the Afghanistan problem was praised and supported by many countries.

In order to improve relations with the neighboring country, India, last year Pakistan put forward a suggestion to sign a nonaggression treaty with India. At the end of January this year, the foreign ministers of India and Pakistan held talks in New Delhi on concluding a nonaggression treaty between the two countries. In mid-August the secretaries of the foreign ministries of the two countries again held talks in Islamabad.

Pakistan also actively develops its relations with Islamic countries and other Third World countries.

As a member of the committee of the Islam conference organization on mediating in the war between Iran and Iraq, President Haq went twice to Saudi Arabia in March and June to attend the meeting held by the mediating committee. He also joined the mediating committee delegation and went to Iraq to carry out the mediation mission. The Pakistani Government expects that Iraq and Iran will immediately cease their conflict and peacefully solve their divergence through negotiations.

On the problem of the Middle East, Pakistan actively supports the Arab countries, condemns Israel, demands Israeli withdrawal from the occupied Arab territories and Jerusalem and supports the Palestinian people in their right to self-determination and the establishment of their own state with independent sovereignty.

Pakistan supports the just demand of withdrawing all foreign troops from Kampuchea. It has also insisted on its principled stand in recognizing the Democratic Kampuchean Government and maintained its seat in the United Nations.

On 20 March this year, President Haq issued a statement on the "International Day for Eliminating Racial Discrimination," reiterating that Pakistan fully supports the South African people in their struggle for peace, human dignity and a thorough elimination of the system of racial segregation and discrimination.

The just acts and principled stands of Pakistan in international affairs has further raised her international status and prestige.

On the relations between Pakistan and China, there have been more and more contacts and cooperation between the two countries. President Haq pointed out, the friendship between Pakistan and China and the cooperation between the two countries are "a firm pillar" of Pakistan's foreign policy. He highly praised Premier Zhao Zhiyang's visit to Pakistan in June and considered that the visit not only had significance for the relations between Pakistan and China but also had significance for the peace of South Asia. President Haq's visit to China will surely bring into bloom the flower of friendship between the two countries.

[Text] Islamabad, October 20 (XINHUA) -- The Afghan freedom fighters had fierce clashes with the Soviet-Karmal troops in the provinces of Laghman and Zabol recently, inflicting more losses on Soviet forces, according to AAP today.

The Soviet-Karmal troops, on Sept. 28, sent a strong armored force to harass guerrilla strongholds in mountain areas about 100 kilometers northeast of Kabul. When they found some of the villages abandoned, the enemy got enraged and set fire to houses and killed cattle, the report said.

The fighting continued for several days. Fifty-two Soviet-Karmal troops were killed and one tank was destroyed by mines in one village. On Oct. 3, the freedom fighters killed 30 men and captured large quantities of ammunition in an area near Mehterlam.

CHEN GUODONG GREETS MARCHAIS IN SHANGHAI

OW201732 Beijing XINHUA in English 1651 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Text] Shanghai, October 20 (XINHUA) -- The French Communist Party Central Committee delegation headed by General Secretary Georges Marchais arrived in Shanghai, birth place of the Chinese Communist Party, by air today.

The delegation was greeted at the airport by Chen Guodong, member of the C.P.C. Central Committee and first secretary of the C.P.C. Shanghai Municipal Committee, and Yang Di, member of the C.P.C. Central Committee and vice-mayor of Shanghai.

Chen Guodong extended a warm welcome to the French delegation. Marchais said: "We feel very warm in Shanghai. The sun shines brightly. The relationship between our two parties is just like today's weather here."

The delegation arrived here from Yichang at noon in the company of Qian Liren, deputy head of the International Liaison Department of the C.P.C. Central Committee.

In the afternoon, Marchais and the delegation members visited the site of the First National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party. Briefing the visitors, the head of the memorial hall site said: "Although the room has only 18 square meters, it is of great historical significance. The Chinese Communist Party was born here on July 23, 1921. The first C.P.C. National Congress was attended by 13 people representing more than 50 Communists in the country."

Marchais said: "But today the C.P.C. has the largest number of Communists." The delegation also viewed pictures and read information displayed at the memorial hall on the historical background of the founding of the C.P.C., the spreading of Marxism in China as well as the process of the founding of the C.P.C.

At the end of visit, Marchais wrote in the visitors' book: "The founding of the Chinese Communist Party is a historical event that has brought about decisive changes to China. It has provided important international experience. Over the past 61 years which is full of epical feats and setbacks, our fraternal party yesterday led the Chinese people in the nationwide struggle for liberation and is today leading the people of the whole country in building a socialist society with its particular features. I would like to convey the French Communists' support for all the Chinese comrades."

The delegation also visited the Shanghai industrial exhibition this afternoon.

KOHL, THATCHER HOLD DISCUSSIONS IN LONDON

OW200251 Beijing XINHUA in English 0132 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Text] London, October 19 (XINHUA) -- Chancellor Helmut Kohl of the Federal Republic of Germany had talks tonight with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher during his brief visit here.

A British Government spokesman said that their talks centered on East-West relations, particularly the situation in Poland, the steel dispute between the United States and the European Economic Community (EEC), and some of EEC's internal affairs. They also exchanged views on the domestic situation in Britain and West Germany.

Kohl and Mrs. Thatcher agreed that all their problems were small compared with the interests that united the two countries, the spokesman said.

The talks were "fruitful" and the two leaders would have more substantive talks when Mrs. Thatcher visits Bonn on October 28 and 29 for a regular summit between the two countries, the spokesman added.

Kohl flew in today for a "getting to know you" visit and left for home later tonight. The new West German chancellor who took office earlier this month had visited Paris and Brussels and is to have talks with President Reagan in Washington on November 15.

ITALY CONDEMNS U.S. SEIZURE OF PIPELINE PARTS

OW201658 Beijing XINHUA in English 1611 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Text] Rome, October 19 (XINHUA) -- Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo today condemned the U.S. seizure of gas pipeline parts ordered by an Italian firm and destined for the Soviet Union as an "extraterritorial measure".

Colombo made the protest in an interview frontpaged by the Milan paper IL CORRIERE DELLA SERA today.

The U.S. Customs Service had seized 3 million U.S. dollars worth of turbine parts manufactured by the General Electric Co. on orders of the Italian engineering firm Nuovo Pignone, an affiliate of the state-owned ENI oil company. The seizure was effected on the ground that the Italian firm was defying the U.S. embargo by supplying equipment for the Soviet Union's Siberian natural gas pipeline.

The Italian foreign minister said that the contracts for the supplies were finalized before the events in Poland, therefore, "the American measures are not only extraterritorial but also retroactive."

Italian Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini told reporters in Rome today that he expected the gas pipeline issue to be "at the center" of his discussions with President Reagan in Washington when he visits the U.S. early next month.

It was also reported that about 4,000 employees of Nuovo Pignone, in Florence, went on strike two days ago in protest against the U.S. seizure.

WAN LI MEETS ITALIAN SOCIAL DEMOCRAT LONGO

OW171610 Beijing XINHUA in English 1515 GMT 17 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, October 17 (XINHUA) -- Wan Li, member of the Political Bureau of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee and vice-premier of the State Council, met and had a friendly conversation this afternoon with Pietro Longo, general secretary of the Social Democratic Party of Italy, Mrs. Longo and members of his party.

Wan Li said in the turbulent world today, to strengthen contacts between countries and parties for deepening mutual understanding and friendship is beneficial to safeguarding world peace, combatting hegemonism and strengthening people's friendship. This is also a common wish of the world people.

Wan Li briefed the guests on the Communist Party's recent 12th national congress. He said it approved the guidelines and policies of the party since 1978's third plenary session of the 11th central committee, summarized successes and lessons and corrected past errors and shortcomings.

"This demonstrates our party is capable of leading a big country like China," he said.

Longo said his visit is helpful to understanding China's conditions, and thereby enhancing the friendship between the two countries and parties.

"Our two parties have identical views on many of the world issues. The Social Democratic Party of Italy stands for development of friendship with peoples all over the world, fighting hegemonism and safeguarding world peace. For this purpose, our two countries and parties should increase friendly contacts and eonomic cooperation. Italy keeps its gate for cooperation in the fields of economy, culture and science open to China," he said.

Longo said the 12th Congress of the Chinese Communist Party is an important one. China's present policies for industry and agriculture provide impetus to the realization of the nation's goal.

SYMPOSIUM WITH EUROPEAN BUSINESS LEADERS OPENS

OW191306 Beijing XINHUA in Egnlish 1225 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, October 19 (XINHUA) -- There are broad prospects for economic and technical cooperation between China and other countries, said Zhang Yanning, vice-president and secretary general of the China Enterprise Management Association (CEMA), at the second China-Europe business leaders symposium which opened here today.

Zhang Yanning, leader of the Chinese delegation to the five-day symposium jointly sponsored by CEMA and the European Management Forum (EMF), said that this symposium is "a good and practical way to promote mutual understanding and to look for possibilities of cooperation."

The symposium, he said, will help the two sides exchange experiences and discuss problems in enterprise management, technical renovation of China's enterprises and discuss other forms of cooperation in industry and the economic sphere.

China will try to quadruple annual gross industrial and agricultural output value by the end of this century, he said. To do this, he said, China must improve the economic performance and management of its 380,000 existing enterprises. This means technical renovation, including importing advanced technology and key equipment.

Addressing the symposium, Dr. Stephane Garelli, director of the Geneva-based EMF, said that the symposium is "an indispensable complement to the dialogue that is already taking place at the political and official level." This meeting is "an open channel of communication and trust among those who, at the highest level, take the decisions that will create economic prosperity in China and in Europe."

This symposium, Dr. Garelli said, is also "a means to learn from each other," adding that "China and Europe have been in contact with each other for the past 19 centuries."

The EMF director stressed that the symposium is a sign of China's commitment to play an even more important role in international economic relations. This has a positive impact on world stability, he added.

The EMF delegation led by Professor Klaus Schwab, EMF president, is composed of 55 business leaders from 12 European countries, two Middle East countries, the United States and Hong Kong. Founded in 1971, this non-governmental and advisory body has close contacts with some 8,000 enterprises in about 17 European countries, Mr. Schwab said.

The Chinese delegation to the symposium has 60 members, mostly managers and engineers of China's major enterprises.

CEMA is a national non-governmental advisory organization which also engaged in research and the training of managerial personnel. It has had contacts, ever since its founding in 1979, with EMF.

The first China-Europe business leaders symposium was held here in June last year.

AFP: VISIT BY LIBYA'S AL-QADHDHAFI 'IMMINENT'

OW210818 Hong Kong AFP in English 0720 GMT 21 Oct 82

[By Elisabeth Chang]

[Text] Beijing, Oct. 21 (AFP) -- Libyan leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi, whom China only a year ago called a "fanatical Moslem," is about to pay an official visit here which will set the seal on a reconciliation between the two countries. The visit, "imminent" according to a diplomatic source, will be part of a process by which China is diversifying its relations with Middle East countries, in the view of diplomatic circles here.

In a more general context, it is also part of a realignment of Chinese foreign policy, marked notably by the resumption at the start of this month of a dialogue with the Soviet Union, observers noted. The Chinese Foreign Ministry and Libyan Embassy here neither denied nor confirmed Colonel Al-Qadhdhafi's visit, merely indicating they had no comment. But a Sino-Libyan reconciliation has been prepared in recent months by visits by two senior Libyan figures here.

The most recent was in August when Jadallah 'Aziz at-Talhi, secretary of the General People's Committee of the Libyan Political Bureau -- equivalent to prime minister -- met China's two highest leaders, Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang and the man who dominates Chinese politics, Deng Xiaoping.

The reconciliation follows a fairly marked deterioration in relations which culminated last year when a Chinese newspaper, violently cirticising Colonel Al-Qadhdhafi, called him a "fanatical Moslem" obsessed by the idea of unifying African and Arab countries at any price. The paper also took him to task for having said he was prepared to help the Egyptian Army take power after the assassination of president Anwar as-Sadat -- which China officially called a "great loss" for both Egypt and the world.

Diplomatic circles here believe the reconciliation between the two countries has now been sought above all by China, which has recently taken extremely clear positions on the Middle East question. At a general level, observers believe China has undertaken to normalise its relations with Moscow, as indicated by its recent recognition of the Angolan Government.

According to certain unconfirmed reports here, it is not excluded that Colonel Al-Qadhdhafi would visit Moscow after he has been here. According to a diplomatic source, China and Libya have maintained fairly close economic relations in recent years despite their disagreements.

CHINA DAILY COMMENTATOR ON NAMIBIA INDEPENDENCE

HK190302 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 19 Oct 82 p 4

["Opinion" column by CHINA DAILY commentator: "For a Free Namibia"]

[Text] South Africa is challenging all humankind by continuing its illegal occupation of Namibia, ignoring United Nations' resolutions, international law, the just demand of the African people and the opinion of people all over the world. Such a challenge is intolerable.

At the 37th session of the UN General Assembly, representatives of African countries have justifiably condemned South Africa and called for early independence for Namibia. The Chinese Government and people have unswervingly supported the heroic struggle waged by the Namibian people for national independence, self-determination and freedom. They have opposed South Africa's colonial and racist regime. China has also firmly condemned South African authorities for their stubborn policies of racial discrimination and oppression. China holds that South Africa must unconditionally carry out UN resolutions concerning Namibia and totally withdraw from that country.

After years of efforts, especially by the South West African People's Organization (SWAPO) and the United Nations, negotiations have begun to make headway towards resolving the Namibia problem. But South Africa, not reconciled to the defeat of its previous undermining tricks, now demands that its withdrawal from Namibia be linked with a simultaneous withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola.

Lame Excuse

This is but an excuse, a blatant attempt to perpetuate its illegal occupation of Namibia. The presence of Cuban troops in Angola is solely a matter between Angola and Cuba, which has nothing to do with South Africa and which will be solved between the two parties concerned. South Africa's demand to link the withdrawals not only reveals its attempt to hold on to Namibia but also is an encroachment upon Angolan sovereignty. For years South African aggressor troops have inflicted heavy casualties and losses of property on the Namibian people and the people in the frontline countries. This year South Africa has further stepped up its military aggression.

It now has more than 30,000 troops ready to penetrate Angola at any time. Some 5,000 soldiers already have carried out brutal activities in the country, moving in 200 kilometres or more under the pretext of pursuing SWAPO guerrillas. South Africa's outrages will arouse even stronger resistance by SWAPO, Angola and other frontline countries. The withdrawal of South African troops from Namibia has become an absolute necessity for peace and security in the region. A delay in resolving the Namibian problem will further churn the southern African hotbed, adversely affecting the development of the newly independent countries there.

Backing

Apartheid is a thing of the past in the world at large. But South Africa is sticking to it and even trying to enlarge its reactionary rule. This is in itself a grave challenge not only to Namibia, but also to the whole of the African continent as well as to justice-upholding people the world over. All the world knows, that it is only with the backing of a superpower that South Africa could behave so recklessly. The resemblance of the case in southern Africa to that in the Middle East where Israel acts barbarously against Arab countries shows that the superpower has an unshirkable responsibility for the worsening of the situation. SWAPO's armed struggle for Namibian independence has been going on for 16 years. It has won the recognition of the United Nations and the support of all peace-loving countries. Although long delayed, Namibia's independence is irresistible, just as South Africa's racism is doomed to failure and will sink in the tide of time.

LIAOWANG ON SUCCESSION OF OLD CADRES BY NEW

HK201048 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1254 GMT 19 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, 19 Oct (XINHUA) -- In its special column "Record of Events at Zhongnanhai," the No 10 issue of LIAOWANG to be published tomorrow carries an article by Zeng Jianhui [2582 1696 1798] entitled "The New Succeeds the Old To Carry Forward the Cause and Forge Ahead Into the Future." Excerpts from this article follow:

1. The 2d meeting of the 1st plenary session of the Central Committee elected by the 12th party congress was held on the afternoon of 13 September 1982. The meeting was held in the banquet hall on the first floor of the Great Hall of the People. The scene was solemn and austere, and there was no presidium platform towering over everyone else. The 28 members and alternate members of the Political Bureau who presided over the meeting were seated below the rostrum in front of a long table covered in white cloth. They sat facing the 347 members and alternate members of the Central Committee attending the meeting and the 280 Central Advisory Commission and Central Commission for Discipline Inspection members who attended as observers. There was a difference between this and previous plenary sessions in that there was a noticeable increase in the number of young Central Committee members and alternate members. Seeing those promising young people aged 38 or 39, or in their 40's or 50's, in the prime of life, sitting shoulder to shoulder with those white-haired old Red Army men and revolutionaries who had galloped across the battlefields during the years of revolutionary war and who won merit for the liberation of the entire Chinese nation, holding hands and cordially chatting together, we suddenly realize that the highest leadership stratum of the CPC has indeed become a vigorous combat command in which new and old cooperate and the new are replacing the old.

Before the conclusion of the first plenary session Hu Yaobang, the newly elected general secretary of the party Central Committee, put forward four views on behalf of the Central Secretariat on future work, especially the work of next year. He then emotionally said: "I also want to emphasize one point, that is, in the next 5 years, the destiny of the party and state is closely linked to this new central leadership collective and new combat command. I think every member of this leadership collective will realize the heavy burden of history he is shouldering." "So long as everyone looks ahead and always thinks of the people's needs and his own inadequacies, we will certainly be able to forge ahead continually and make new contributions." "This central leadership collective cannot only undertake major historic responsibilities but should also do its work even better than the previous central leadership collective." These confident, weighty words struck a profound response among the assembly. Thunderous applause at once filled the room.

Just after the first plenary session had ended, the leading central comrades walked into the Great Hall, which was filled with a joyful atmosphere. The whole body of deputies and alternate deputies to the 12th party congress, numbering over 1,700, arranged themselves in neat rows on a tiered steel frame, waiting to be photographed with the leading central comrades as a memento. This was yet another entirely new and moving scene. About 200 chairs were placed in front of the semicircular steel frame. Seated in these, apart from the members and alternate members of the Political Bureau, were deputies and alternate deputies aged over 70; while all those aged under 70, whatever their leadership post, were either standing on the steel frame or sitting on the carpet in front of the chairs.

2. At the end of July 1979, after the 3d plenary session of the 11th Central Committee, Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out at a meeting that as the ideological and political line had now been determined, a problem still unsolved was that of organizational line; and the biggest, most difficult and most urgent problem in solving that issue was that of selecting successors.

He exclaimed loudly: "The task now facing the old comrades is to consciously select and promote young people and select some young comrades in good health to succeed us." He said emphatically: "When I was presiding over central work in 1975, Wang Hongwen said, Let's see again in 10 years time. We must not underestimate the influence of Lin Biao and the 'gang of four,' and our thinking must not be too naive. We should take a somewhat longer view. We must seize the chance while we are still here to select good successors and personally watch them grow." On 29 September the same year, in his speech at the 30th anniversary celebration of the founding of the country, Comrade Ye Jianying stressed that we must "bring our organizational setup into line with the political task of accomplishing the four modernizations," and that "under the help and leadership of the old cadres and the supervision of the masses, more and more young or relatively young cadres should take up leadership duties in all our undertakings." It was also at that time that Comrade Chen Yun pointed out that "in selecting cadres we must pay attention to ability and political integrity. The most important thing in political integrity is upholding the socialist road and party leadership. Under this premise, the cadre rank should become younger and more knowledgeable and specialized, and we should also systematize the promotion and employment of cadres of this type." Comrade Deng Xiaoping fully agreed with the "four transformations" of the cadre rank outlined by Comrade Chen Yun. This guiding principle was clearly affirmed in the resolution adopted by the 6th plenary session of the 11th Central Committee in 1981 and in the new party constitution adopted by the 12th party congress.

The party Central Committee has specified that the succession of the old by the new should take a collective form. At the 5th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee held in February 1980, the proletarian revolutionaries of the older generation, such as Ye Jianying, Deng Xiaoping, Li Xiannian and Chen Yun, all members of the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee, taking a broad and long-term view, and after careful consideration, suggested setting up a Central Secretariat as an organ in charge of daily routine work on the first front under the leadership of the Political Bureau and its Standing Committee. They also suggested that members of the Secretariat and the State Council gradually should become younger. Thus, Hu Yaobang and Zhao Ziyang, who are comparatively young, were then appointed members of the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau and they respectively took charge of the work of the Secretariat and the State Council. Deng Xiaoping, Li Xiannian, Chen Yun and Wang Zhen also indicated that they would not continue to be vice premiers after the Third Plenary Session of the Fifth National People's Congress. The 5th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee accepted their suggestion and decided to set up the Central Secretariat. Hu Yaobang was elected general secretary. Other members of the Secretariat were also appointed. The Third Plenary Session of the Fifth National People's Congress held in September 1980 accepted the suggestion of the CPC Central Committee and appointed Zhao Ziyang premier of the State Council and appointed a few other comrades, who are comparatively younger, as vice premiers. This was a major step taken by the Central Committee to solve the problem of succession of the old by the new.

At the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee held in June 1981, Hua Guofeng, then chairman of the party Central Committee, tendered his resignation due to his "leftist" mistakes. When the meeting was trying to find a suitable person for this position, Deng Xiaoping recommended Hu Yaobang for the chairmanship and refused to take it himself despite his important role and historical position recognized by the whole party. The session at last accepted his suggestion. His revolutionary breadth of vision and his broadminded spirit set a brilliant example for party's leading organs at all levels in the cooperation between the old and the new and in the succession of the old by the new.

In the first half of this year, the organizational reform in the organs of the party Central Committee and in various departments of the State Council was another important step taken by the Central Committee in order to effect the succession of the old by the new in an orderly and planned way and to realize the four characteristics of the cadre ranks.

At the 12th CPC National Congress, the course from the election of delegates to the election of the new central leading organs was a further important step to realize the cooperation between the new and the old and the succession of the old by the new within the whole party. When discussing the election of delegates to the congress, many elderly cadres in localities, putting the interests of the party's cause first, sincerely asked organizations not to nominate them as delegate candidates and to give more places to young and middle-aged cadres who met the requirements. The candidate lists for the new Central Committee, the Central Advisory Commission and the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection were worked out in 3 months' time according to the requirements of gradually making the cadre ranks more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated and more professional in their work after broadly hearing opinions from all quarters.

The decision to set up the Central Advisory Commission at the 12th party congress was a historical creation of our party. This is an organizational form for solving the problem of the succession of the old by the new in the new historical period. The purpose is to make the Central Committee younger in average age. At the same time, this can continue to give play to the elderly comrades who have retreated from the frontline.

The 12th party congress took 3 days to seriously discuss the candidates of the three committees and then elected these committees through secret ballot. Of the 348 members of the new Central Committee, newcomers account for 60.5 percent and people under 60 account for 49.1 percent. Only 16 elderly comrades above 71 remain in the Central Committee. They are all respected proletarian revolutionaries who enjoy high prestige at home and abroad and they are still playing a role as the mainstay and the core in our party's leadership. Compared with the 11th Central Committee, the most remarkable characteristic of the new Central Committee is that a large number of young and middle-aged cadres, who have both ability and political integrity and have rich experiences and professional knowledge, were absorbed into the Central Committee. Their appointment to the leading position in the central leadership is an important sign that the party's cause is flourishing.

3. The 112 young and middle-aged members of the Central Committee under 55 were carefully selected from all fronts. They come from all parts of the country. Following the party Central Committee's unceasing urging to the whole party in recent years, they are at last entering the party's top leadership. What type of people are these up-and-coming members? It was decided that in the period of the first plenary session of the party Central Committee these newcomers be introduced to all members of the Political Bureau and the Central Secretariat.

On the afternoon on 13 September, central leaders and all delegates to the 12th party congress had a group photo taken to mark the occasion. After that, they came to the Xinjiang Hall in the Great Hall of the People. At 1630, the 39 newly elected young members and alternate members of the Central Committee excitedly entered the hall. At that moment, the central leaders all stood up to extend greetings to them. Hu Yaobang, Ye Jianying, Deng Xiaoping, Zhao Ziyang, Li Xiannian, Chen Yun, Peng Zhen, Deng Yinchao, Xu Xiangqian, Nie Rongzhen and other members of the Political Bureau and the Secretariat were all present on that day. This solemn and cordial welcoming ceremony made these young members and alternate members of the Central Committee both excited and nervous. They sat in a circle behind the central leaders.

The personnel of the Central Committee's Organization Department called their names one by one and briefed the central leaders on their backgrounds. The first person to be introduced was Li Shuzheng, 52, a female deputy head of the International Liaison Department of the Central Committee and a newly elected alternate member of the Central Committee. When her background was introduced, she stood up shyly at her seat. When the youngest full member of the Central Committee, Wang Zhaoguo, was introduced, Hu Yaobang interposed and said that he was an able person, a deputy director of the No 2 automobile factory, discovered by Comrade Deng Xiaoping.

Like the other comrades before him, Wang Zhaoguo also stood at his seat. Chen Yun asked him: "How old are you?" He answered: 41. Chen Yun turned and kindly gestured to Wang Zhaoguo, and then said: "Please come closer and let me see you better." Wang Zhaoguo left his seat and walked to the center of the hall with his face flushed. Thus, the central leaders looked up and down at this young man, who graduated from university in 1966, had united workers to resist the sabotage by the "rebels" during the "Cultural Revolution," and was proficient in his work, and broke into satisfied smiles. When the next person was introduced, Hu Yaobang said: "You should be bolder and stand at the center of the hall." Then, everyone whose name was called acted in this way.

The cordial feelings extended to the younger generation and the amiable and approachable style of the central leaders made people feel much more at ease. Before they returned to their seats, each one shook hands with all the central leaders one by one. Among these 39 comrades were Hao Jianxiu, 46, newly elected alternate member of the Secretariat; Cui Naifu, 53, minister of civil affairs; Li Peng, 53, first vice minister of water conservancy and power; Chen Xitong, 52, secretary of the Beijing Municipal CPC Committee; Li Ruihuan, 47, secretary of the Tianjin Municipal CPC Committee; Hu Ping, 52, secretary of the Fujian Provincial CPC Committee; Zheng Guangdi, 47, female vice minister of communications; Song Jian, 50, vice minister of space industry; He Guangyuan, 52, vice minister of the machine building industry; Zhang Shou, 52, vice director of the Shanghai Communications University; Yu Zhenwu, 51, army-level commander of the air force; and the youngest of all -- Hu Jingtao, 39, vice director of the Gansu provincial construction commission and a graduate from Qinghua University. Another of the youngest members is Li Huifen, 41, also a graduate of Qinghua University and now the deputy manager and general engineer of the Tianjin radio equipment joint company. All these members are actual workers who have modern knowledge and good command of their professions.

This was not an ordinary meeting or reception. Everyone was immersed in a warm atmosphere. The proletarian revolutionaries of the older generation, who have directed the Chinese revolution in forging ahead over many years, were beaming with satisfaction and shook hands with each of the young members who came before them. This handshaking symbolized the cooperation between the old and the new in our party and showed that the proletarian revolutionaries were passing the revolutionary torch over to the younger generation and that they were placing ardent hope in the young and middle-aged cadres of our party. It also indicated that the proletarian revolutionaries of the older generation in our party are determined to personally foster and cultivate communists of younger generations and let them gradually shoulder the great mission pioneered by innumerable revolutionary martyrs with their blood and lives over the past dozens of years. The young members are determined to carry forward the party's good traditions under the guidance of the revolutionaries of the older generation, remain modest and prudent, work hard and devote themselves to the realization of the grand programs drawn up at the 12th party congress.

[Text] Beijing, Oct. 20 (AFP) -- A moderate earthquake measuring 5.3 on the open ended Richter scale hit Tangshan -- the town which was completely destroyed by a quake in 1976 with the loss of 242,000 lives -- the Beijing evening newspaper reported today.

The epicentre of yesterday's quake was in the Lulong district 250 km (150 miles) from Beijing and 70 km (40 miles) from Tangshan, the paper said.

The paper gave no reports of any damage, simply commenting that a tremor of that level "would not cause major damage, nor lead to casualties or deaths."

PLA AIR FORCE PROMOTES CONGRESS DOCUMENTS STUDY

OW201233 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 18 Oct 82

[Text] To deepen study of documents of the 12th CPC National Congress among air force units, the PLA Air Force leading organs on 18 October called a meeting for grassroots units to exchange their experience in studying the documents.

In formulating the plan for the air force units' study of the congress documents, the air force party committee had urged party committees at and above the regimental level, after conducting a general study of the documents, to give special lectures with Comrade Deng Xiaoping's opening speech as the guiding thought and with special emphasis on the major points in Comrade Hu Yaobang's report.

In conducting the special lectures, the air force grassroot units have adhered to the following principles:

1. It is necessary to investigate the mental attitude among air force units beforehand so that the lectures will be effective.

2. It is necessary to use the congress documents as the basic teaching materials and to offer specific guidance on questions brought up in the course of study.

3. It is necessary to select some works of Marx, Lenin and Mao Zedong in order to promote theoretical understanding of the documents.

4. It is necessary to apply the study to practice and, after completing the special lectures, to lead the units to strive for creating a new situation in modernizing the air force.

FORMER 'RICH PEASANT' PERMITTED TO JOIN PLA

[Station correspondent's newsletter: "One Who Serves in the Army Has the Support of One's Whole Family"]

[Excerpts] Immediately after the 1981 conscription, (Zhou Kangrong) and his family of the (Sanzhou) Commune in Yuhuatai district, Nanjing Municipality, were jubilant as if they were celebrating a festival. (Zhou Kangrong) and his family were jubilant over his younger son, (Zhou Huachun), being allowed to join the army.

(Zhou Huachun's) grandmother, over 70, said to him with tears in her eyes: This is an honor which we could not buy even with money. After joining the army, you must do a good job.

(Zhou Kangrong) who was then seriously ill also said excitedly to his son: (Huachun), you must understand that it is the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee that vested us with the right to join the army and provided us with an opportunity to fulfill one of our obligations to the country. You are the first of our family to enlist in the army, and you must do a good job in the army in order to win honor for our party.

(Zhou Huaxiang), (Zhou Huachun's) elder brother, also joyfully said to him: I did not have a chance to serve in the army. Now that you have the opportunity to serve in the army, you should do a good job there without any misgivings. You just leave everything in the family to me.

It was natural that (Zhou Huachun's) family was jubilant over his being allowed to join the army. However, there was another reason for such jubilation. After nationwide liberation, (Zhou Kangrong's) family was designated as a rich peasant family according to the then party policy. Under the influence of leftist mistakes in those years, the designation of rich peasant family also affected (Zhou Huachun) and his elder brother who were born and grew up after nationwide liberation. In the 10 years of turmoil in particular, some people even treated the two brothers simply as rich peasants. They were not even free to say anything -- if they talked a little too much about something, they were criticized as fake activists; if they remained silent, they were then criticized as feeling discontented. At that time, they dared not even think about joining the army. Such political discrimination has left a deep trauma in the hearts of the two brothers.

After accurately appraising the class situation, the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee announced that the exploiters now no longer existed as a class in our country. Following this, the class status of (Zhou Kangrong's) family was officially changed from the status of rich peasant to that of commune member.

After enlisting in the army, (Zhou Huachun) was sent from Jiangsu Province to serve as a soldier with the reconnaissance company of a certain PLA unit stationed in Heilongjiang Province. After arriving in the unit, he did his best in training and study.

In the 6 months or so after he joined the army, (Zhou Huachun) regularly received letters from home saying that the whole family was well. However, some important happenings were concealed from him. A few months after his departure, his aged grandmother became seriously ill. One day in August 1981, his grandmother died. At that time his father's illness also became increasingly serious. A week after his grandmother's funeral, his elder brother wrote him a letter about her death but made no mention of their father's serious illness.

One month after that he received a letter from his elder brother about his father's death. In the letter his elder brother asked him not to worry about anything at home but to do a good job in the army without any misgivings.

How has (Zhou Huachun) acquitted himself in the army? In the year after he joined the army, he has been admitted the CYL, has been chosen as an outstanding CYL member, activist in learning from Lei Feng and advanced individual in building a socialist spiritual civilization and has been cited by his company for his meritorious service. Last year he was the only one of his company who was awarded an order of merit, third class.

Cadres and fighters of the reconnaissance company said: (Zhou Huachun's) contribution to army building includes the painstaking efforts of his whole family of three generations.

FAMILY PLANNING CHIEF STRESSES BIRTH CONTROL

[Text] Qian Xinzhong, minister in charge of the State Family Planning Commission, says in a recent article: It is absolutely correct that the 12th CPC National Congress regarded family planning as a fundamental national policy. He pointed out in his article that our country's population has now exceeded 1 billion and we are facing a new peak period of birth during the next 15 years. During this period, on the basis of our work in the first part of this year, if we can promote having one child, control the births of second children and strictly stop families from having a third child, we shall be able to keep our population within 1.2 billion by the end of this century. On the other hand, if each couple in the country raises an average of two children, our population will exceed 1.3 billion by the end of this century.

The excessive birth rate, the article continues, will bring about multiple pressures on social and economic construction and may even affect social security. While pursuing economic construction, we must strictly control the population increase by keeping tabs on the increase in material production and population at the same time. We must earnestly publicize eugenics and pay attention to quality birth control.

RENMIN RIBAO CRITICIZES DESTRUCTION OF FORESTS

[Commentator's article: "Immediately Stop the Destruction of Forests for Land Reclamation"]

[Text] Shanxi's Zhongyang County has dealt seriously with the case of the Haojialing production brigade destroying forests and grasslands in order to reclaim wasteland, an action which resulted in new soil erosion. Those responsible for this action were punished and those who had violated laws and discipline were sentenced to imprisonment. This is entirely correct and necessary.

It is an important task at present to adopt immediate measures to check the evil practices of felling trees and sabotaging water and soil conservation, which still occur in some places and merit our serious attention. Water and soil conservation are the key tasks in protecting natural vegetation and developing the economy in mountainous areas. We must attach prime importance to the conservation of water and soil in developing mountainous areas. If we allow the loss of water and erosion of soil to continue and the hills to become barren, construction in the mountainous areas will be hopeless. Man's destruction of water and soil conservation will inevitably be punished by nature. At present, the practices of wantonly destroying forests and reclaiming hillsides in some mountainous areas have not yet been stopped. The loss of water and erosion of soil are increasing, rather than being reduced. Although the CPC Central Committee and the State Council have made repeated injunctions in this respect, some cadres still do not care about the destruction of water and soil conservation. The cases which should have been dealt with have not been dealt with. Some cadres have even led the sabotage themselves. If these phenomena remain unchecked, they will result in endless harm.

There are many reasons for the destruction of forests for land reclamation in some places. There are problems of understanding, work method and system of leadership as well as some actual difficulties in the life of the masses living in the mountainous areas. However, there is one common and important reason; that is, the negative influence of the 10 years of turmoil has not yet been eliminated in some places. The violation of laws and discipline by a small number of people has not been forcefully resisted. In order to prevent the vegetation from being further destroyed, it is necessary to find out the real reason for the destruction. To solve the problem of unclear policies, it is necessary to clarify these policies so that they can be earnestly implemented. To solve the problem of weakness among cadres, organization measures must be adopted to carry out readjustment. To solve some practical difficulties in life, effective measures must be taken to help the people.

At present, prominence must be given to stopping all sabotage without delay. Then it is necessary to carry out education and deal with different cases in light of different conditions. Such phenomena as allowing destruction to continue unchecked while working at a leisurely pace are absolutely not allowed. A long time has passed since the "Forest Law of the PRC (for trial implementation)" and the "Regulations Regarding Water and Soil Conservation" were promulgated. We must act in accordance with state laws and discipline to safeguard their sanctity. Punishments should be given without hesitation to those who have violated the "forest law" and the "regulations" and who have randomly destroyed forests and grasslands for land reclamation despite others' dissuasion. Economic sanctions should be imposed on those who deserve them, and those who violate the criminal law should be punished according to law. At the same time, remedial methods must be adopted to order them to pay back the lost trees and grass within a definite time. Successful water and soil conservation and an improvement in the ecological environment are urgent desires of the broad masses of people; our work will certainly enjoy their support.

The handling of the Haojialing brigade case shows that it is possible to check the evil practices of destroying forests and grasslands for land reclamation. The key issue is that the CPC committees and governments at various levels must be resolute and must effectively strengthen their leadership in this matter. If they take immediate measures to stop these evil practices and to do a good job in water and soil conservation and in other fields, similar phenomena will gradually be reduced or avoided. Even if they occur, they will be dealt with in time.

JAN-SEP INDUSTRIAL OUTPUT VALUE INCREASES

RENMIN RIBAO ON UNDERSTANDING 'QUADRUPLING' GOAL

HK210238 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 15 Oct 82 p 5

[Article by Ying Guang [2503 0342]: "It Is Necessary To Correctly Understand 'Quadrupling'"]

[Text] The economic development objective of "quadrupling" was advanced by the 12th CPC National Congress. How should we comprehend this "quadrupling?"

The objective of attaining "quadrupling" in the two decades from 1980 to the end of this century refers to the national total annual value of industrial and agricultural production. In 1980, the total annual national output value of industry and agriculture was 710 billion yuan. In the year 2000, this figure is estimated to reach about 2,800 billion yuan.

The quadrupling of the national total annual output value of industry and agriculture is calculated at 1980 constant prices. It is unavoidable that prices will change in the next 20 years. But calculating the total output value at constant prices can exclude the influence of price fluctuation. Some people think that as long as prices rise, the total annual output value will increase even if production does not grow. This is a misunderstanding, because they do not know our method for calculating annual output value.

The quadrupling of the national gross annual output value of industry and agriculture means an increase by 300 percent over the 1980 figure, or four times as much as the 1980 figure. According to this general growth rate, the average annual growth rate should be 7.2 percent. The strategic plan drawn up by the 12th party congress is to realize this objective in two major steps: In the first decade, we will aim mainly at laying a solid foundation, accumulating strength and creating the necessary conditions. Thus, the growth rate in this period will be comparatively lower. In the second decade, we will usher in a new period of vigorous economic development and then the growth rate will become higher. Even in the first decade, growth rates will also differ between the first 5 years and the second 5 years. In the period of the Sixth 5-Year Plan from 1981 to 1985, our main task is to carry on the principle of readjustment, reorganization, consolidation and improvement and thus the growth rate will be comparatively lower. But in the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, the growth rate will become comparatively higher. In a period of every 5 years, annual growth rates will also differ from one to another due to different conditions. In general, growth rates differ between the first decade and the second decade, between every 5-year plan period and between every annual plan with the earlier being lower and the later being higher.

Thus we can achieve the objective of quadrupling annual output value in a planned and methodical way. In this sense, the average annual growth rate of 7.2 percent does not mean that each year's growth rate should be the same.

The economic development objective of quadrupling annual output value is worked out on the basis of keeping an overall balance in the national economy. In the development of the national economy as a whole, priorities are placed on agriculture, energy, communications, science and education. This will lead to a fairly swift rise in the production of consumer goods, stimulate the development of industry as a whole and of production and construction in other fields. Therefore, growth rates in different sectors of the national economy will not be the same either. Some sectors may quadruple their annual output value within the next two decades; others will not be able to and will not be required to achieve this; still others will more than quadruple their output value. The quadrupling of the national gross annual output value of industry and agriculture does not mean that all sectors, localities, trades, factories and products must quadruple their output value or can even do this. For example, industrial production will develop faster than other sectors in the next 20 years and attain more than quadruple its output value; while agricultural production will develop at a slower pace to quadruple its output value. In short, the quadrupling of total industrial and agricultural output value is by no means achieved by a simple summing-up of the quadrupling of output value by all localities, all units and all products.

It should also be pointed out that the objective advanced by the 12th party congress is to "quadruple the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production while steadily working for more and better economic results." That is to say, what we strive for is a real and sound quadrupling.

GOOD PROSPECTS FOR ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT REPORTED

[Article signed "G.D.": "Nation Confident of Achieving Economic Goal" -- "The Future Is in Sight"]

[Text] General Secretary Hu Yaobang has set before the whole nation a strategic objective of quadrupling the annual gross value of industrial and agricultural production by the year 2000. This has prompted lively discussions among people of all walks of life. Scientists and scholars are investigating the possibilities for achieving the goal. Workers and supervisors are expressing their determination to fulfill the goal. The prospect is very promising.

The setting of a definite long-range objective for the whole nation is a characteristic of a socialist economy. An objective is often necessary to inspire people. However, it must neither be too high to be attainable, nor too low to arouse people's enthusiasm. With a definite and realistic objective in mind, people will know where they are going.

Consensus

Some people are dissatisfied with a mere quadrupling of output believing that it will push our annual gross value of production only from the present 8th place to the 5th or 4th place in the world. Others say that our annual national income per capita by that time still will remain far short of $2,000, the present world average.

But the consensus approves the objective and believes tht it can be achieved. Quadrupling overall national production demands an average annual increase of 7.2 percent. In the last 32 years (1950-81), China's total production value increased by an average of 9.2 percent annually. From 1953 to 1981, the increase was 8.1 percent. Given the present political stability, there is no reason why an annual increase of 7.2 percent cannot be achieved.

Xu Dixin, the well-known Chinese economist, gives five conditions favourable to the realization of the objective.

-- Superiority of the socialist system will make planned and organized production possible.

-- We have 30 years of experience in economic construction and the national economy has a fairly good material foundation.

-- The overall objective is reasonable and is designed to be realized step by step.

-- The need for developing the national economy is rightly appreciated by the people, who will contribute their efforts.

-- The present lively situation of political stability and solidarity guarantees smooth progress.

Not Easy

We must, however, realize that quadrupling is not easy to achieve, especially as we do not want a swollen growth but a compact one that will steadily yield better economic results. Moreover, if total production is to be quadrupled, some branches of industry may have to grow eight-fold or even more.

Most important of all is that population must be controlled. It is now increasing at a rate of 10 million a year. If it is not controlled, all growth may be swallowed by the new-borns.

The strategic key points are certainly set out in the light of actual conditions, yet many difficulties are awaiting us.

The first is agriculture. New data of the World Bank shows that if agricultural growth in developing nations can exceed 3 percent, the development of their whole economy will exceed 5 percent. The importance of agriculture is obvious. But China's agriculture is suffering from low labour productivity, shortage of arable land and persistent natural calamities. At the present technical level, it is expected that by 2000 the total production of grain will be some 900 billion catties, an increase of only 1.5 times. But quadrupling the total output value will not require the same rate of growth for all branches of production.

The second is energy and transport. Japan and China are now consuming about the same amount of energy annually, but the production value China turns out with its energy is only one-quarter that of Japan. Economists estimate that economic growth in the 90s will be twice the energy growth and a shortage of energy could result. But if China could reach the Japanese level of production per unit of energy, then it could quadruple output by only maintaining the present level of energy production.

Key Point

Therefore, the third strategic key point is investment in intelligence and education. Science and technology will be closely involved in the economy in the next 20 years. Improvement of technology could double the value of production without increasing the consumption of energy and raw materials. Moreover, new industries, such as electronics, information, and nuclear energy, will also develop rapidly, increasing both the quantity and the worth of production. Consequently, we must look to science and technology to provide new and different areas of economic growth.

The nation has faith that the various targets will be reached.

BANK OF CHINA OFFICIAL ON RAISING FOREIGN FUNDS

OW201947 Beijing XINHUA in English 1514 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, October 20 (XINHUA) -- European and Arab bankers and entrepreneurs attending a Beijing enterprise management symposium were assured today that China will seek more foreign funds while trying to modernize mainly by utilizing its own financial resources.

Chang Yanqing, vice-chairman of the board of directors of the Bank of China, told the visitors that in the next couple of years, China will need anywhere from $10,000 million to $20,000 million U.S. dollars for the exploration of its offshore petroleum resources. "The amount of money needed for the development of coal industry will be no less," he said.

Development of energy production is a strategic priority in achieving the goal set by the 12th National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party of quadrupling the nation's industrial and agricultural output value by the end of this century. "And we have to take into account the renovation of key enterprises, which also requires large sums of money," he said.

The bankers and entrepreneurs are attending the second China-Europe business leaders symposium in Beijing. The Bank of China, the country's sole bank dealing in foreign exchange, is responsible for raising foreign loans and other funds for China's economic construction.

"China will certainly rely mainly on its own financial resources to achieve its projected modernization objective," he said. Meanwhile, it will work hard to raise funds abroad. "No country is able to achieve economic progress without international economic and financial cooperation," he said.

In raising overseas funds, China is both active and cautious, he said. "We'll make sure that we will be in a position to repay the capital plus interest due, taking into account the amount of foreign exchange we can raise through exports."

China's repayment ability will surely increase along with its economic expansion, he said. In view of this, China will absorb increasingly more foreign funds.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEYS FOR COAL RESERVES PLANNED

OW170642 Beijing XINHUA in English 1213 GMT 17 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, October 14 (XINHUA) -- China will launch national geological surveys for coal reserves, which are expected to cover all parts of the country by 1990 except part of Xinjiang, Tibet and Inner Mongolia, the Ministry of Geology and Minerals announced.

The work aims at providing scientific basis for drawing up plans for developing China's coal resources for the last ten years of the 20th century, a period for China's vigorous economic development envisaged by Hu Yaobang at the 12th National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party held last month. The focus will be on Shandong, Henan, Shanxi, Heilongjiang, Yunnan, Guizhou and Ningxia which, according to known data, possess favorable conditions for the formation of coal.

Meanwhile, the ministry said, geological prospecting will be intensified in 19 large and medium-sized mining areas to discover more coal for the immediate needs.

Coal accounts for 70 percent of China's energy consumption and its reserves verified in the past 33 years are estimated 640,000 million tons.

PATENT LAW BEING DRAFTED; PATENT BUREAU SET UP

OW201928 Beijing XINHUA in English 1522 GMT 20 Oct 82

[Text] Beijing, October 20 (XINHUA) -- China is drafting a patent law according to a government decision, Ren Jianxin, vice-chairman of the China Council for the Promotion of International Trade (CCPIT), told a group of visiting European business leaders here today. He told the visitors who are here attending the second China-Europe business leaders symposium that China has set up a patent bureau. Within CCPIT, the vice-chairman said, a patent agency has also been established. China is now preparing patent people, including patent lawyers, he added. Before the patent law is finalized and publicized, the CCPIT vice-chairman said, China will protect patents in line with the provisions of relevant contracts or agreements that are approved by the Chinese Government and are equally authentic. China will develop laws concerning its foreign economic and trade affairs according to its own actual situations and international practices on the principle of equality and mutual benefit, he said.

SUPPLY DEPARTMENTS SAVE CIRCULATING FUNDS

[Excerpts] Beijing, 15 Oct (XINHUA) -- XINHUA reporter Ding Genxi reports: According to the latest statistics of the State Administration of Supplies, as of 30 June this year the total amount of circulating funds used by China's supplies departments decreased to 14 billion yuan from 17.42 billion yuan at the end of 1979, down almost 20 percent, while the turnover time shortened to 89 days from 1979's 132 days, a saving of almost one-third. All this was achieved while goods and materials sales were increasing.

Such an achievement with regard to circulating funds is believed to be something rare among industrial, communications, finance and trade departments in recent years. Departments concerned believe that the success of the supplies departments in saving large amounts of circulating funds is of great significance at a time when the country's current financial revenues are decreasing and funds are short for urgently needed major construction projects. They estimate that the amount of funds saved could build six 500,000-kw large hydropower stations, four large coal mines capable of producing 5 million dun of coal annually or a railway line between 1,500 km to 2,000 km in length.

Circulating funds are funds appropriated by the state or loaned by the bank to enterprises for use in production or goods and materials flow. As state funds are limited, the more funds used by one department, the less the funds can be used for other purposes in economic construction. Therefore, the amount of circulating funds used by various departments and the time of its turnover have vital bearings on our country's overall economic performance.

XINHUA editor's note: China's supplies departments have made an extraordinary achievement in speeding up the turnover of circulating funds and reducing the amount used. This shows that there is a great potential for saving circulating funds. Responsible departments point out: The poor economic performance resulting from low turnover rates of circulating funds and the use of unnecessary larger amounts of circulating funds is fairly widespread among industrial and commercial enterprises. This has caused alarming waste. If all departments concerned face this situation squarely and take active steps to correct it, large amounts of funds will be saved for the state. It is estimated that if the country's total amount of circulating funds is reduced by 2 or 3 percent, between 7 to 10 billion yuan will be saved for the state in 1 year.

[XINHUA reporter's commentary: "Strive To Raise the Economic Benefits of Livestock Production"]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 15 Oct (XINHUA) -- Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, China has made rather rapid progress in developing animal husbandry, resulting in a quick rise in the income earned by peasants and herdsmen. At the same time, the supply of meat in markets has improved. On the whole, however, out of the total livestock, the marketable proportion is still too low, and in many respects the economic benefits of our animal husbandry are not high. It is essential to seriously solve this problem and strive for greater economic benefits in developing animal husbandry. This is of vital significance for achieving the great objective set by the 12th CPC National Congress.

Approximately 300 million hogs, 200 million sheep and goats and nearly 100 million head of cattle are raised each year on the vast land of our country. Then, why is there still a shortage of meat on the market except for pork, which is now in ample supply in most cities? The chief reason is that for a long time it has not been understood that animal husbandry is one of the undertakings in making commercial products. Since no attention has been paid to raising the economic benefits of animal husbandry and the marketable proportion out of the total livestock, more efforts have been put into this undertaking, but less products have been obtained.

Experience in countries with well developed animal husbandry and in some regions of our country which are advanced in this undertaking indicates the necessity of paying attention to the marketable porportion of the total livestock and to raising economic benefits in all possible ways in developing livestock production. The present management system and operations methods in our country must be totally reformed to achieve a greater marketable proportion of the total livestock and to provide more animal husbandry products for society.

Experience, both positive and negative, shows that our guiding ideology for developing animal husbandry should be changed. We should not just aim at a large quantity of livestock or at big and fat animals. More important is the economic benefits of our work. In Xinjiang's Altay Prefecture, the number of livestock is less than 10 percent of the total in the whole autonomous region, but this prefecture provides more than 40 percent of the beef and mutton that Xinjiang supplies to other parts of the country. Its experience, in the main, is to hasten the growth of animals in a short time so as to quickly turn out matured animals for the slaughterhouse and replace them with young ones.

While hastening the growth of animals, we should raise the number of breeding pens in an animal herd and, at the same time, build and take good care of pasturelands just as we do in farmland management. We should not only do our best to improve natural pasturelands but should also make all-out efforts to build manmade ones so as to lay a sound foundation for raising more animals for the market.

Another important way to gain greater economic benefits from animal husbandry is to develop and popularize good breeds of animals and poultry. At present, however, most rural households in our country still raise ordinary rather than improved breeds of animals and poultry, and the general practice is still to raise whatever is available. Because of this, animal husbandry departments at all levels in various localities should go all out to develop good breeds of animals and poultry through selection and improvement. Artificial insemination should be used, and a system for breeding and popularizing good strains should be set up so that all animals and poultry raised in our country will be of the improved breed.
